Fish and Game Club Information

Applicants for Fish Apprehensive

Numerous inquiries are being received at the Division's office from persons who want to know when they will receive the fish applied for. Some are apprehensive about receiving the same. Unfortunately but few persons are familiar with the operation of the State's fish hatcheries, or know the amount of skill it takes to produce fingerling fish of eight species sufficient to supply over 1,600 applicants with liberal quantities of fish of the kind asked for. It taks time to deliver fish to so many persons. The interest in stocking waters has grown wonderfully. In 1919, when the present Department was created, only 274 persons applied for fish. The number this year is about six times as many. Fortunately, the facilities for taking care of the increased demand has been annually provided for by increasing the number of hatcheries and the enlargement of old ones. The Division this year is operating 73 ponds compared to only 29 in the year 1919. All applicants properly registered on April 1st will receive the fish they applied for, but must wait until they can be delivered.

Tendency is to Overstock Fish Ponds

It has been noted that some pond owners year after year apply for fish for the same pond. This is a great mistake. Black bass and all other game species of fish reproduce themselves when two years old. A pond once stocked should be left alone. The reproduction from the original plant will be more than most ponds can ever maintain. To introduce more fish therefore means only a feed for the game fish already there, for food means everything, and is none too plentiful in most fish ponds, especially in those stocked with black bass. After a number of years it may be well to introduce some new blood to prevent inbreeding. One of the main benefits derived from stocking State waters is the crossing of the breed.. Fish in lakes are liable to become dwarfed by continual inbreeding. This has been noted by the small size of yellow perch caught in some of our northern lakes, lakes that have not been stocked for many years.

Gar and Dogfish Removal from the Lakes

From May 4th to June 15th, the four two-men crews employed to take undesirable fish from Indiana lakes succeeded in removing 3,100 gar and 846 dogfish from four lakes. James Connell and James Marks, stationed at Lake Manitou, removed 1,707 of these undesirable fish; at Lake Wawasee, Joseph Baker and Charles Winchell removed 1,220; at Lake Barbee, George Wyatt and Roy Pinkerton removed 635, also 255 large carp, and at Lake George, Henry Hathaway and Lewis Harding removed 384 gar and dogfish. On June 17th three of the crews moved to other lakes, and are now working at Lake Bruce, Lake James and at Tippecanoe Lake. Baker and Winchell will continue, to operate at Wawasee for some time to come, due to its being the largest lake in the State.

Uncertainty Relative to Laws

Since the season opened to fishing for game fish the Division has received a lot of inquiries regarding the laws. The bulk of them relate to the need of a license to fish. For the information of those who are uncertain as to this, they are advised that a person needs no license to fish in the county in which he resides if he has lived in the State for six months continuously. Children under 18 years of age need no license to fish anywhere in the State, whether living in Indiana or elsewhere. Women need license the same as men. A misunderstanding also exists relative to trot and set lines. It is unlawful to use them in a lake. The last legislature made no change in the law regulating their use.

Breeders' Certificates

Since June 1, 1929, seven hundred and twenty-six certificates of Inspection (breeders, permits) have been issued by the Division of Fish and Game to persons holding game birds and fur-bearing animalas in captivity for breeding purposes in close season. There appears to be an ever increasing interest in this subject. Considerable success seems to be achieved by those rearing silver foxes, wild ducks and pheasants. By far the largest number of persons are holding raccoons, but the bulk of them keep the animals mainly for training dogs or for pets.

Game Warden Kills a Black Snake With 8 Quail Eggs in Its Stomach

Bert Murray, one of the Department's game wardens, reports the killing of a black snake which had 8 quail eggs in its stomach. This is proof that quail have worse enemies than the hunter. Owls, hawks, crows, snakes, cats, furanimals and other so-called vermin recognize no close season, which hunters must observe. Vermin works on the job 365 days in the year, while the hunter has but 34 days in the year to kill quail. Wardens report an exceptionally large hatch of quail in this State. They say they see them everywhere. They also report seeing many rabbits and squirrels. This augurs well for hunting this coming fall.

Arrests and Convictions

In May 166 persons were arrested and 143 convicted for violating fish and game laws. 22 cases remained to be tried, only 1 dismissed. The fines and costs amounted to $3,394.50. The wardens in May did unusually good work in confiscating illegal nets and seines. 44 persons were arrested for using or having in possession unlawful nets or seines; 37 for taking game fish in close season; 31 for fishing or hunting without license; 14 for possession of spears; 9 for killing squirrels out of season; 7 for taking fish with grab hooks; 6 for having fish traps, and 4 for taking undersize mussels.

PATRIOT'S HYMN

My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the Pilgrim's pride,
From every mountain side let freedom ring.

My native country, thee, land of the noble, free,
Thy name I love;
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills,
My heart with rapture thrills, like that above.

Let music swell the breeze, and ring from all the trees
Sweet freedom's song;
Let mortal tongues awake,
Let all that breathe partake,
Let rocks their silence break, the sound prolong.

Our father's God, to Thee, author of liberty,
To Thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light,
Protect us by Thy might, great God, our King.

"DECLARATION"

FROM THE "IMMORTAL DOCUMENT"

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bonds which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

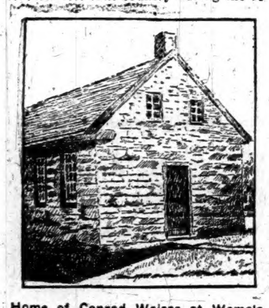
We, therefore, representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, Free and Independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that, as Free and Independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which Independent States may of right do. And, for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

ACTIVE IN AID OF CAUSE OF LIBERTY

Conrad Weiser, Pennsylvania Patriot and Long Friend of Washington.

At his home in the Tulpehocken valley, fertile in soil and rich in German tradition, a park of 25 acres is dedicated as a memorial to Conrad Weiser, of whom Washington said: "This man served the Colonies well. Posterity will not suffer him to be forgotten."

Born in Germany in 1696, Colonel Weiser left that country during the religious persecution in the Rhine valley in 1710. With several thousand Palatinate Germans, he settled first in the Schoharie section of New York. Here at the age of fourteen he lived for a time with the Indians and learned their language, which enabled him in later years to render his country inestimable service.



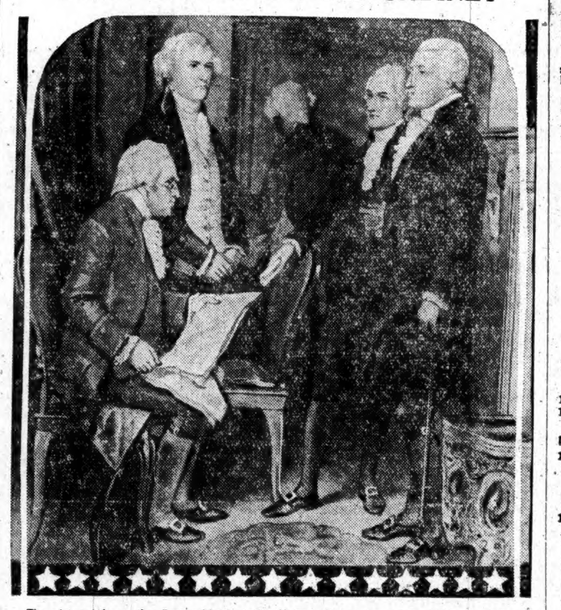
Home of Conrad Weiser at Womelsdorf, Pa.

During the French and Indian wars Colonel Weiser rendered a service of national scope to the Colonies. Through his diplomacy he prevented the powerful Iroquois Indians from fighting against the Colonists.—Kansas City Star.

Betsy Ross Challenged

Dr. George E. Hastings of the University of Arkansas in his book, "The Life and Works of Francis Hopkinson," credits Hopkinson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, with having designed the Stars and Stripes. While examining the papers of the Continental congress, in the Library of Congress at Washington, Doctor Hastings found Mr. Hopkinson's bill for designing the flag, which was adopted by the Continental congress in 1777. The claim was never paid. A board which passed on the account was of the opinion that "The public is entitled to those little assistances given by gentlemen who enjoy a very considerable salary under congress, without fee or further reward."

FIRST UNITED STATES CABINET



The picture shows the first cabinet of the United States, formed in 1789, consisting of Henry Knox, secretary of war; Alexander Hamilton, secretary of the treasury; Thomas Jefferson, secretary of state, and Edmund Randolph, attorney general.

Phenomenon of Great Secession

As the years pass, and as Independence day recurs for celebration, it becomes more difficult to recreate in the mind the conditions in which the Declaration of Independence was drafted and signed, the circumstances which compelled that daring act of insubordination on the part of the British colonists in America and which permitted them to win their battle against heavy odds. For American independence has become so fixed a fact, has been established for so many years and has so completely justified itself that it seems to have been a natural evolution, quite in accord with the laws of human institutions.

As a matter of fact, there was nothing inevitable about the separation of the colonies. Had there been a wiser monarch at London, or had he been guided by wiser counselors, the breach between the mother country and the colonies would not have occurred, at least not at that time. Oppressive measures had been instituted against the people of the colonies. They were regarded as subjects serving only to enrich the kingdom.

The very difficulties of understanding, due to the great distance that separated the New world from the Old and the lack of intercourse, that caused the crown to fail to sense the true spirit of the colonies, made for the separation. The people on this side of the Atlantic knew England far better than the people and particularly the rulers of England knew the colonies. Many of the wealthier of the colonists had visited the homeland. Few of the lawmakers of Great Britain had visited America.

Champions of the American cause there were, to be sure, in England. But they were a small minority, and their warnings against harsh treatment of the distant subjects by the crown were of no avail. They were unheeded, and so measure after measure was employed to the end of forcing subjection to the royal will, and compelling the payment of tribute to the royal treasury.

Such a situation could not now develop, for there is no lack of understanding between Great Britain and her colonies and dominions beyond seas. Indeed, the lesson taught by the separation of the colonies and their establishment as an independent sovereign state was well learned by England. The mistake that brought about the secession of the colonies that formed themselves into the United States of America was not repeated.

So the very difficulties that prevented understanding and which brought about the impositions which became too great to be longer borne were the making of the new republic. The isolation, the distance from the homeland, the privations that had become part of the community life in America, all were factors for the success of the great experiment in self-government.

Men were bred to mighty stature by those hardships and trials. Yet the strange part of the matter is that the spirit of independence, which flamed into an undying torch at Philadelphia on the Fourth of July, 1776, was spread through so widely scattered a people, over such vast distances, in such widely differing circumstances. Today words flash over the miles, the hundreds, the thousands of miles, in the twinkling of an eye. Ideas are borne to millions of minds in seconds. Millions of people are constantly moving about on business and on pleasure bent. Newspapers are printed in countless quantities and spread swiftly before vast multitudes. Marvelous means of instant communication have been developed. But one hundred and fifty years ago all was different. And it is because of that difference that the phenomenon of the great secession which brought a world power into being is so difficult for most Americans of today fully to understand and appreciate.

Nevertheless, the marvel came about. The new nation was born. It has survived many trials and is now without question the strongest of the nations of the earth. It pauses at this time from its great activity to pay tribute to those men who, a century and a half ago, dared to set up a democracy in defiance of a powerful monarchy, and thus created for the first time in the history of mankind a government for the benefit of all the people and not for the benefit of a few.

Declaration Made Public

The Declaration of Independence was published three days before the signers had actually affixed their signatures to it. When it came out in the Pennsylvania Evening Post on Saturday, July 6, 1776, the only name under it was that of John Hancock. The document had been issued by the Continental congress on July 4, 1776. The reason publication did not occur till the sixth was that the Pennsylvania Evening Post was a triweekly, published on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and the draft of the Declaration was not finished till too late on Thursday, July 4, to make the edition of that date.

The Philippines

American Plow With Philippine Motive Power.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE status of the Philippine islands crops up afresh with the writing of a new tariff bill. This island group, 7,000 miles from the Pacific coast of North America, furnishes at once the greatest stake and the most difficult administrative problem of the United States in the Pacific.

This is no tiny island territory like some of those that fly the Stars and Stripes in mid-Pacific, but a country of nearly 115,000 square miles—a greater area than that of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland combined; or among the islands, greater than the three large southern islands of Japan upon which the life of that nation centered while it grew to imperial stature.

This far-away territory of the United States is inhabited by nearly 12,000,000 people of many races and different religions, less than a quarter the present population of the three most important Japanese islands. But the tropical Philippines with their ample rainfall and luxuriant vegetation are capable, in spite of their mountainous character, of supporting a much larger population than at present.

Since pacifying the islands, the United States has given the Filipinos steadily increasing political control of their affairs. The appointive commission which ruled over the islands at first under the American regime has now given place to an elective house and senate, and five of the seven members of the cabinet are Filipinos. The governor general and vice governor are still appointed by the President of the United States.

Education has been the center of the American policy in the islands. A very small percentage of the natives were literate in 1898. Numerous languages and dialects were in use and only a minority understood Spanish. It was determined to make English the common language and to open the necessary public schools to reach the great mass of children. By 1917 more than 4,000 primary schools were in operation in charge of 13,377 Filipino and 417 American teachers. About half the estimated total of the children of the islands—600,000—were enrolled in that year. By 1920 the enrollment had reached 791,626, and it has steadily increased since until now approximately one and a quarter million pupils are enrolled.

Trade Grows Rapidly.

The trade of the Philippines has increased tremendously since 1899. In that year the combined total of exports and imports was $32,000,000; by 1917 the total was $161,000,000; and in 1928 it had reached $275,000,000. Nearly every man in the world who uses a rope pays tribute to the Philippines, for "Manila hemp" is one of the best rope materials known. It is harvested from a species of banana tree. Nearly $30,000,000 worth of it was shipped in 1927. Coconut products—"meat" and oil—come second. Much of America's butter substitute is made from Philippine coconut oil. Shipments in 1927 amounted to more than $19,000,000. As a producer of sugar, the Philippines cannot yet be compared with the famous "sugar isles," Cuba and Java, but its production—more than $50,000,000 worth in 1927—entitles the group to be classed with Hawaii, Porto Rico and Formosa among the world's sweeteners.

Probably the most significant detail in an inventory of the state of the Philippines is the decrease in the number of white residents. The census of 1903 showed 14,000 white people, most of them American, while the last authoritative census, 1918, showed 12,900. Meantime the population of the whole archipelago had increased by 3,000,000.

Straws in the wind are probably more important than the tablets of 25 years of progress in the Philippines. These are some of the straws. Plans are under way for planting 30,000,000 Para rubber seedlings during the current year. A new profitable export has been discovered in buntal or bangkok straw hats which has leaped in four years from the $200,000 peg to $2,000,000.

Fruits and Fiber.

The world is waking up to an appetite for delicious tropical fruit and the Philippines are waking up to the fact that the islands are eminently fitted to grow such fruit. The Filipinos look with envious eyes on the profits of Hawaiian pineapple and now claim they can raise even better pineapples. Mango, lanzon, chico and pomelo are strange names to the American housewife, but they may not long remain so if the Philippines are successful in canning and marketing their fruit products.

But if the custom of pigeonholing a nation or a district by its products, such as Illinois, the Corn Belt state; Sao Paulo, the Coffee country; the South, the Land of Cotton, is accepted, then the Philippines should be known as the Land of Fiber. From a banana plant Filipinos obtain probably the strongest known plant fiber, Manila hemp, from the fibrous stalk of the cane they produce sugar, the long hairs on the husks of the billion and a half coconuts are now put to many uses, the fiber of the maguey, a member of the amaryllis family and close relative of the century plant is an important export. Buntal hats are made from the buri palm, and then there is the wood and rattan from the forest. Finally their embroidery industry depends on the imported fibers of silk, cotton and flax.

The Philippines might be said to be a jagged land both vertically and horizontally. They are very mountainous and their coasts are much indented. Though only about one twenty-fifth the area of the United States exclusive of Alaska, the Philippines have a coast line twice as great.

Commercially, Manila, on a commodious bay and with a good harbor, has an excellent strategic position. It is a sort of oriental center, less than a thousand miles from important Chinese ports and less than 1,500 miles from southern Japan, southern Korea, Singapore and the ports of the Dutch East Indies. It is estimated that within a radius of 3,500 miles of Manila live three-quarters of a billion inhabitants—more than a third of the total population of the earth.

We Lose One Island.

Recently Uncle Sam lost one of his tiniest Philippine islands—Palmas. That is, for years he considered it his, but found later that the Netherlands also claimed it as an outlying fragment of the Dutch East Indies. The dispute was duly arbitrated, and the arbitrator, a Swiss, decided in favor of The Netherlands.

Few of the many Philippine islets are so isolated as Palmas. It lies 48 miles off the nearest point of Mindanao, Cape San Augustin, and was the farthest southeastern bit of land claimed to be a part of the Philippines. So neglected had the islet been that many maps do not show it, and most of the gazetteers pass its name by.

Palmas (it is sometimes called Miangas) is only a little over half the size of Central park in New York city, being one and one-third miles long by two-thirds of a mile wide; a mere speck in the sea when its distance from large land bodies is considered. It lies about 20 miles west of the 127th meridian (east longitude) which forms the eastern boundary of the region ceded by Spain to the United States, and about 40 miles north of the parallel 4 degrees 45 minutes (north latitude) which forms the southern boundary. It was therefore well within the area marked out by the treaty for United States ownership.

There is no record of a visit by any official of the United States or the Philippines to Palmas until 1906 when Leonard Wood, then governor of the adjacent island of Mindanao, while on an inspection trip through the waters of his province, anchored off the island. To his surprise the little boat that put off from the island village carried a Dutch flag. It was explained to him that the native headman had on appointment from the Dutch and that for 15 years Dutch ships had called once a year to bring supplies and take away copra. Four hundred and fifty-eight inhabitants were then on the islet.

A report was duly made on this apparent alien occupation of American territory; the State department became interested. For 17 years the matter was under consideration by the diplomats of The Netherlands, Spain and the United States, before the status of Palmas was settled.

Senate Seniority

The terms junior and senior senator refer to their continuous service in the United States senate, and not to ages or terms. The senior senator from a state is the senator who has had more continuous service in the senate than the other, who is called the junior senator.

Desert Place of Punctures

Kalahari desert in Bachuanaland, Africa, is no place for autoists who dislike punctures. So declares a report of an exploring party that has just returned from there. Punctures averaged 20 a day, says the report, and this was due chiefly to stumps of dead trees, which often lie just beneath the sand with points like sharpened pencils. Indications are that plentiful supplies of good water exist, the report adds, and if these could be located by deep boring the desert could be transformed into a fine ranching country.

POULTRY

TURKEYS RAISED IN CONFINEMENT

Better Results Secured Than Where Poults Are Free.

In times past many people felt that turkeys could not be raised in confinement but that they should have a large area over which to range. This contention has changed now, however, and in several localities turkeys have been raised in confinement with a great deal of success.

The Minnesota and Nebraska experiment stations have been among the leaders in investigational work in turkey production, in recent years, with some such work being done at other experiment stations in various parts of the country. At both of the stations mentioned it was found that better results could be secured if the poults were raised in confinement than if they were allowed to range over a large area, the method once followed in turkey production. In view of these findings, those who wish to go into turkey production, either on a small or large scale, are no doubt interested in the practices to be adhered to in this method of turkey raising.

The United States Department of Agriculture has found that turkey production has declined consistently since 1890, in the face of an increase in the production of all other lines of poultry and live stock. This decrease in production cannot be attributed to a decrease in demand, for the demand has always exceeded the production, or at least, there has never been a surplus of turkeys on the market with which to contend.

This decline in turkey production can be explained almost altogether by the fact that farmers have always felt that turkeys should have unlimited range. Because of following this method of production the turkeys came in contact with the chicken yards, to the detriment of the turkey business. The disease problem among turkeys which come in contact with chickens is great enough that it has tended to cut down on production among farmers and farmers' wives who have, in the past, raised turkeys and chickens together on the same range.

In the Nebraska investigations it was found that the old method of raising the turkeys on the open range with natural hatching and brooding by turkey hens was not successful. On the other hand, artificial brooding and hatching, by means of which feed and environment could be kept under the control of the producer, was found to yield very good results.

Electric Brooders Are Clean and Convenient

The New York experiment station found electric brooders very satisfactory except in extremely cold weather, when this type of heat did not warm up the space in the house away from the brooder. Like electric incubators, brooders heated by electricity are clean, easy to regulate and very convenient.

Individual farm light plants extend the advantages of this electrical equipment to farms which are not located on an electric "high line." Because many farm plants are equipped with both generator and battery power, the supply of current for the incubator or brooder is constant and reliable.

Aylesbury Duck Meets Favor as Market Fowl

The Aylesbury duck comes from the Vale of Aylesbury, from which fact it derives its name. It is the market duck of England. It has a long body, deep keel, and legs placed a little behind the center of the body.

The Pekin is Chinese, and is the most popular market duck in America. Its legs are set far back, giving an upright carriage.

While the Indian Runner is not a popular market duck on account of its small size, its flesh is tender and palatable, and its foraging habits give it a game quality that will make it in demand with epicures.

Watch Young Birds

Watch young and delicate birds very closely as they are most susceptible to the deadly roup germs. The same is true of fowls suffering from common cold or catarrh. The throat and nasal passages, being already sore and inflamed, are easily infected. Sick birds should always be isolated. They can be much more effectively treated when away from the flock and they cannot contaminate the healthier ones if the disease should prove to be contagious.

Don't Hurry Pullets

It is best not to hurry the pullets into heavy production. Allow them to come into production normally without feeding highly stimulating feeds. Fewer "blow outs" will occur when production is not forced on the start. Feed two parts of grain to one part of mash. The pullets will continue to gain in weight and still receive enough protein to encourage the egg organs to function without interfering with growth. Any change in feed is to be discouraged

Hasten Tomatoes by Fertilizing

Plants Need Long Season and Right Aids to Hurry Their Growth.

"Fertilize tomatoes to hasten their maturity," advises F. O. Underwood, of the vegetable gardening department of the state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. "The tomato," he points out, "requires a long season to mature a full crop, so that anything a grower can do to ripen them is apt to mean a bigger total yield."

Professor Underwood says that many points have to be considered in fertilizing the crop, such as type of farming and soil, previous crop grown and fertilizer used, money returns, and the cost of the fertilizing materials.

Plant Food Needed.

Tomatoes need some of all the plant foods for their best development. Nitrogen is needed early in the season to help develop a good vine to carry the fruit; though too much nitrogen may produce too rank a leaf growth at the expense of fruit. Some potash is also needed, but phosphorus is particularly needed to get large yields and ripen the fruit before frosts in the fall.

"If a grower," says Professor Underwood, "is applying manure liberally, say at the rate of twelve or twenty tons an acre, he is probably supplying enough nitrogen and potash, but additional phosphorus will probably pay. Phosphorus increases the fruit and seed parts of plants, and acid phosphate is the best source. Applied at the rate of from five hundred to a thousand pounds to the acre, it should give good yields.

"On sandy soils, or on other soils where little or no manure is used, complete fertilizers usually pay. The 4-12-4 or 5-10-5 are both good; the former on the heavier types, while the 5-10-5 makes a good mixture for soils less well stocked with nitrogen and potash. Though the 2-8-10 is often used, a 4-12-4 seems better for the crop. The 2 per cent of ammonia in the former mixture is probably derived from some organic chemical which will be slowly available to the tomatoes. Tomatoes need nitrogen early in the season, and not when the fruit is forming.

Fertilizer Pays.

"Exact amounts will depend upon individual soils and cash returns, but the tomato crop will usually pay for additional fertilizer up to 1,600 pounds to the acre, although good crops are grown with less.

In addition to proper fertilizers, however, the plants must be well-grown, and must be set at the proper time. Soil and weather conditions also play their part."

Supply Farrowing Pens With Needful Fenders

Every farrowing pen should be supplied with fenders to protect the little pigs during and after farrowing. These consist of 2 by 8 inch planks fastened as shelves about eight inches from the floor, along both sides of the corner in which the sow makes her bed. This largely prevents the sow from squeezing the pigs against the wall or lying on them while they are small. If the farrowing pen has a concrete floor, a board overlay in the nest corner makes the sow's bed warmer, drier and cleaner.

Recommend Apple Spray When Pink Buds Appear

Summer spray for apples, usually known as the cluster bud or pink spray, is most effective when applied as soon as the pink buds appear in the blossom clusters, says L. C. Williams, extension horticulturist, Kansas State Agricultural college. The cluster bud spray consists of one and one-half gallons of liquid lime-sulphur and one and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead to each fifty gallons of spray. Dry lime-sulphur may be used instead of liquid material.

Per Capita Potato Yield Right Guide

Price Trend Upward When Production Is Low.

Per capita production of potatoes in the country, as a whole, is as good a guide as any, when the grower is trying to decide whether he should store his crop in hope of higher prices that prevail at harvesting time, or sell them for the market price when they are dug, according to C. R. Arnold of the rural economics department of the Ohio State university at Columbus.

Arnold reports that the bureau of agricultural economics of the United State Department of Agriculture has been studying records for the past 27 years, and finds that when the national production has exceeded 3.8 bushels per capita, the price has tended downward during the ensuing season. The trend has usually been upward when the production has been less than 3.2 bushels per capita.

Only when the indicated crop was not much more than three bushels per capita was the grower usually justified in holding his potatoes. In other years the chance of profit was too uncertain to balance extra cost of risk, storage and shrinkage.

Production in the late potato states, according to the federal investigators, is the most important factor in determining the season's price level.

Cleanest Culture Helps Strawberry Leaf Spot

The Ohio station gives the following advice about handling leaf spot of strawberries:

"Plant resistant varieties; the majority of present-day commercial varieties are somewhat resistant.

"Set plantations where both air and water drainage are good. When setting out plants remove and destroy the diseased leaves; do not leave them about the patch. Practice the cleanest culture possible.

"Rotate strawberries with other crops frequently. It is rarely profitable to fruit a strawberry planting more than two years, due in part to the accumulation of fungous pests. Many plantations should be plowed under after one crop has been secured.

"In renovating a plantation to be fruited the second time, destroy all diseased leaves. The fungi causing the leaf spots over winter on affected leaves. Mowing off the old leaves and burning over the plantation is advisable when a planting is badly infected.

"If these recommendations are followed closely spraying will not usually be necessary. However, one to three applications per season of 4-4-50 Bordeaux spray may be profitable in controlling unexpected attacks."

Pigs at Weaning Time Should Be Given Grain

Pigs at weaning time should be getting all the grain they will eat. The ration should include tankage or skim milk. With a good pasture on which to run, pigs should be getting a good start for market weight. Pigs which are doing well should make a pound a day gain in weight. Self-feeders are a convenient means for feeding corn and tankage, and the use of self-feeders results in as good and often better gains than the hand-feeding method. A self-feeder should keep the feed dry, keep feed before the pigs at all times, and prevent waste.

Treating Potato Seed Increases Usual Yield

Seed potatoes treated three or four weeks ahead of planting will show no delay in sprouting as is often the case with seed treated to kill disease organisms it may be carrying. Treating seed that is coming out of dormancy may cause it to become somewhat dormant again. Early treating gives the seed time to come out of dormancy and be ready to grow as soon as planted. Treating seed potatoes has increased the average yield 22 bushels per acre in the test plots conducted for the past eight years in Kansas.

Dusters Satisfactory in Fields for Killing Bugs

Dusters are fairly satisfactory in potato fields, for killing bugs. However, under most Nebraska conditions they are not nearly as satisfactory as they are in regions farther east. To be used most advantageously the dust should be put on when the plants are damp with dew and when there is little wind. It is not at all advisable to try to use a duster on a windy day. Consequently it is very desirable to dust the plants in the early portion of the day before the wind comes up. —H. O. Werner, University of Nebraska.

Grinding Feed Does Not Increase Digestibility

For feeding dairy cattle, the grinding of a roughage will not increase its digestibility nor its value as a feed. Grinding coarse feeds may reduce waste by eliminating the coarse parts of the feed and may make the feed more palatable. When feed is high in price, grinding may prove advantageous. Grinding coarse feed will not make the feed into a concentrated feed. Neither will grinding dry, coarse roughage make the feed as good as when put in the silo.

Safety for Aviators in New Light System

The dangerous possibilities of fog at the airport landing place is reported to have been successfully overcome by a new system of lighting recently installed experimentally at the municipal airport at Cleveland. Incorporated in the design of this multi-light unit are several principles of lighting, each a distinct aid to night pilots. It provides a fan of light which, when rotated, reaches the pilot at any angle at which he may approach the field. One-half of this fan of light is white and the other half red. The rotation produces alternate red and white flashes which instantly attract the pilot's attention and enable him to identify the airport from brightly lighted parks, railroad yards and streets. The high intensity beams are projected by the lower, drum-shaped units, of which there are four—two red and two clear—identical in design with those used to mark airways. The upper units set to project a less intense beam of light at higher angles, are standard, narrow beam, floodlight projectors.

Post-War Complexions

The late C. E. Montague, the English editor and author, hated post-war conditions.

An American publisher, after listening to Mr. Montague's complaints for an hour or so one day, said soothingly:

"The post-war girl, anyhow, thanks to athletics, is shapelier than the pre-war girl."

"Maybe she is," said Mr. Montague, "and maybe she isn't. Still there's one thing I will admit about her. Her complexion is better than it used to be."

"Naturally," said the publisher.

"No, not naturally," said Mr. Montague. "Artificially."

Pigs Outwitted

When pigs refuse to have their pictures taken, they can be set in position like a group of ten pins on a bowling alley. A contrivance designed by Gus Bohstedt, animal husbandman of the University of Wisconsin, provides a large frame of wood and galvanized iron with individual pens. The camera is focused in the frame and the hogs are driven into their pens. When everything is ready the pens are lifted into the air and the camera is snapped before the animals move, eliminating undesirable poses and oft-lost patience.

AN EXPLANATION

The News force has suffered a severe handicap for the last week or so as the editor has been suffering from an affliction which affects his right arm, and has been causing him sleepless nights, and otherwise has incapacitated him from performing his usual duties at the office. This accounts for no paper last week, and the late arrival of this week's issue.

William Quance and brother, Fred, from Auburn, came Wednesday evening to assist in getting out this edition. We regret that this had to happen, and hope this explanation will satisfy those who were disappointed at not receiving last week's paper.

Mr. Leighty's condition is improving and we hope to get future editions out on time.

HOME COOKED MEALS ON ROAD ASSURED BY PRESSURE COOKER

Modern "Gypsies" in Motors Collect Their Food as They Go Along.

The gypsies are with us again! Not swarthy vagabonds ambling along in caravans but a host of happy pleasure seekers touring the country in modern automobiles. Like the gypsies, they are carefree, for they will pitch their tents for the night where fancy strikes them or will seek out one of the comfortable tourists' camps that have been provided for them.

In food, too, they will resemble the old-time nomads, collecting it as they go along, only in place of the blackened soup cauldron, today they take the family pressure cooker along with them and serve the family as well-cooked and well-balanced meals as if at home.

Every mother of small children will tell you that they often suffer while on trips because of the change of food and the tendency to eat irregular, insufficient meals and to fill up on a lot of sweet things all day. With the pressure cooker in the tonneau, the entire family gets hot, wholesome, freshly prepared food just as they would at home. Entire meals of meat, vegetables and desserts can be cooked in fifteen or twenty minutes. Chickens are easily bought in the country and corn and other vegetables and fruits in season.

Here, for example, is a menu that will be appreciated by all—fried chicken, brown gravy, squash, steamed apples, bread and butter, coffee for adults, milk for the children.

Mother can prepare the chicken for frying, dip in flour, season, and sear it in the bottom of the cooker. In the meantime, some one else can pare and cut the squash and set it in the inset pan, without water, over the chicken. A third member of the party can core the apples and set them in a second inset pan. Fill the centers with one-half cup sugar and one-half teaspoon of cinnamon or nutmeg to eight apples. Place above the squash.

Put the cover on the cooker and cook at fifteen pounds pressure for twenty minutes. After the chicken is removed, make the gravy in the bottom of the cooker.

Greasing the outside of the cooker before placing it on over the open flame will enable the smoke to be easily rubbed off.

VITAMINS SAVED IN PRESSURE COOKER

Several Vegetables Can Be Cooked Together Without Mixing Flavors.

The rush of '49 when gold was discovered in California is nothing compared to the housewives' scurry for vitamines for their families now that scientists have discovered that these precious nuggets of health are hidden away in different kinds of foods.

Vitamines A and B aren't so hard to find. There's plenty of A to be found in butter, milk, eggs, ice cream, and vitamine B is found in these foods, too, and also in navy beans, carrots, turnips and onions after all the mineral salts and vitamines have been killed.

The two ways of preventing this wholesale slaughter of vitamines, especially vitamine C, are to serve one raw food a day and to cook all vegetables in a pressure cooker. This means that they are cooked without water, in their natural juices, none of which can escape. Best of all, it has been scientifically proven that cooking at a high temperature for a short period of time is less harmful to the vitamines than slow cooking.

The cooking time for vegetables in a pressure cooker is remarkable. Carrots, for example, are tender and tasty in five minutes, at fifteen pounds pressure; cauliflower, in eight minutes; cabbage, onions and celery, ten minutes, while potatoes, sweet or Irish, require only fifteen minutes.

Not only do pressure-cooked vegetables retain their health-giving properties, but the housewife has to spend raw cabbage, turnips and liver. But vitamine C is the elusive one, and one of the most important, too, because it is essential to good health, and especially prevents scurvy which is apt to be prevalent among children not getting a balanced diet.

There are plenty of fruits and vegetables which abound in this necessary vitamine, but it has been found to be the one most easily destroyed by cooking. It is useless to give your family plenty of spinach, cabbage, less time in the kitchen, and the saving in fuel is considerable. Several vegetables can be cooked in the pressure cooker at one time and the flavors will not mix.

Moreover, the flavor in vegetables so cooked is so much improved that there will be no difficulty in persuading each member of the family to eat his full quota no matter how strong his old prejudice may have been against them.

Electro Magnet Now Used to Milk Cows

In Albany, N. Y., where he was born more than 130 years ago, there was unveiled the other day a statue of Joseph Henry, discoverer of the electro magnet. The statue depicts Professor Henry examining an electro magnet, the principles and workings of which were discovered by him in a room of the Albany Academy, in front of which the statue stands.

Many of modern industry's most important tasks are possible of performance only because of Henry's discovery of the electro magnetic force. The most recent application of the electro magnetic force is reported by the DeLaval Engineering Laboratories, which have harnessed the electro magnetic force to achieve uniform milking of cows—a goal sought by scientists for over 20 years. This is accomplished by means an udder pulsator and controlled from a pulso pump by magnetic force. This simple and inexpensive method insures perfect milking with the least trouble and attention on the part of the operator.

John Henry shares with Morse the honor of inventing the telegraph.

BEVERAGES FOR VACATION TIMES

By Betty Barclay

Do you ever heed the pleadings of a little son or daughter and furnish a cooling drink in the middle of the afternoon? It may be a lemonade, an orangeade, a fruit punch, an egg nog, a ginger ale punch, a mint julep, or any one of dozens of famous summer beverages. Children have their favorites, but almost any cooling drink will bring smiles to their faces at any time—and particularly during the strenuous, hot days of vacation.

There is much more of real value to a little treat of this kind than many mothers appreciate. The fruit used in the drink furnish-s much that is beneficial in the line of minerals and salts. The liqud itself takes the place of that lost through perspiration. The sugar, used as a sweetening agent, gives greater zest to the fruits used, and because it is a highly concentrated source of human energy, it helps to provide the vim, vigor and vitality that make children bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked little beings they are.

So furnish the kiddies with plenty of cooling drinks this summer—not filled with ice but cooled so that they will be relished—and furnish the adults with the same or more elaborate beverages, as you see fit. Tinkling pieces of ice fit more appropriately into the adult drink, for adults are more pronee to sip their tasties slowly. For children, it is usually well to set the beverage aside to cool on ice, rather than to serve it with ice.

In the car, at the picnic ground, while hiking or when on a camping trip, fruit drinks are very desirable. They may be carried from home in a vacuum bottle, or made on the spot—provided one is sure the water is pure. When well sweetened, they serve as energizing foods as well as thirst-quenching beverages. Here is a trio that will prove particularly pleasing:

Fresh Orangeade

½ cup sugar
2½ cups water
2 cups orange juice
3 tablespoons lemon juice
Grated rind 1 orange

Boil sugar, water and orange rind together for 5 minutes. Chill, add fruit juice and serve.

Ginger Ale Punch

1 cup hot tea infusion
1 cup sugar
¾ cup orange juice
⅓ cup lemon juice
1 pint ginger ale
1 pint mineral or ice water
Few slices orange

Pour tea over sugar, cool and add fruit juices. Turn into large punch bowl over blocks of ice. Just before serving add ginger ale, mineral or ice water and orange slices.

Grape Juice Lemonade

4 lemons
1½ pints water
1 pint grape juice
1 cup sugar

Mix lemon juice with other ingredients. Turn into pitcher half filled with ice and stir thoroughly. Let stand ten minutes before serving.

PASSION PLAY AT WINONA LAKE, JULY 12-13

William Courneen Discusses the "Christus" part in the Passion Play

"What is your interpretation of the part of Christ in The Passion Play?" Hundreds of people ask me this question," says William Courneen, the "Christus" in that production coming to Winona Lake at the W. A. Sunday tabernacle, on July 12 and 13.

"I think the predominating characteristic of the Master, as we portray Him, in His strength and leadership. To us His words as spoken of John the Baptist, 'What went ye out into the wilderness to see, a reed shaken of the wind?' Well might the same words have been spoken of Jesus himself. Jesus said, 'My word shall be as a sword.'

"In life, He certainly was a strong character, for upon occasions as high as six thousand men, not counting the women and children, followed Him out into the country, and remained with Him until they were famished. Whether or not He was Divine, as I believe Him to be, at least He must have been sufficiently strong to attract such crowds to Him. He told many 'According to your faith, be it unto ye.' He inspired that faith.

"In the drama, nearly every line I speak is a direct quotation from the Bible, many being His parables, the Beatitudes, excerpts from His sermons, such as to give many of His teachings.

"While I believe Him to have been a strong character, yet He was filled with humility. There is a great difference between weakness and humility."

The Passion Play is not a motion picture. There will be about 250 people taking part.

HOW TO OBTAIN YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Everybody is interested in getting the fullest measure of quality for the money they spend.

But sometimes it is extremely difficult to choose a product of quality, because of numerous imitations. To all outward appearances these imitations are identical.

How then, are you to tell a good lamp from a poor one—when they all look alike? Simply:

Look For the Word "Mazda" On the Tip of the Bulb

Quality in the Edison Mazda Lamp is a matter of giving the maximum of light for the minimum of current consumed. These lamps give you every possible bit of light from the current for which you pay.

Twenty-three years of research have gone into the Edison Mazda Lamp. Every new improvement is passed on to the public.

"Pilot," said Judge Albert Stephens, "in the absence of our bailiff, leave the controls for a moment and come back here and call this court to order." For when it was opened it was cruising toward San Francisco 7,000 feet above Los Angeles county in a Western Air Express plane. As soon as Judge Stephens became accustomed to the hum of the three motors, he began taking testimony in the condemnation suit brought by the county against the San Gabriel Canyon Development company, to force the latter to give up gold claims near the site of the great San Gabriel dam.

THE STORY OF EZEKIEL

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 3:4-11; 24:15-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Ezekiel, a Messenger of God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ezekiel, a Messenger of God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Frankness in Friendship.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Prophet-Pastor.

Ezekiel prophesied in the land of the captivity. The purpose of his ministry was threefold.

(1) To keep before the house of Israel that they were in captivity because of their sins (14:23). (2) To show that God is righteous in His visitation of judgment upon them (7:8, 9). (3) To sustain their faith by assuring them of their national restoration, the punishment of their enemies, and their final exaltation among the nations when Messiah should reign (34:11-31).

I. Ezekiel's Call 2:1, 2).

1. Command to stand up (v. 1).

He was given a vision of the Almighty God on His throne of glory (ch. 1). The purpose of this vision was to give a synthetic grasp of the execution of the divine will through the powers and forces which God had created. Before this vision the prophet fell prostrate upon his face. When one sees the diversity and complexity of the agencies employed, including the animate and inanimate creation intelligently moving forward, under the direction of the Almighty, he will be ready to face any task regardless of its difficulty.

2. Filled with the Spirit (v. 2).

By the Spirit the divine energy entered him and enabled him to execute his commission.

II. Ezekiel's Commission (vv. 3-8).

1. The moral condition of the people (vv. 3, 4).

(1) A rebellious nation (v. 3). This perhaps referred to their idolatrous practices.

(2) Impudent children (v. 4). Impudent means literally "hard of face." It means the grossest perversity which caused them to stand up in the presence of the prophets of God without a sense of guilt.

2. The charge (v. 4).

He was to deliver God's message. It was to be, "Thus saith the Lord God."

3. The difficulty of his task (vv. 5-8).

The prophet was to deliver the message of God whether they would hear or forbear. He was to fearlessly execute his commission, though the attitude of the people be as "briars, thorns and scorpions."

A faithful minister's life and testimony will run counter to the world. (II Tim. 3:12).

III. Ezekiel's Experimental Qualifications (2:9-3:16).

Before one can preach to others he must have a personal experience.

1. Eating the book (2:9-3:9).

This book contained God's woes upon the stiff-necked and rebellious people. In order to speak God's threatenings effectively to others we must inwardly digest and appropriate them ourselves. The result of this eating was that Ezekiel was made "hard of face and forehead" to go against the people who were "hard of face and forehead."

2. Urged on by the Spirit (3:10-14).

In order to strengthen Ezekiel for his task, the wonderful symbolism of God's providential agencies which had been before him in chapter one was brought to his attention, assuring him that God would accompany him to his new destination.

3. Entering into sympathy. (v. 15).

In order to minister to a people one must show that the message is from the depth of the heart. Ezekiel mingled his tears with theirs.

IV. Ezekiel's Grave Responsibility (3:17-21).

Two things were required of him as a watchman over the flock.

1. To hear the Word at God's mouth (v. 17).

The source of his message was God's Word. This is true today.

2. To sound the warning. (v. 17).

After he had heard God's message he was to speak it out; then his responsibility was discharged.

V. Ezekiel's Courage (24:15-18).

He was to be taught by a sorrowful experience. He was to turn his face from even natural desire. At the death of his wife he was forbidden to mourn. By this means God sought to impress upon Israel the seriousness of the situation.

The Sick Need the Physician

And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners? But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.—Matthew 10 to 13.

TOPCOATS FOR VACATIONISTS; PLAIDS IN VOGUE FOR BEACH

A Summer-Weight Coat.

UNWISE the vacationist who starts on a pleasure trip without a practical utility top coat. Not too heavy in weight yet not too heavy should it be.

Preparedness of this sort brings its own reward. For cool breezes even in summertime sometimes hold sway. Then, too, there are motor trips, hours of travel by train and boat to consider, which emphasize the advisability of acquiring a smart coat such as the exceedingly handsome and distinguished model pictured.

This is just such a coat as the best shops are advocating for summer wear. Its medium is a loose lightweight woolen fabric, in a smart diagonal design. The model is featured with an ever important self-fabric scarf. Sun-ray tucking while it ornaments also achieves a perfect fit for this coat about the shoulders.

Pastel woolens bring a charming phase of fashion into play. It adds zest to sports and town modes, that so many are developed in lovely yellows, pale greens and blues, likewise violet colorings—the latter being a voguish color which is receiving no end of exploitation. Indeed there is quite a rivalry between grayish greens and dusky violet shades for summer-weight woolen coats and ensembles. In almost every instance these colorful costumes are topped with matching hats either felt or straw and the accessories through and through carry related colors. In mentioning fashionable shades, the new eggshell tint must not be omitted. Woolens in this smart tone are irresistable. Increasing favor for gray is noted. Coats or ensemble suits in this color call for perfectly matched accessories.

In fashioning practical coats of lovely colored woolens, style creators have done a commendable thing. Transforming the utility coats into a "thing of beauty" without sacrificing its practicality, has added zest not only to town and travel coats, but the new rain coats revel in color and charm.

As to "what are the wild waves saying" no doubt if we could tune in on their conversation we would find they were telling each other how much they admire the spectacular colorings and chic styling of this year's bathing and beach costumes.

Certain it is that fashion is staging a panorama of in-the-sea and by-the-sea modes, whose audacious styling, bizarre coloring and striking patterings while they are startling the world, nevertheless call forth sincerest admiration.

In the display of bathing and beach togs it is a question whether the fabrics of which they are made or their novel styling counts for most. As media for beach ensembles, stunning plaids have become the rage. It matters not whether the plaid be gingham, taffeta or one of the new plaid rayons. The smart outfit illustrated below features an attractive plaid rayon weave in brilliant blue and white—a color combination which fashion is especially highlighting this season. Here's something interesting in regard to the jacket—it is lined with turkish toweling.

One of the sensations of the season is the adopting of pajama styles to beach wear. For these costumes, novelty is the word. The use of gaily printed cottons and calicoes, also cretonnes, as well as elaborately patterned linens is advocated as well as that of silks of flamboyant color and design. Silk-and-wool jersey also is proving delightfully wearable. One of fashion's latest whims is to use moire for the making of the pajama costume. The fact that modern invention has produced a "permanent" moire, the patterning of which no wave may hope to wash away, makes this material thoroughly practical for bathing and beach apparel. White silk pique is another favored medium. It works up effectively in the popular sailor costume. The trousers of white silk pique flare at the cuff and there is a sleeveless blouse. The sailor collar is trimmed with navy blue braid. There is an anchor embroidered on the pocket of the blouse. The final touch is a soft tie of navy silk.

Picturesque Beach Costume.

The vogue for sunburn bathing suits is outstanding this season. Favor for these modes has led to the promotion of protective wraps, as a necessary part of beach equipment.

"There's plenty of time, you fool," I hissed. "Wait! Somebody—"

I was going to say somebody might come back, and the somebody cut my sentence in the middle. A door opened, and the voice of Helene de Cespedes spoke.

"What is this I hear, mon ami?" she asked. "Are you mad? This girl is the spoil of the band. She belongs to all of us. We are holding her for a bigger stake. Shall we let you have her for your own satisfaction? You take too—"

"You are jealous," snarled Toutou. "I say I want her, and I am going to have her. I am tired of women like you."

Hugh, his nerves under control, gently darted the folds of the curtain with his pistol muzzle. The atrium was brilliantly lighted. He and I could see perfectly. On a divan heaped with cushions lay Betty. Her hands were bound behind her, and her feet were tied loosely. Her hair was rumpled, and her blouse ripped off at the shoulder. But her eyes sparked fire as she stared fearlessly at the monster who stood beside her.

Toutou was in a different mood from any I knew, or, rather, I should say, from the one I knew. His sinisterly beautiful face revealed the latent ferocity that was the salient feature of his character, but with it there was something else, something difficult to define. The tigerish glare in his eyes was replaced by a softer light; the pupils were expanded. His mouth was slack. His movements were uncertain. He hovered over Betty, looking almost fearfully at Helene.

She stood just inside the door that communicated with the large outer chamber. She was dressed in a sports suit and high boots. Her hat was off, and her face showed pinched and wan. There were shadows under her eyes.

"Say I am jealous," she answered steadily. "I have a right to be. You have never had a woman who did more for you than I. Do you think Miss Innocence here would do what I have done?"

"That is why I want her," returned Toutou, his voice singularly hoarse. "I am tired of you. I am tired of all of you. I hunger for innocence. I wish to forget crime and evil. When we finish this job I am going to take this petite and go away where Toutou will be unknown."

"Toutou LaFitte a reformed character!" Helene laughed sarcastically. "You don't know what you are talking about. You have nothing in common with innocence."

"Who knows?"

"I know, mon ami. The girl would kill herself first. Sooner than see you do this I will kill you."

Toutou frowned at her.

Helene stepped forward boldly, one hand inside her jacket.

"There are many things you can do, Toutou," she said. "And you are chief. Nobody questions that. But remember that if the others are afraid of you, I am not. And I say that you shall not do this. Something you owe to the band. More, still, you owe to me. You know me well enough to appreciate that I intend to secure what I consider due me."

Toutou growled in his throat, and his pupils began to contract. The slack left his mouth.

"It is time you feared me," he snarled. "Go away, I am through with you. I never wish to see you again. You shall have your share of this coup, then you shall leave the band."

"But I thought there was to be no more band," sneered Helene. "I thought Toutou was to become an honest bourgeois, with a dove-cot—"

"You shall feel my knife," he barked at her.

"Why should I feel your knife?" she retorted. "The last time a woman threatened you, you fled from her knife."

Her face was white with rage, and Toutou's whole frame seemed to draw together as an animal does when it prepares to spring. His long arms curved before him, his right hand at the level of his belt.

"You do not know when a man tires of you, it seems," he exclaimed. "Can you not see we wish to be by ourselves?"

She made a violent effort to regain her self-control.

"For the last time," she said quietly, "will you heed the opinion of your colleagues and leave this girl alone?"

"No," he growled savagely. "Go, you—"

"Look out," cried Betty, who alone of us all could see clearly what Toutou was doing with his right hand. "His knife!"

Helene snatched a pistol from her blouse; but he was too quick for her. As the flame spurted from the barrel he leaped aside, and his immensely long arm curled out and slashed down. The blood frothed over the hilt of his knife as it clicked on her collarbone, and she dropped, choking, to the floor.

In the same instant Hugh fired, but one of us jostled him and the bullet missed. Toutou turned, saw the curtain swaying as we charged, and ran for the door. I fired once, and the bullet chipped his arm and side, but he was out before we could shoot again.

From the courtyard came a crash and a ripple of shots that vied with the thunder. A chorus of yells pierced thinly the howling of the gale.

Nikka, hearing Helene's pistol, had accepted it as the long overdue signal for his attack.

"Take care of Betty, professor!" Hugh called to King. "See if you can help this poor girl. Come on, Jack. Watty!"

CHAPTER XIII

Under the Red Stone

The big room was a maze of shadows. Stable lanterns, flickering in the drafts, hung from hooks in walls and pillars. Toutou stayed his flight by the door to the courtyard, one ear inclined to the bedlam of shots and outcries that threaded the roar of the storm. As we burst in he raised a pistol and sprayed us with bullets as rapidly as he could pull the trigger. But he had the knife-fighter's inability to shoot straight. Bullets "phutted" all around us, yet none of us was hit.

Several men and women stared at us. Hilmi Bey peered from behind a pillar next to the courtyard door. He had plainly taken shelter at the crack of Helene's pistol. Montey Hilyer and Serge Vassilievich stood some distance to the right of us, paralyzed with surprise. Maude Hilyer and Sandra Vassilievna had risen from seats at the other end. Apparently they had supposed Toutou was engaged only with Helene.

He screamed at them, insensate in his fury. His knife still dripped blood. He flung his empty pistol at us.

"Fools!" he shrieked. "We are betrayed!"

The door to the courtyard was open, and he spun on his heel and dodged behind a pillar. Tokaiji reeled in.

"There's Plenty of Time, You Fool," I Hissed.

"Strange Tzigane folk have burst the street door," he bellowed. "We—"

He gaped at sight of us.

"Quick!" Hugh shouted. "Scatter—before they shoot!"

"Shoot!" yelled Toutou. "Shoot! Fools! Swine! Dogs!"

And he babbled on obscenely, darting catlike from pillar to pillar toward Watty. Hilyer and Serge simultaneously came to life and made for us, guns spurting, throwing pieces of furniture to confuse us. Things happened so fast that it was impossible to keep track of everything, but I found myself in a pistol duel with Serge. Hugh and Watkins were blazing away at Hilmi, Hilyer and Tokaiji, and Toutou was weaving through the smoke, seeking an opportunity to close with one of us. I paid no attention to the women until a bullet spatted on a pillar by my ear. I knew it could not have come from the front, and startled, I turned to the left in time to see Sandra aiming deliberately at me. I dodged, and thereby opened myself to her brother's attack.

He was an expert marksman, and I realized there could be only one result for me if I continued exposed in flank. So I tore a lantern from its hook and flung it on the floor. The burning oil vomited forth a cloud of thick black smoke, and under cover of this, I changed my position, gaining the protection of another pillar. Here I was safe from Sandra; but her brother knew where I was and our duel continued. It was no steady stream of bullets, but a pot shot whenever one of us thought he saw an opportunity. All around us others were doing the same thing, and the vaulted roof rang to the reports, while the acrid fumes of the powder and the smoke from broken lamps stung the eyes. And outside the thunder was pealing and the lightning splitting the heavens and Nikka's men and Tokaiji's gypsies were trying their feeble best to rival nature's forces.

Suddenly, I sensed that our opponents were bracing for a combined effort. There was a rapid-fire exchange of exclamations in the thieves' French and Tzigane dialect they used for confidential communication. I heard an empty cartridge clip jingle on the floor. But in the shifting of light and smoke it was impossible now to tell real men from the shadows. I stuck my head around a pillar, crouched and slipped aside. Then, while I was unprotected, the rush came.

"Go!" called Hilyer's voice.

The shadows were pricked with pistol flashes. Serge Vassilievich leaped for the pillar behind which I had stood, his gun blazing, knife in hand. He did not see me, on my knees, four feet to the right, and I put my first bullet in his thigh. He stopped as if a giant's hand had been shoved against his breast, tottered and fell backward. As he fell, one of the burning oil pools ignited a bundle of blankets, and the rising flames sketched us both clearly against the darkness that shrouded the far end of the room.

There was a scream. I recognized Sandra's voice, but I could not see her. Instead, I saw Hilmi Bey sneaking on Watkins, who was holding back Toutou. I drove the Levantine away with my first shot. Then the hammer clicked, and I knew the magazine was empty. I dropped to my knee again, thinking I was concealed by a patch of shadow, and fumbled for a fresh clip. But the treacherous light flared upward, the shadow disappeared and I was left defenseless. I saw a raging figure, hair flying, pistol raised, running at me. I saw the pistol flash, felt a numbing blow on my shoulder and tumbled in a heap.

For a second my eyes misted, the room danced before me. Then I heard a chatter of Russian and Watkins, mildly disapproving.

"None of that 'ere, miss. If you please, now! I don't want to 'urt you, but—"

I looked up. Sandra, her face contorted with demoniac rage, her empty pistol shaking in her hand, was backing away before Watty's menacing crowbar.

A woman screamed again, horribly, so that it rasped your heart-strings. It was Maude Hilyer. She stood, with hands clutching her cheeks, her gaze on the center of the room where Montey staggered against a pillar, the blood from a punctured lung gurgling in his throat, bravely trying for the last time to raise the smoking muzzle of his automatic.

Hugh, relieved of the Englishman's attack, was taking pot shots at Toutou and Hilmi. I saw Tokaiji slip through the door into the rain, and as Vernon King ran up the stairs from the atrium Hilmi followed the Tzigane and Toutou jumped through a window, squawling like the big cat he was. Behind me Watkins was scientifically roping Sandra, hand and foot, regardless of the curses she spat in three languages. Vassilievich had fainted from the pain of his wound. Maude Hilyer sat on the dirty floor, under the single wobbling lantern that remained intact, and cradled the head of her dying husband. We had swept the House of the Married.

Or had we? As I tried unsuccessfully with one hand to reload my pistol, I felt a pressure at my back. I turned and very nearly impaled myself on a long knife blade. A tense, willowy figure, bare-footed and tumble-haired, stood over me.

"You are Jakka," said Kara in the Tzigane dialect—I could understand simple phrases after my experience with Nikka's tribespeople. "Where is Nikka?"

Dumfounded, I pointed to the courtyard. She glided toward the door, but Hugh intervened.

"Not so fast," he said. "Whose friend are you?"

She did not understand him, and raised her knife.

"She's all right, Hugh," I called. "She's trying to find Nikka—must have been asleep upstairs. Let her go."

But she did not wait for him to stand aside. With a single leap, she put one of the pillars between him and herself, and vaulted from the window Toutou had escaped by.

"Nothing slow about that girl," said Hugh. "Everybody whole?"

A pistol cracked in the doorway, and the bullet sang by his ear.

"They're still after us," he comment-

"Coming, Nikka!" Shouted Hugh.

ed, dropping beside me. "Have to load my gun."

"Then load mine, too," I said. "My left shoulder's hit—whole arm is no use."

He laid down his automatic.

"We'll carry you inside with Betty. I see Watty has made a prisoner, and Vassilievich had better be watched. You can—"

"I will not," I returned. "We'll need every man before we finish tonight. Hear that!"

The courtyard had become an inferno—yells, screams, howls, shots, the beat of the rain and the din of the storm.

"Tie my arm to my side, and I'll be O. K.," I urged.

Betty crawled between us.

"Did I hear you call me?" she asked.

"My word!" grunted Hugh. "Get back, Bet. This is—"

"Touch and go," she supplemented his sentence. "I have Helene's gun. You boys had better help Nikka. I can guard this place."

A whistle shrilled in the courtyard.

"Hugh!" It was Nikka's voice. "Jack!"

There was a racket of shots.

"Yes, he must be badly outnumbered," muttered Hugh. "No time to to lose. Here, Jack, where's your handkerchief? Right O! Thanks, Bet. Not too tight. Can you stand that?"

"Yes, load my gun, somebody."

Betty took it. King, esconced behind an adjacent pillar, fired at the door.

"They seem to be waiting for us out there," he observed.

"Yes," said Hugh. "Betty, you lie here in the shadows. Don't let anybody approach you, no matter what they say. Keep an eye on Mrs. Hilyer and the Russian girl—and her brother. See him over there? He's done in, for the time being, but if he comes to maybe you'd better tie him up."

"Don't you worry about me," answered Betty valiantly. "I can take care of myself. Do hurry!"

"Ere, your ludship," came a throaty whisper from Watkins. "This way, gentlemen."

He was at the far end of the room, and while we watched, he put his hat on the end of his crowbar—from which he refused to be parted—and stuck it above the sill of a window.

"I've done this twice now, your ludship," he added, "and nothing's happened. They ain't watching 'ere."

A little investigation proved that he was right, and we crawled out into the rain and huddled against the house wall, attempting to disentangle the situation. The rain was descending in slanting, blinding sheets. Pistols cracked and men gasped or shouted, but we could not tell whether they were friends or foes. As we waited, two men dashed by, one in pursuit of the other. It was impossible for us to intervene. Then, with a preliminary crash of thunder, the lightning zigzagged across the sky, and for the winking of an eye the courtyard was as bright as day.

I had an impression of bodies scattered here and there, and little clusters of men that struggled and ran. Over in the corner of the courtyard wall by the bachelors' house men swirled in a tumultous mass. The darkness closed down once more, thick and wet and cold.

"Coming, Nikka!" shouted Hugh. And to us: "The big fight is the key to everything. We must break it up. They've got Nikka pinned in."

Tokaiji's gang faced around as we attacked their rear; but we went clean through them and almost drove on to the knives of Nikka's party.

"After them!" panted Hugh. "We've got 'em breaking!"

Nikka called to his men in their own tongue, and they lined up with us in a thin file across the courtyard from wall to wall. Behind Nikka I had a brief vision of an assassin who had flanked us and lifted my automatic—but something, the proud poise of the head, perhaps, warned me it was Kara.

Knowledge of History Duty of Citizenship

There never was a time when the average man needed to know more about the continuity and tradition of his race than in this age, when he is beset on all sides by agitators who seek to trample under foot anything that custom has hallowed or experience taught us to be true. Bacon advocated the reading of history as making men wise, and it is to be hoped that this revival of interest in our country's story is being undertaken in the spirit that ought to underlie all our reading, not that of blind acceptance, or that of contradiction, but with an open, alert mind, so that we may weigh and consider well before lending our support to or withholding it from any proposed political reform. The reading of history is the first duty of citizenship.—Exchange.

PLANNING AHEAD FOR COMMUNITY PICNIC

Community Picnic With Cafeteria Service.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Whether it occurs on the "glorious Fourth" or on any other day of the summer, a community picnic, attended by persons of all ages, is likely to be successful if consideration is given to everybody's comfort. Young people do not mind perching on logs or rocks to eat their lunches, or sitting right on the ground, but those who are less energetic prefer a bench of some sort and a place to set their dishes or beverages. Mothers with little children, too, can manage them better and get them to take their milk or fruit drinks more readily in spite of the prevailing distraction and excitement, if the arrangements for eating are somewhat like those they are used to. Set tables and benches such as are found in automobile tourist camps, answer admirably, however roughly constructed.

Shade is essential to a comfortable outing. A grove of tall trees with no underbrush is ideal, and if there is a stream or lake in sight to make a pleasant outlook and add interest for the children, so much the better. A supply of pure drinking water should be assured, either from a well or spring known to be safe, or carried from home. Children should be taught not to touch the water in brooks or ponds, lest it be contaminated.

Foods for the community picnic should be planned beforehand by a competent committee. The preparation of the various articles on the menu may then be allotted to volunteers and there will be no unnecessary duplications or omissions. Some hot foods like bacon, steak, wienies, or rounds of hamburger wrapped in bacon may be cooked on the grounds. Coffee may be cooked when wanted or carried in thermos bottles. On the whole, however, cold foods and beverages will be found easiest to manage for a large group of people, especially on a warm day. Minced and mixed foods which might easily spoil, are best avoided, either as separate dishes or in sandwiches. Salad ingredients may be carried separately, packed with a little ice, and put together at the picnic.

The cafeteria method of serving is quick and easy. It insures every one's getting the foods preferred, so there is a minimum of waste. The Oregon women in the illustration, taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, belong to a home demonstration club under the direction of the state extension staff. They have found cafeteria service very satisfactory.

PROTECT CHILD'S HEAD WHEN IN SUN

Cretonne Used for Hat Sure to Delight Any Girl.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A matching sun hat of cretonne and cable net is worn with her colorful sun suit by the little girl in the picture. Some protection for a child's head and eyes is advisable when the sun is sufficiently hot to give the beneficial effects of a sun bath on the skin surface of the body. The cretonne used for both suit and hat is sure to delight any little girl. It has a gay design of plump red cherries on a cream-colored background. The waist is of ecru net, as is the ventilating crown of the hat, and the whole is banded with bias tape of soft green.

The hat can be easily made by experimenting with a piece of paper and a pair of scissors until a satisfactory pattern is made for the brim, fitting the head comfortably. It should be cut a little wider in front than in back, and by means of a back seam can be shaped becomingly. The circles of cretonne are needed for the upper and under sides of the brim, and an interlining of thin muslin. Green binding is used. The brim is slightly starched to hold its shape. The crown which is detachable, is simply a circle of the net, bound with green bias tape and arranged to draw up and button to the brim.

The hat and sun suit were designed by the Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. No patterns are issued by the bureau for any children's garments, but this sun suit can be readily adapted from a commercial Dutch-romper pattern, which flares out at the sides. These side pieces are seamed together at the lower edge and close the otherwise open plackets, and reinforce the sides of the drop seat. Bands of bias tape trim and define the legs but do not bind them.

CLAMS IN SEASON ALL SUMMER LONG

Supply Minerals and Protein Needed for Well Being.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Clams are in season all summer when oysters are missing from the markets. Depend on clams for some of the minerals and protein needed for physical well-being, especially for iodine, and for vitamines A, D, E, all necessary to good growth and normal development.

The two types of clams most people know are the round, or hard-shell clams, and the long, or soft-shell clams. The long clams are almost always served steamed or baked and are the kind used for the traditional "clam bake." They must be thoroughly scrubbed and rinsed before cooking, so that all the juice that cooks out of them may be collected and served in cups. At clam bakes these long clams are pulled out of their shells with the fingers, dipped in melted butter, seasoned, and eaten as hot as possible. The broth or bouillon is often passed in cups at the same time.

Small round clams are served raw on the half-shell or for clam "cocktails" with tomato catsup or chili sauce flavored with horseradish. The larger and less tender clams are usually cooked by boiling, baking, or frying in the form of fritters. As they have a good deal of rather tough tissue they are better put through the grinder than fried whole like oysters. Cut up in pieces, round clams are often made into chowders, timbales, and other clam dishes.

Clam fritters are sure to be popular for lunch or supper. A tasty cole slaw or raw vegetable with french dressing will go well with them. Fritters of any kind must be served piping hot as soon as they are made. The bureau of home economics gives the following recipe for making clam fritters:

Clam Fritters.

1 pint shucked clams	2 tsp. baking powder
2 eggs	½ tsp. salt
1 cup sifted flour	1 tbs. melted butter

Drain the clams from the liquor and take care to catch and save all of it. Grind the clams in the meat grinder or chop them fine. Beat the eggs, add the sifted dry ingredients, clam liquor, melted butter, and the clams. Stir until well mixed. Heat some well-flavored fat in a skillet and when hot drop the batter by spoonfuls into the fat, allowing sufficient space between the fritters for them to spread and rise. Brown on both sides, drain on brown paper, and serve at once.

Cools Heated Kitchens

An electric ventilator will bring comfort to the one-window kitchen, says American Home. There are now three kinds available: The portable type, which can be hung up over a window and moved when the family moves; the built-in type, which cuts off no light but must be put in when the house is constructed, and the more elaborate type which is installed in a hood over the range. All of these ventilators, of course, are run by motors; they are simply glorified electric fans, which can be turned on and off and set at will.

LITERARY REPRODUCTIONS

NIGHT IN THE EMPTY HOUSE

"Why choose me of all the others?" questioned I, of Mr. Wingfield, editor of the Daily Times, impatiently.

"Because you are brave, my dear," replied he smilingly, "and have a good imagination."

"Brave, your foot," thought I to myself, but aloud I said, "Very well, I will do my best."

Hurrying home, I seized my grip and calling my dog, Blink, we set out on our perilous journey.

Arriving at the House of Seven Gables at eight o'clock on a cold, rainy and somewhat mysterious and spooky night, Blink and I at once set to retire for the night, as we had made a long and tedious journey that day. Thank heavens, we didn't have to spend more than two nights in this place.

My imagination grew wild and my knees shook so when I reached the top of the stairs that I declare I become quite knock-kneed.

You can laugh, but I did not feel so brave, once I was here alone. But this will never do, me getting frightened from the first. Not taking time to bolt the door, because I knew if I happened to want to get out quickly I would not have time to unlock doors, I went to the stairway to go to my room. At the top of the stairs I stopped very short. I heard a sound, like a shot from a canon and I know I jumped three feet off the floor, losing one of my high-heeled pumps in the commotion. If it had not been for the bannister, I would have taken a neat plunge down the stairs. The last thing I saw of Blink, before my fall, was the end of his tail vanishing from a plunge behind the heavy curtains of the arched window where Clifford had once spent his time.

I didn't take time to find where the noise came from, but instead started in pursuit of Blink. Flinging back the curtains of the arched window I beheld a sight which was not very pleasant to look upon. I thought of Colonel Pyncheon's death. There sat the skeleton of a long deceased body. Horrors! Who could it be? But little did I forget Blink.

Hitting at least every fourth step in my mad plunge down the stairs, I hardly had time to stop at the door so it had to help me. I will venture to say, I saw, Hepzebah, Clifford Holgrave, Phoebe, Judge Pyncheon, and Uncle Vennor in each star that appeared to my vision.

Opening the door I plunged madly into the storm and dashed out to the arched window where Blink had made his plunge. A peal of thunder and a flash of lightning revealed to me a ghostly sight. Clasped in the briars of a famous old wild rose bush, of Alice Pyncheon's, lay poor Blinky never to breathe again. Just then a weird voice seemd to say, "I want my happiness, I want my happiness."

With a heavy heart I re-entered the house and went to the room that had once been Phoebe's to spend the night.

Many weird sounds did I hear as I lay there, alomst smothering amid the heavy curtains that enveloped the bed. I wanted to scream but I remembered the proverb we girls at the office used to laugh over, "There is no fool like an old fool." Now I reversed it and said, "There's no fool like such a fool as I for coming alone to this house." Yet I wanted excitement and here it was. Thinking of this I settled down to get a good night's rest.

Awakening in the night, I heard footsteps come up the stairs, pause at my door, and then go into the room that had long been vacated by Holgrave. I lay and shivered so violently that it semed the bed almost shook.

Stealthily creeping to the door, I opened it just in time to see the door to the room across the hall close. I would have sworn the Daguerrotypist had returned. Creeping cautiously back, I stumbled over a chair and in a few minutes I saw my door open. Giving a frightened jump, I plunged madly toward the bed, getting myself mixed in the heavy curtains that were around it. Untangling myself, I crept under the bed and stayed there until morning.

The next morning, after hurriedly dressing, I descended to the kitchen where a table, to my surprise, was set for two. A cheery good-morning was flung over the shoulder of a disappearing man into the other room. Returning with a tray of delicious food and sitting down at the table, Robert Seville both impressed and thrilled me with his charming manners. Looking across the table, I saw a handsome man with clean cut features, black curly hair, appealing brown eyes and a smile that revealed perfect white teeth.

This explained the mysteries of the night before. Putting myself in Phoebe's place and Robert in Holgrave's, I wove a story of "A Night in the House of Seven Gables." Bob painted several scenes from this night. That was my first real story, and needless to say my last, because Bob and I are married and are in Venice, Italy, for our honeymoon. We have had enough of spooky houses for the present, although the mysteries were explained.

THE UNDERSTANDING

Spring, that most promising of all seasons, had made her debut. On the calendar, she arrived exactly at 12:00, March twenty-first. But Nature heralds her with a rosy blush upon the ever-clearing skies of early, chilly April. But many are the tears she sheds before Nature finally gives her consent for her to stay. To these warm tear-drops, the flowers of May lift up their heads.

The little town of Pleasant Hills welcomed her enthusiastically. Although the inhabitants were few, their hearts swelled just as much as did those of the thousands in the far away metropolis. The town had never been a very thriving place, probably due to the fact that it was composed mainly of that class of people that live from hand to mouth, who lack that unsatisfied feeling that has brought about the many and wonderful inventions of the present and bygone ages.

The houses were low one-story shacks; very few had ever been painted, but there was something about them that bore a home-like appearance. Maybe it was because smoke was ascending from all chimneys and curling skyward which gave an "at home" appearance, or more likely still maybe it was that all the doors were filled with tousled headed children. At any rate these were real homes.

There were four main roads, or we might call them dusty, caw lanes that ran into the village. People were coming into Pleasant Hills from all four.

But surely Spring alone cannot be the cause for all this excitement. Spring comes once every year, but a crowd like this is only seen around Pleasant Hills "once in a blue moon."

About a mile outside of town jogging along in a spring wagon were two happy individuals. The driver, one would say, at a glance, was a dark, handsome youth of eighteen, while the small bonnetted girl sitting beside him could not be more than fifteen.

"John," she queried, "isn't there something we can possibly do for father? He seems so blue and down-hearted lately."

"I don't know what to do about it Sally. Seems like the more we work, the more the debts pile up. Stop worrying now, anyhow. Shucks! You aren't going to have a bit of fun if you don't quit worrying. Forget just for to-day any how," John comforted her.

"Well, I don't blame Mother for getting tired and leaving it all," she declared.

"Don't know as I do either," he agreed. Its' going to be a big day, all right,"

"We're almost there," she said as she shaded her eyes. "Why, John!", she exclaimed, "the parade is passing already, Oh, John! Hurry up, we're going to miss some of it! Oh, wait! Let me out! I'm in a hurry."

"Keep your seat," he ordered. "I'm going as fast as I possibly can go and stay in this road."

Bumping over the road at the teriffic speed of five miles an hour, they soon came up "smack-bang," as John expressed it, before a hitching post.

Like two children, they viewed the parade. The cage of snakes brought a gasp and shudder from Sally, and the wild west riders a whoop and hurrah from John.

As the circus was not to start until one, John found a few friends of his lounging around in front of the General store, and Sally went to see a dressmaker that had moved to the town just recently. Although Mrs. Taggart was one of the few who owned a sewing machine, and though she carried on a flourishing business, she was never too busy to stop to talk to Sally.

"Mrs. Taggart," Sally said, after she had been seated in an old-fashioned rocking-chair, "Are you going to the circus? It starts at one."

"I was just wondering if you would want to go to it," Mrs. Taggart said, laying down her sewing. "Yes, I'm going. Come with me Sally, and we'll get a bite to eat," she continued, as she started towards the kitchen.

"Mrs. Taggart, are you going to tell me that story soon that you promised to tell me?"

Mrs. Taggart, who had been leaning over the oil stove, suddenly grew red in the face, then paled. Finally she answered, "I'll tell you that story some other time, Sally."

The luncheon was eaten in silence, after which the dishes were stacked on the table. They started towards the white canvas. John joined them, but little conversation passed between any of them on the way.

Once inside the tent, they were surprised to see a man pick up his megaphone, and more surprised to hear what he had to say.

Oil and gas had been discovered in the vicinity and the man requested that those who were interested should come out to the booth after the performance. He asked that they would allow the Last Hope Oil Company, who had been so kind to induce the circus to come to Pleasant Hills, to lease their farms for the right to drill for oil or gas. Neither Sally nor John could have told what went on before them, for they were dwelling in a world of imagination where none could trespass.

They returned home that evening to find their father with his head bowed upon the table.

Joyfully they told him the news, and were delighted when after a while the bewildered look on his face was replaced by a look of hope.

"Children," his voice quavered, "if oil or gas is discovered on this farm, it will mean that I can start hunting your mother."

"Of course, oil is going to be discovered on our farm, Daddy," Sally assured him, "and Mrs. Taggart will help us find Mother."

"I know she can," a low musical voice asserted, behind Sally. In the doorway stood Mrs. Taggart.

Wonder swept across the face of the aged man. As he took one step forward, he stretched out his arms. Into them, Mrs. Taggart threw herself.

She, who had deserted her husband and her children while they were still too young to remember her, had found out that money is not everything in this world.

Oil was never discovered on the farm, but the some-thing that has caused the world to be a better place to live in grew and blossomed into a flower of wondrous beauty on the Taggart farm.

Spring, the most promising season of the year, left it to summer to nourish, fall to harvest, and winter to store.

LIFE OF AN EDITOR

Most anyone can be an editor. All the editor has got to do is sit at a desk six days out of the week, four weeks of the month and twelve months of the year, and "edit" such stuff as this:

"A mischievous lad of Piletown threw a stone and struck Mr. Pike in the alley last Tuesday."

While Harold Green was escorting Miss Violet Wise from the church social last Saturday night a savage dog attacked them and bit Mr. Green several times on the public square."

"Isaiah Trimmer, of Running Creek, was playing with a cat Friday, when it scratched him on the veranda."

"Mr. Fond, while harnessing a bronco last Saturday was kicked just south of the corn crib."

SERVE SALADS THIS SUMMER

The summer salad is valuable not merely because it contains light, alkaline foods that are needed to balance the acid-producing foods eaten, but also because it serves to satisfy the appetite and fill the stomach without furnishing too many calories to a heat-tortured body.

Serve a salad with every dinner, even though it be the simplest kind of a salad. Half a banana, half an orange, a few cherries on lettuce leaves with a touch of dressing will do. Serve it ice cold and it will be relished by all, family and guests alike.

For Beauty TESTING RESULTS For Pleasure

In checking up the annual report of the Allen-DeKalb Dairy Herd Improvement records for the year 1928-1929 which ended May 31st, we are pleased to find that the Merriwold Farms herd stood in fourth place, with an average of 14.16 cows in the herd for the year—producing an average of 6323 pounds milk, and 367.0 pounds butter fat.

For each dollar spent for feed, we received a return of $2.70; produced butter fat for twenty-one cents per pound and milk at $1.21 per hundred. Considering that fifty percent of this herd was heifers in first milk, we believe this to be a rather satisfactory accomplishment.

UNVEIL LINCOLN MOUNMENT AT FREEPORT

Freeport, Ill., July 17.—The scene of seventy-one years ago—August 27, 1858—when more than 15,000 men, women and children of northern Illinois came here on foot, by wagon and train, to hear Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas debate the slavery issue, will be appropriately revived on August 27. On that date a statue of "Lincoln the Debater" will be unveiled at the entrance to Taylor Park, not far from where the memorable debate occurred. Of the seven cities where the historic Lincoln-Douglas debates were staged, Freeport will be the first to commemorate the event by the unveiling of a statue of Mr. Lincoln, as he appeared at that time. The different joint debate spots were marked several years ago by tablets.

The new Lincoln statue is the gift to Freeport by W. T. Rawleigh, a citizen and business man who has long been interested in Lincoln's ideals. It is of heroic mould and has been sculptored by Leonard Crunelle, Chicago. Several months have been spent on its designing. Official announcement of the gife was made by the Lincoln-Douglas Society of Freeport, with a statement that an unveiling program will be held on the anniversary date August 27. Prominent Lincoln scholars, national and state officials will be invited to participate in the ceremonies.

"We are making an effort to have in attendance as the guests of the city, every person still living, who heard the debate," declared L. A. Fulwider, a member of the executive committee of the organization, principal of the public schools and a recognized Lincoln scholar. "Present records indicate there are several, but we are in hopes of hearing from many others."

Among the seven joint debate cities Freeport has unique distinction. It was the second of the series staged through Illinois in the senatorial campaign of 1858. During this debate Lincoln propounded his now famous question that has become known in history as the "Freeport doctrine." Although the United States Supreme Court has just held in the Dred Scott case that slavery might enter the new territories without restriction Lincoln forced Douglas to renounce the theory and declare that slavery could be excluded in any territory by "unfriendly legislation."

While Douglas' reply to this question quieted the opposition to him in some parts of Illinois, the answer resulted as Lincoln predicted, in disrupting the Democratic party two years later. The South denounced Douglas as an "apostate" and his theory as "heresy." It split the Democratic party and blasted Douglas' ambitions to become president. Historians attribute the sagacious move of Lincoln in this debate as paving his own way to election.

A complete program is being arranged which will recall the ante bellum events of more than seventy years ago. The old Brewster house, where Lincoln and Douglas held conferences with their friends during the morning of the debate, is still used as a hotel and will become a center of interest. Lincoln's room is still pointed out. Two squares from the hotel is the tablet and scene of the grove now a residential section where President Roosevelt in 1903 dedicated a marker on the spot of the debate.

While details of arrangements have not yet been completed by the Lincoln-Douglas Society, it is the hope of the organization to recapture the atmosphere of 1858, with music, speeches and exhibits.

Announcement is made by the sculptor that the statue will be delivered in Freeport in ample time for the unveiling. It is planned to hold the exercises in Taylor Park, where there will be plenty of room for the thousands who are expected to attend the unveiling exercises.

TRAINLOAD OF LIMESTONE FOR DEKALB COUNTY

Limestone meetings will be held at the St. Joe Town Hall on Thursday evening, July 18th at 8 P. M., central standard time, and at the Butler Town Hall on Friday evening, July 19th at 8 P. M., central standard time.

A thousand foot film entitled, "Limestone Delivered at the Farmers Back Door," will be shown.

Limestone properly used will make clover grow on land that will not grow it now. Good stands of clover means better livestock feed and bigger yields from these fields when they are put into grain.

The Wabash Railroad Company has made it possible to unload limestone onto the right of way opposite the farms needing lime and also at the nearest road crossing to farms not located along the right of way where it can be hauled and spread when the condition of the fields will permit.

Everybody is urged to attend these meetings. Many farmers can save two or three miles haul by taking advantage of this service. If you have soil that you want tested for lime requirement bring them to the meetings. This test will be made free.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

President Hoover has laid down the law to the heads of the different Departments and branches of the Government that they must keep down expenses. It is evidently his idea that "Coolidge-economy" must be preserved. The Presidential pronouncement says that the Federal budget for the next fiscal year must not exceed the last Coolidge budget.

Mrs. Julian Lowell Coolidge is working to crystallize, or organize, the dry sentiment in Massachusetts.

AUDITOR PAYS OUT $583,000 IN TAX COLLECTIONS

St. Joe Gets Small Increase Over 1928 While Concord Township is Less

The semi-annual settlement made by County Auditor Estell Dawson provides for the distribution of $583,459.23, which is $8,000 more than a year ago and $17,000 in excess of 1927.

The amount of poll tax reported in the collections during the spring tax-paying period was $3,317, while there was $27,849.14 in delinquent taxes. The latter sum is more than double that of a year ago.

The voucher for the state of Indiana calls for $59,596.62, which is practically the same as last year.

The state tax is divided as follows: general fund, $27,018.57; state school, $17,617.55; state teachers' pension, $4,475.66; soldiers' memorial, $1,349.15; state agricultural board, $562.12; Dunes park, $449.75; state forestry, $224.85; corn borer, $54.66; Clark memorial, $899.42; common school fund interest, $2,423.20; permanent endowment fund interest, $239.24, and educational improvement fund, $4,282.45.

For the general fund the county receives $51,449.20, which is $3,300 lower. The tax collections for the county road repair fund are $33,728.53, practically the same as a year ago. The sum for the county road bond and interest fund is $8,994.34.

The distribution among the other taxing units follows:

Auburn city, $33,741.80; schools, $50,630.70.

MUSICAL TASTE BETTER

In spite of the preponderance of jazz and other trivial music on the air, Walter Damrosch believes that radio audiences are rapidly forming a taste for symphonic and other high class programs.

He has come to this conclusion from the many thousands of letters he has received from those who have enjoyed his concerts by a symphony orchestra during the past few years, and the great increase in these expressions of approval which have come to him during recent months. He says:

"From the first I was confident the radio would bring about a new era in the history of symphonic music in this country, but I had no idea that the results would become apparent so quickly."

Several of America's finest symphony orchestras, grand opera companies and concert bands have been heard on the air regularly during the past season, all contributing tremendously to the development of a better appreciation of good music on the part of the general public. We should have even more such programs in the future.

AVIATION EXPANDS

By measuring aviation by the number of miles flown the Secretary of Commerce has found that there has been an increase from eighteen million miles in 1927 to sixty million miles in 1928.

The way that people are being smashed up and killed by automobiles raises the question of whether it is not becoming safer to fly than to travel on the ground, with thirty million cars beating up the highways.

Lesson for July 21

EZEKIEL'S VISION OF HOPE

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 47:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Hope.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Hope.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Will the Right Finally Win?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Cure for the World's Ills.

Ezekiel's final vision, chapters 40 to 48, exhibits a comprehensive view of the restored order when the Messiah shall hold sway over the whole earth. Our lesson for today is but a small part of this vision. It can be understood only in the light of the whole. The following outstanding facts should be noted:

1. The restored temple (chs. 40-42).
2. The return of Jehovah. (ch. 43).

In chapter 11 the Lord is seen taking His departure. In chapter 43 He is seen returning.

3. The arrangement of the services of the temple (chs. 44-46).
4. The river flowing from the temple (47:1-12).
5. The land apportioned among the people (47:13-48:29).
6. The holy city (48:30-35).

In the attempted interpretation of this vision, some five different views are held. The one preferred by the present writer is that it is a prediction of the temple which shall be erected in Messianic times. The literal view prevents wild speculation and at the same time permits the fullest figurative application. In fact, the Holy Spirit gives the interpretation of the waters flowing from the smitten rock (I Cor. 10:4) in such a way as to leave no doubt as to its meaning. The river flowing forth from the sanctuary typifies the river of life, the salvation of Christ flowing forth to the world. Observe:

I. The River's Source (vv. 1, 2).

It flows forth from the house—the restored temple where God has come to dwell. It flows from the divine presence. This flowing of the waters is miraculous. So is the eternal life which proceeds from Calvary's cross. Because Christ is divine, His shed blood has power to give life. It is to be noted that the stream came by way of the altar (v. 1), showing that eternal life for the world proceeds from God by way of the cross. Perhaps the deepest mystery of life is how life can spring out of death. Despite its mystery, the student of the Holy Scriptures and of physical science knows that life out of death is the philosophy of the universe. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone."

II. The Deepening River (vv. 3-5).

The deepening and enlarging is without any tributaries. For the first quarter mile the depth was to the ankles. By the time it had reached one-half mile it was to the knees. Till the distance of three-fourths mile was reached it was to the waist, and at the end of the first mile it was too deep to ford—"waters to swim in." The spiritual truth to be derived from this figure is that the life and salvation which have flowed forth from Calvary made vital by the Holy Spirit, have widened and deepened through the centuries and dispensations. This is especially true of the individual who yields himself to the Holy Spirit.

III. The Healing Effect of the Waters (vv. 6-21).

There is life in the progress of this river. "Everything shall live whither the river cometh" (v. 9). It flows from the altar toward the east country down into the desert and into the Dead sea. "The region of the Dead sea which has been the embodiment of barrenness and desolation, in the coming day is to be changed into a scene of life and fruitfulness."—Gray.

1. Trees on the banks of the river (vv. 7, 8).

Just as vegetation flourishes near the river, so wherever Christ's salvation is witnessed to in the energy of the Holy Ghost, life comes. This has been true throughout the centuries of church history. The details of fruitfulness are enumerated in verse 12.

2. Everything in the waters shall live (v. 9). Wherever the stream flows, there shall be life.

3. The waters of the Dead sea shall be healed (v. 10). Fishers shall gather from the Dead sea even as from the Mediterranean. The gospel brings life to those in trespasses and sin. The world is dead and therefore in need of the life-giving stream from Calvary.

Christianity

The distinction between Christianity and all other systems of religion consists largely in this, that in these others men are found seeking after God, while Christianity is God seeking after men.—T. Arnold.

When Tempted

In time of temptation be not busy to dispute, but rely upon the conclusion and throw yourself upon God, and contend not with Him, but in prayer.—Taylor.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

THESE sketches and directions "how-to-make" a perfectly adorable bonnet-and-apron ensemble should interest fair gardeneas who aspire to look as sprightly and lovely as the flowers they cultivate.

The thrilling thing about the bonnet is that it is really nothing more or less than a flat three-cornered piece which can be ironed as easily as a handkerchief, and which through ingenious fastenings can be formed into a bonnet.

As is so clearly shown in the picture, the bonnet is made out of plain and print, while the apron is made of the print, piped with the solid color. In this instance green percale is combined with a handsome "confetti" patterning, which introduces gay reds and blues and yellows.

A half-yard of 36-inch plain material will make the foundation for two bonnets. Cut the half-yard exactly in the center so as to make two squares, each 18 by 18 inches. The idea is to cut a three-cornered piece out of one of these squares, two sides of the square forming two sides of the right-angled triangle. Curve it across the other two sides thus forming the third side of the triangle as shown in Fig. A, B, C. Hem this triangle of plain percale or gingham or sateen all around—about a ¼-inch hem.

Next cut out of the printed material a panel about 9 inches wide, shaping it to fit the curved end of the triangle (see Fig. D, E.). Finish this all around with a ruffle of white organdie 1½ inches wide. Then machine-stitch row after row this printed part after fitting and basting it to the triangle—(see sketch in lower left corner). Cut a pointed strap measuring 2½ inches wide and about 5 inches from point to point. Self line this. Stitch it all around and make a buttonhole in each point.

This strap (Fig. F) is then sewed across the point of the large triangle after it has been folded over as shown in sketch marked F at the top. Sew on three dress snaps as the sketch shows. Also sew on two buttons, one at each side where the points of the printed portions meet. These buttons are exactly as far apart as the buttonholes in the strap, for the strap is brought down and buttoned over as shown in the last little sketch at the bottom of the picture.

The apron has a yoke at the back made so as to slip over the head. There is no opening at the sides, the pointed and piped front portion being stitched to the back portion.

It is very old-fashioned to think of gingham in terms of kitchen aprons and workaday house frocks, for gingham this year registers in the "classy" fabric list. The smart set having adopted gingham for its very own, is wearing it throughout the informal hours of the day. In gingham the style-wise play tennis, play bridge, go swimming or stroll in dress parade on the beach. For town and country wear there are gingham ensembles, too, and they are too swagger for words.

Somewhere, although it does not show in the picture, there is very liable to be found a gingham short jacket to "go with" the frock as shown here, for as suggested above the gingham ensemble costume is one of fashion's favorite themes this season. Simple checks, such as employed for the making of this dress, are no doubt in the lead, although gingham of any patterning "stands in" with fashion.

As practical as they are modish are the jacket-and-skirt gingham suits which women are wearing for shopping, for motoring and for general daytime wear. The skirts are often plaited, buttoning over sheer lingerie tuck-in blouses, while the jackets are that simply fashioned they launder without the least trouble. It adds to the sum of chic when a necktie of matching gingham is worn with the white or pastel tinted blouse. For the blouse, organdie, handkerchief linen or pique are favored materials.

Red and white gingham for the vacation-time ensemble is very popular. The entire costume is carried out in the color combination, even to the shoes and hat including probably a red leather belt and a pocketbook to match.

Along with its other accomplishments gingham has succeeded in making itself generally popular in the beach and bathing suit realm.

DEATHS FROM LIGHTNING FOUND INSIGNIFICANT

Persons who are accustomed to shudder and turn pale at the first distant peal of thunder may now take heart at this latest word from the Bureau of Standards at Washington. The number of people killed by lightning is shown to be 500 annually for the entire United States, an encouraging figure when the population of the country is taken into consideration. In comparison with 90,341 deaths from other accidents the lightning fatality is also insignificant.

"The actual danger from lightning," says the Bureau, "is in general very small, except under certain circumstances.

These certain circumstances consist almost entirely of exposure. The Bureau issues a warning to people who would avoid being struck by lightning that the outdoors is no place in which to witness a thunderstorm. Also, isolated schoolhouses and churches, where people often collect during an electric outburst may prove decidedly hazardous. Within buildings of considerable size and of modern structure, the danger of thunderbolts is materially lessened.

COLOR IN A CAN

WE don't mean paint, but pineapple. For the pineapple also comes to you in cans and may be combined in many dishes to which it lends the piquancy of color just as surely as if an artist had taken his skilful brush to provide the charming golden hue.

Of course, every housewife is more or less of an artist in color when she plans her meal, for a meal lacking in color-emphasis will lack just that much in interest. Pineapple is an invaluable asset in carrying out the color scheme for a yellow and white luncheon and would be equally appropriate at a golden wedding feast.

Stuffed Mutton Chops

For the luncheon, Hawaiian pineapple stuffed mutton chops would be good and unusual. Wipe six French chops cut one and one-half inches thick, and make slit in the meat, cutting to the bone. Melt two tablespoons butter, add one tablespoon chopped onion, one tablespoon finely minced parsley and cook five minutes. Add two tablespoons flour, one-half teaspoon salt and one cup of well-drained crushed pineapple. Cook five minutes longer. Press this mixture into slits made in chops and hold together with tooth picks. Lay chops in shallow pan, bake in hot oven (450° F.) twenty-five to thirty minutes. When partly done, sprinkle with salt and pepper. If chops do not brown sufficiently in oven, place under broiling flame for few minutes. Garnish with parsley.

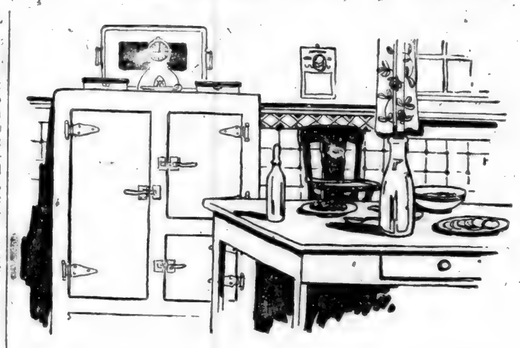
Pineapple and endive salad is appropriate for a luncheon, too. To make it, separate stalks of two heads of French endive. Slip two or three endive stalks through the center of each of six slices of canned pineapple and arrange around the outer edge of a plate covered with lettuce leaves. Combine one three-ounce cake of cream cheese, one tablespoon Roquefort cheese, a pinch of salt, dash of pepper and paprika. Press through coarse sieve or ricer and arrange in tiny lettuce leaves in center of salad. Pour French dressing over it.

A Golden Cake

For the golden wedding, what could be more appropriate than a fancy cake made with the golden pineapple? Cream one cup butter and one cup confectioner's sugar and add two and one-fourth cups flour sifted with three and one-half teaspoons baking powder. Fold in eight stiffly beaten egg whites and bake in two layers in a slow oven, 325° F., for twenty to twenty-five minutes. Put the following filling between the layers: beat six egg yolks, three-fourths cup sugar and three-fourths cup butter in the top of the double boiler until thick and creamy. Add three-fourths cup each of chopped nuts, dates and crushed, drained pineapple, and cook again until thick. Cool before spreading between the layers. For icing, mix three tablespoons pineapple syrup, two and one-fourth cups confectioner's sugar and two tablespoons butter. Cover top and sides of cake; decorate as desired.

THE REFRIGERATOR AND THE BABY

By KATHERINE G. CORNELL
Director of the Kelvinator Domestic Institute



BABIES are most important personages these days! To be sure they have always been the darlings of the family, the very center of everything that went on in the household; but today they are more—they are real people. Their needs, their health, their growth, their food are the most important topics of conversation in the home.

The modern mother realizes that the babies of today are the men and women of tomorrow, and if they are to be healthy, normal men and women, it is necessary that they be safely started along the right road.

Must Safeguard Food

Scrupulous care of his food is one of the most important guide posts toward perfect health for the baby. It is, not enough that the food should be selected with the utmost regard for its purity and health giving properties; nor is it enough that it be properly prepared. Baby's meals must be safeguarded so strictly that not the tiniest, most infinitesimal decay spore or other bacteria can possibly attack them.

Every morning when mother prepares the baby's food, she washes and sterilizes his bottles, cooks his cereals with a watchful eye on the clock, painstakingly makes up his food formula, and prepares his soup, prune juice or orange juice; and boils the drinking water for her wonderful baby.

The next step is to store baby's food in a perfectly sanitary way. It must be kept in a place so cold that no germ can exist in it and in a temperature that is almost stationary, neither rising nor falling more than a few fractions of a degree in twelve hours. Further, it must be in a place that is more than merely soap and water clean. It must be scientifically spotless.

Keeps Even Temperature

The modern electric refrigerator answers all of these requirements. Within its chill, clean depths baby's food is safeguarded from every possible harm. The rounded corners of its food chamber permit no gathering of minute particles of food, and the thickness of its walls assures a uniform, safe temperature of less than fifty degrees.

In such environment baby's food will keep pure and wholesome, and perfectly fresh. Mother may prepare it in quantities to last for several days, devoting the time she saves by such a plan to enjoying the fresh air and the sunshine with baby.

There was a crackle of pistol fire in front of us, and a knot of figures swayed into view, distorted, indistinct. The deluge seemed to act as a freak lens to play tricks with normal vision; and possibly that was why comparatively few were shot. Twice I had men fair over the barrel of my pistol, and both times I missed—and I am rather better than a good shot. But I had no time for philosophizing.

Toutou and Hiimi Bey went for Nikka. He was bleeding from a cut in the arm, and all his men were engaged. Hugh, with King and Watty, was developing an encircling movement on the opposite end of the line. I started to go to Nikka's aid, but a man sprang at me from nowhere, and I was obliged to dodge him until I had a chance to shoot. I did not miss that time. When I looked again, Nikka and Toutou were circling each other, and Hiimi was at grips with Kara.

At first I thought the Levantine was scheming to throw the girl, but as I drew near I perceived that he had clinched with her in mortal terror of her knife. She held his own powerless by her grasp of his wrist. A mocking light gleamed in her eyes, and she shook back her loose hair and jeered at him in the Tzigane dialect. With one pudgy hand he strove to ward off her blade, but he could not control her lithe muscles. She tore her wrist free, the steel drove home through his sodden coat and he collapsed with a squeal.

Kara pulled out her knife as casually as though it had been a familiar occurrence, and turned to watch Nikka's fight with Toutou. Nikka from the corner of his eye saw the two of us, plainly waiting a chance to help him, and he leaped clear of the circle long enough to snap:

"Let be! I finish this alone!"

I couldn't have helped him, in any case, for as redoubtable a person as Tokalji, himself, attacked me at that moment. Kara did not even notice my danger. She also ignored the oath she called father. Her whole attention was concentrated upon Nikka. I fired once at the gypsy chief, and missed. That was the last cartridge in the magazine, and I attempted to lose him in the rain. But he refused to be lost, and I was making up my mind to take his knife in my wounded arm and butt his head with my pistol butt, when Watkins loomed in the mist and brought down his trusty crowbar on Tokalji's knife-wrist. The gypsy yelped like a dog, and the knife clattered on the ground. Watty produced some rope from a pocket and deftly twisted the man's arms behind him. Tokalji yelped again.

"Easy," I said. "The fellow's wrist is broken."

"I'm tying 'im above the elbows, Mister Jack, sir," answered Watty. "But if it did 'urt 'im a bit I wouldn't worry, sir. I 'ave an idea, sir, 'e was one of the scoundrels that bashed me 'ead."

My one thought was of Nikka, and I sought him over the rain-battered area of the court. The fighting had drifted away toward the sea wall. There seemed to be nobody near me. I listened hard, and in a lull of the storm my ears detected the click of blades. I stumbled toward it, and nearly fell on top of Kara, crouching as I had left her, eyes glued on the two men who circled tirelessly, steel-tipped arms crooked before them.

Toutou had a huge advantage in reach, but Nikka had the benefit of lithe agility, a wrist of iron—the result of years of rowing; a hawk's eyes; and all the tricks with the blade that the people of his race have amassed in centuries of bloody strife. Four times, while I watched, Toutou endeavored to force down Nikka's knife by the sheer strength of his gorilla-like arm, and each time Nikka disengaged and refused to give the opportunity his adversary needed. Twice Nikka tried a certain trick, a combination of lightning thrusts and clever footwork. But the Frenchman parried it each time, and retaliated so quickly as to drive Nikka out of reach.

Neither of them said anything. Toutou spat and whined in his throat, cat-fashion. Nikka panted from exertion. Both of them dripped with sweat, notwithstanding the rain. There was something of an epic quality about their struggle, and I discovered myself taking the same almost impersonal interest in it that Kara demonstrated. By all the principles of normal right behavior, I should have ignored Nikka's command to let him fight it out alone, and rushed in at the first opening to kill a monster, who did not deserve and had no appreciation of knightly treatment. But I could not. I was chained by an emotion I could not subdue.

And yet I was absorbed in Nikka's success. My heart leaped in my throat when I saw that he was trying for the third time the trick which had twice failed. His knife went up in the same way, he shifted posture as he had in his other tries, and Toutou mechanically side-stepped as experience had told him was safe and aimed a stab which should have cut Nikka's throat. But Nikka was not there. He had varied the trick. Stooping, his knife had fallen, then sliced upward—and Toutou staggered, a look of blank surprise on his face, ripped open from belly to chest.

"Pt-sss-ss-tss-sst!" he hissed, and fell forward.

Kara hurled herself into Nikka's arms.

"You are the greatest knife-fighter of the Tziganes!" she cried triumphantly. "You are a king! You are my man! See, while you conquered your enemy, I, too, stabbed the rat who tried to put his knife in your back."

And she led Nikka to the body of Hiimi, which, I regret to say, she kicked with her brown toes. Nikka absentmindedly leaned over to wipe his knife on the Levantine's coat-tails, but Kara intervened.

"No, no," she exclaimed. "Here is my hair! Wipe it on my hair, beloved of my heart. Let me suck it clean with my lips! So we shall have strong sons."

Nikka looked sufficiently annoyed to show that he had some instincts of civilization remaining.

"Peace," he ordered royally. "Be quiet, girl!"

She cowered before him, and he recognized me.

"Oh, hullo, Jack! Where's Hugh?"

Hugh loomed up through the rain as he spoke.

"That you, Nikka? We think we've got Tokalji's people rounded up, but we need you to talk to them. Has Toutou—"

"He's there."

Nikka pointed his knife to the heap of dumb garments that had been the French "killer."

"Good for you!" exclaimed Hugh. "I'm glad he didn't get off. When you think of Uncle James and—that girl we saw—and I suppose others! What a beast!"

We splashed after him, Kara following Nikka like a dog. Wasso Mikali, his surviving young men, King and Watkins were guarding thirteen shivering gypsies in the lee of the bachelors' quarters. In reply to questions, Tokalji told Nikka—and Kara, shamelessly throwing in her lot with us, corroborated him—that there had been fifteen of their band on the premises. A search of the courtyard disclosed two of them dead, together with one of Wasso Mikali's men. We bound the arms of the prisoners, most of them suffering from bullet wounds or stabs, and marched them over to the House of the Married.

The one lantern was still flickering when we entered, and Betty rose to greet us.

"Thank God!" she said soberly as her eyes envisaged us all. "What did you do with Mrs. Hilyer?"

"Isn't she here?" asked Hugh.

"No. I don't know just when she left. There was a lot of firing, and I looked to where she had been sitting by her husband, and she was gone."

Nikka and I sped back into the courtyard. We picked our way over the occasional bodies to the street door. It was ajar.

"I locked it myself!" cried Nikka. "Old Wasso Mikali picked it without damaging the spring. I took time when we entered to fasten it again."

I was feeling very weak. My shoulder throbbed. Nausea assailed me in recurrent waves. But I clutched the gate post and peered into the street. Nobody was in sight.

"She escaped," said Nikka. "Too bad! We might have—" What's the matter, Jack?"

He caught me as my knees bent under me. I felt the rain on my eyelids, and then everything was blotted out.

When I opened my eyes Watkins was bending over me.

"Ah, there, Mister Jack," he said, "ave a drink of this. Thank you, sir." And as I struggled to a sitting position: "No need of 'aste, sir. All's well. And you 'ad a bit of a knock, if I may say so, sir."

"It seems as though you and I were the Jonahs, Watty," I answered. "This is the third time I've passed out cold."

"Quite right, sir. The same thought was in me own 'ead. If Mrs. Prouty and 'Awkins—the butler, sir—and the others in the servants' 'all could 'ave seen me last night,' they would 'ave been startled, sir. I do assure you they would. There was that Russian young lady, now. I give you my word, sir, she cursed like a maniac, and 'er brother was no better when 'e came from 'is faint. A fair rowdy lot of people we 'ad on our 'ands—including the young person in whom Mister Nikka happears to be interested, as the saying goes, sir."

"You said 'last night,' I believe," I interrupted.

"Yes, sir. It's close to noon, Mister Jack. But Lord bless you, sir, there's been no rest. We 'ad a largish undertaker's job, let alone tidying up and minding the prisoners."

"What have we done with the bodies?"

"In the garden, sir. The prisoners did the work—except the Russian persons, sir. 'E couldn't, account of 'is leg, and she, being a lady, so to speak, was hexcused."

"Well, I'm going to get up," I announced. "My shoulder feels better."

"If you wish, sir. My instructions were to get you anything you required but with submission, sir, might I suggest you sleep a little longer? There's nothing—oh, 'ere's Mister Nikka."

Nikka strolled in from the courtyard, with Kara trailing him.

"Hullo, Jack!" he greeted me. "Tough luck you had to stop a bullet. We're all more or less cut up, but you had the worst of it, although my uncle, who is a practical surgeon in a crude way, claims the bullet missed the bone."

"So Watkins told me. Any news? The police—"

"No, the storm covered the shooting. Hugh has been to Pera with Betty in the Curlew this morning, and they heard no comments. One of Wasso Mikali's men stopped in at the corner coffee shop, and made sure there was no local gossip. The only danger, I think, is from Mrs. Hilyer. We've got to risk that."

"Aren't you all worn out?"

"No. Too much excitement, I expect. We're just going to eat. Then Betty insists on going after the treasure again."

Kara sidled up to him, with a venomous glance at me, and ejaculated a remark soto voice. Nikka laughed, and pushed her behind him. She heeded him like a dog that is contented with a rebuke, so long as notice is taken by its master.

"She said," Nikka translated, "that I ought not to talk with you any longer. She wants me to pay attention to her."

"Humph!" I growled, returning Kara's look with interest. "Help me up, will you? Thanks! What are you going to do with her?"

"Tame her, I expect," he answered cheerfully. "I've begun by taking her knife away from her. She wanted to stick Betty because I talked more than five minutes to Bet about you."

"A sweet job! She'll end by sticking you."

"Perhaps," agreed Nikka equably. "Come and get some breakfast. A cup of coffee will help you to take a more charitable view of a wild little gypsy girl."

Hugh, Betty, and Vernon King welcomed us as we entered the atrium, where a low table of packing boxes had been rigged. Wasso Mikali and his men were either guarding the prisoners or else keeping watch on the street entrance. Kara scowled at all of us, but squatted determinedly behind Nikka.

We talked very little. The one idea in the mind of each of us was to get at the red stone, which we could see from where we sat, and we choked down our food as rapidly as possible. I forgot completely my injured shoulder. Watkins actually hurried himself in passing the eggs. Betty and Hugh crumbled a few bits of toast, and strangled over their coffee. Vernon King alone ate placidly, with the zest of a man who feels he has done a good job well. At last, Betty could stand it no longer, and she sprang up with an imitation of Kara's scowl so faithful that everybody, except Kara, laughed.

"Daddy, you've had time for two breakfasts," she decreed. "That's enough. Besides, I won't have you getting fat in your old age. Come! Everybody! We've got our chance, our chance that we began to think was gone aglimmering. The treasure of the Bucoleon is at our [illegible] feet, I mean. Up with the red stone!"

"Up she goes!" assented Hugh.

Crowbars, chisels, mallets, picks and shovels appeared, and Hugh paced the distance from the Fountain of the Lion. His calculations indicated the stone that I had roughly estimated on our first visit to the garden. We all watched him with madly beating hearts. It was really true! We were going to lay bare the secret covered by the red stone, to grasp the prize that the Emperor Andronicus had concealed seven centuries before, the prize that generation after generation of men had striven for in vain.

The thought exhilarated us, and when Hugh stepped aside and seized a chisel and mallet we all set to with superhuman energy. I was unable to do much, but I experienced a sharp pleasure in the mere act of holding with my one hand the head of a chisel upon which one of the others rained blows with a mallet. We could not take time for conversation. We worked. Even Vernon King, who had millions at his command, succumbed to the lure of the red stone's secret, and panted as he chipped the rotten mortar from the interstices between the red stone and those surrounding it.

Working at such a pace with so many willing hands, it was only a matter of a few minutes before the stone was detached from its neighbors, and Nikka thrust the tip of a crowbar under its edge. Followed then a struggle of some duration, but in the end it sagged up and was overturned. Below it was a second stone of equal dimensions, granite, unmortared, although the dust of ages had sifted into the cracks around it. This yielded to our efforts much sooner than had the capstone, and Hugh, kneeling amongst the debris, peered down into a yawning hole in the pavement.

"Careful!" warned King. "A compartment which has been sealed for centuries will be full of carbonic-acid gas."

Hugh sniffed.

"It's as damp as—as—that beastly drain," he said. "But it smells reasonably sweet."

We poked our torches into the hole. All they showed was a steep flight of stairs descending straight into blackness.

"Most extraordinary!" mumbled Vernon King. "Byzantine masonry, beyond a doubt. Observe the squaring of the blocks, and the composition of the mortar. This is no such slovenly work as Turkish masons do. The master-builders of old laid these stones."

"If it's safe, what are we waiting for?" I barked.

Our nerves were on edge.

"Oh, take your time," said Hugh impatiently, and he lowered himself, feet first.

The others followed him, one by one, and I brought up the rear, ashamed of myself for the temper I had exhibited. The pitch of the stairs was so sharp that we had to bend only a little in passing under the rim of the opening. They were barely wide enough for one man, and I counted thirty of them before they terminated in a passage that led off at right angles, with an appreciable downward slope.

"Hold up!" Hugh called back to us a moment later. "Here's an opening into another passage. There's a step down. Why, this is the drain again!"

We joined him, incredulous, only to be convinced at once that he was right. The passage debouched on the sewer some distance inland from the grating of the dungeon.

"My G—d!" groaned Hugh. "And we've gone through everything for this! Was there ever such a sell!"

The vaulted roof echoed his words. The "drip-drip" of slime and fungi was a melancholy punctuation for them. But the reaction loosened our taut nerves. The one thought of all of us was to comfort Hugh.

"There may be some explanation," said Nikka.

"Perhaps we overlooked something," I volunteered.

"It is a most unusual archeological discovery," offered King.

"There is an explanation," cried Betty. "We have overlooked something. I know it. There must be."

"It's no go," answered Hugh despondently. "I've brought you on a wild-goose chase."

We all looked rather white and wan in the cold light of the electric torches.

New York Leads All in Orgy of Wasting

In America, waste is an old habit of long standing and not wholly dishonorable descent. It is a legacy of the pioneers, a part of the old American tradition; for with a wilderness to subdue and the wealth of a continent at their doorsteps, the first settlers troubled themselves little over what they wasted. There was plenty more, whereas speed in producing food or clothes or shelter was a matter of life and death. So the tradition became established; and the descendants of the earliest fathers have blithely agreed with the latest immigrants in at least this one American tradition: to get things quickly, to build hastily, to tear down when it is convenient, and to use up at breakneck speed the gifts that the generous gods have lavishly provided.

And as all things American are on their grandest scale in New York, it is there that we must look for an orgy of waste that would have appalled imperial Rome. If the Yankee metropolis is not the most American of cities, either in its culture or its population, it is at least the most observed, both by foreigners and by other cities of the land. It occupies more land, builds higher buildings, handles more business, receives more visitors and attention, lives at a quicker tempo than any other city in America—which means that it wastes on a more lavish and stupendous scale than any other city in the world.

Wealth From "Scrap"

By the system of reclamation of the scrap pile now being generally followed by nearly all the railroad companies, bright new tin buckets, cups and other articles are being manufactured from old metal roofing, empty powder and carbide containers and other junk salvaged. Old broom handles are made into staffs for signal flags, old canvas is transformed into curtains for the locomotive cabs and couches, steam-pipe coverings and aprons. Thrift practices such as these save the carriers hundreds of thousands of dollars annually.

Death's Daily Harvest

It is estimated that about 90,000 persons die every day. This includes the entire world.

Aero-Sleighs

One of the newest forms of transportation in Russia is traveling in aero-sleighs, driven at 35 to 45 miles an hour by airplane propellers. The machines have a body of automobile design and look, except for the propeller, like an ordinary car mounted on runners. Under good conditions, a speed of around 50 miles an hour can be attained.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BOOK "PRESCRIPTIONS"

Undesirable states of mind may often be corrected as rapidly as physical ills, with the right prescription.

And the prescription is—BOOKS.

For instance, if you are discouraged and think your lot too difficult for any mortal to meet with fortitude, perhaps a stirring account of hardships endured by explorers in polar seas might change your point of view.

Or if you think life dull and monotonous, a corking good detective story might blow the rust off your mind and give a new edge to your enthusiasm.

Or again, if the mechanical efficiency of modern life has robbed you of your belief in fairies—or let us say taken the glamour and romance out of life—why not lose yourself in a good old-fashioned love story?

In other words, if you don't like things as they are you can always read yourself into a new attitude of mind—into a land of enchantment if you have enough imagination, or at the very least into a world where things are more agreeable.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel
by
The Baroness Orczy

THE League of the Scarlet Pimpernel! It is a name associated with heroism and adventure. The daring spirits who composed it gave little heed to the dangers that beset their own lives in combating tyranny and rescuing the innocent. Its history is the one bright spot in the darkest days of carnage and terror that France has ever known.

This Stirring Narrative Will Begin as a Serial in President Herbert Hoover.

President HOOVER Has Said:

"I have never seen any road to independence, except by saving. A man with only $1 in assets has to take the first job offered to him. The man with $1,000 can take the choice of several. A man with $5,000 saved can go a long way toward dictating who is to get his services. I went through this mill myself."

Con you see any road to independence EXCEPT BY SAVING? If not, don't you think it would be a good idea to open your Savings Account and get started—now?

WHEN MARY WAS MARRIED

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

MRS. JOHNSON gazed out thoughtfully at the misty tops of the Blue Ridge mountains, but she did not see the dim blueness. She was thinking of the wedding of her daughter, Mary.

"I reckon," she murmured, half-aloud after a long interval, "that there is something mighty wrong about me. I didn't feel like crying and taking on when Mary went off on her wedding trip. Will is a good, steady boy and has a home ready for her; he is a bit stubborn, but there's nothing mean about him and I like a man to be decided. Poor Mary, how she sobbed and cried when she kissed me goodby. I felt real ashamed—what's that, Victoria?" she asked, turning as a kinky black head surmounted by a frilled white cap was stuck timidly areund the door.

"How yo' feelin' now, ma'am? Hopes yo' ain't takin' on about Miss Mary. She sumh felt bad—mighty bad—when theyall went away"—Victoria had now propelled her huge bulk into the room and held out a glass of iced lemonade sympathetically. "Jess' drink this, honey, and yoall will feel bettah, yassum, ma'am."

Mrs. Johnson accepted the glass contritely. Faithful old Victoria had more feeling than she possessed. She resumed her task of setting the dainty bedroom to rights. In the excitement preceding the wedding many little duties had been swept aside and her housewifely soul longed to restore the usual meticulous order to her belongings.

"I came right up, my dear," cried a high-pitched voice. "I just knew how you'd be taking on. I just want you to reread Emerson's 'Compensation.' I know you will find something in it to comfort you." Miss Martha tip-toed over to the window and pulled down the shade.

Mrs. Johnson, ashamed of her own apathy, thought that they could hardly be more sympathetic if there had been a death in the house. "I thought," she remarked, "that I'd tidy up things a bit—"

The long, aristocratic hand of the visitor was dropped gently on her shoulder. "Yes, yes, it will take your mind off your loneliness; we are coming over to sit on your piazza tonight so you won't mourn."

Meanwhile Mary, on her wedding trip, found herself wondering over her own callous nature. She adored her mother, but she had not left her for long. When the pleasant trip with the man of her choice had ended she would return to the town where she had been born and live within a block of her old home. "How I shall hate to go home to get my clothes and little belongings," she thought. "Mother will feel so dreadfully that I shall almost regret my marriage and feel that I was unbearably selfish in leaving her. Life is very perplexing at times, for she wanted me to marry Will, but—"

"Not regretting your marriage, already, honey?" Will's tone was jocular, but he looked sharply at his bride's clouded face. No man enjoys the feeling that he is not all-efficient.

Mary roused herself, but the feeling that her mother suffered during her absence almost spoiled her honeymoon. "You see, Will, I have been everything to mother and it is a great loss to her. I don't feel like going down to the dance when she is at home crying her poor heart out."

Will snapped his fingers nervously as he looked his bewilderment. "But she was satisfied to have you marry me. I have a good bungalow ready for you and you'll have every comfort. In a year more the peach orchard will be bearing heavily and that means a doubled income—"

"Oh, it isn't the money part of it. You don't understand women, Will. You see, mother lives in the past. I feel perfectly certain that at this moment mother is sitting looking over my baby pictures or grieving over little curls that she has saved."

So Mary refused to join the others down in the hotel ballroom and cried herself to sleep while she berated herself for her own hardness of heart. Will unable to see her viewpoint, was distinctly sulky. He had not carried her away by main force and he felt that it was an effront to him to greet him with tear-stained face and subdued manner. "I always supposed a honeymoon was a blissful time, but I'll sure be glad when she gets back where she can console her mother," he thought.

So the days dragged and finally Mary persuaded her husband to take her home two days sooner. "Mother writes very bravely, but, of course, I can read between the lines and I know how she is longing for me. If we could take the ten o'clock train we would get in Crozet at three o'clock in the morning."

"Just as you like." Will still felt that things were out of tune and he was glad to move on.

Mrs. Johnson was sleeping quietly in her sleeping-porch on the first floor when she was aroused by a light step on the piazza. "I know you are lying awake, mother, so you won't be startled." Mary was rapidly approaching the couch.

Mrs. Johnson opened her eyes with a guilty sensation. Mary had grieved so much over the separation that she had cut short her honeymoon and she had slept through the nights sluggishly.

When the two women had gone into Mrs. Johnson's bedroom Mary scrutinized her mother's face. "Why, you are looking splendid; your eyes are not red and you look so rested."

"I haven't had much time to fret. You see, I thought I'd get all the peaches for both of us done up while you were away and I have packed up all your things and they are in place."

"That was just what I came home to do. I didn't want you to grieve over every little treasure that was filled with memories of my childhood, and what in the world made you work over the peaches alone? Don't you know that I want to do for you now that I shall be at home without any office work to keep my days filled up?"

"I love to do things for you, Mary. That is the greatest pleasure I have. I would have been perfectly contented during your absence if I hadn't felt that you—" Mrs. Johnson paused abruptly while her face flushed.

Mary looked at her sharply and suddenly her small face crinkled up into a smile of comprehension. "You are a fraud, pure and simple. I don't believe you have fretted for me one bit. Mother, have we both been wondering over our own lack of proper feeling? I just dreaded taking away my clothes and leaving you deserted and here you have been having a perfectly good time looking forward to my return."

After a moment Mrs. Johnson joined in the gale of laughter which was now convulsing the girl. "Mary, child, I'm afraid we are both too practical to spend the precious moments of life in sobbing over imaginary griefs. We are going to spend the rest of our lives within a stone's throw of each other and will really see more of each other because you will no longer have to work at stenography. I could not see but what life was becoming even happier than ever, but I felt that I was an unnatural mother—"

Mary giggled in a most unmatronly manner. "We'll never tell a soul," she began, "except Will. I absolutely spoiled our trip by fretting over your supposed loneliness."

At that moment Will knocked. "Well, you don't look as though you had suffered so much," he began, eying the sweet-faced woman, who looked very attractive in her soft trailing negligee of palest pink. "Mary was so depressed—"

They gaily explained the situation to him while he gazed at them in a masculine stupefaction. "And don't tell a soul, Will. You see, we shall live within a stone's throw, after all," ended Mary.

"I couldn't tell what I don't yet understand, but I'm glad to know that Mary isn't regretting her bargain. I was beginning to wonder—"

"Miss Mary, I'se suah glad to see you home again. How is yo' all afeelin'? Yore pooh mother has about fretted herself sick ovah youh. Is yo' all gwine to stay heah the rest of the night?"

"No, Victoria, we are going to the bungalow, just a stone's throw away," laughed Mary, jumping up and enjoying the scandalized amazement on her old nurse's face.

Motorists Must Watch Their Step in China

We do not suggest literal emulation, says the Detroit Free Press, nevertheless the following comment from the Los Angeles Times is a reminder that they really do some things very well in China:

"Automobiles are still strange creatures in some sections of China and the rules governing their movement are rather strict. Right in the shadow of Pekin there is a stretch where a speed of 15 miles an hour is the limit. According to the story of an observer those who exceed this rate are likely to have their heads cut off and exhibited on posts along the road. It must have a depressing effect upon a motorist to suddenly come upon the blood-dripping bean of some guy who had but recently passed him on the highway. The idea is that a man who drives fast loses his head and they are making the punishment fit the crime."

Precaution

Recently a little boy had been told that the stork had left him a baby brother. When his grandmother showed him the baby, he gazed long and intently at it in its little clothes.

"But, grandma, didn't it catch cold coming?" he asked anxiously.

"Oh, no, I don't think so," replied his grandmother.

"Well, anyway, you'd better rub his chest and give him some nasty medicine," said Bobby from his vast experience.

Dogs Gain Favor in Turkey

Less than a generation ago a dog was anathema to the Turk—Constantinople's many mongrels were proverbial—but now they are de rigueur as pets, which shows how quickly Mustapha Kemal's modernizing program is working, says Living Age. He himself has been photographed with a half-dozen dogs.

Little Clarice's French tutor had been endeavoring to teach her that there are only two genders in the French language—masculine and feminine. Next day, desirous of learning if the child had remembered, she asked, "How many genders are there in French?"

"Two," came the quick response. Much gratified, the tutor then asked, "And what are they?"

After a moment's reflection, Clarice replied, "Masculine and genuine."

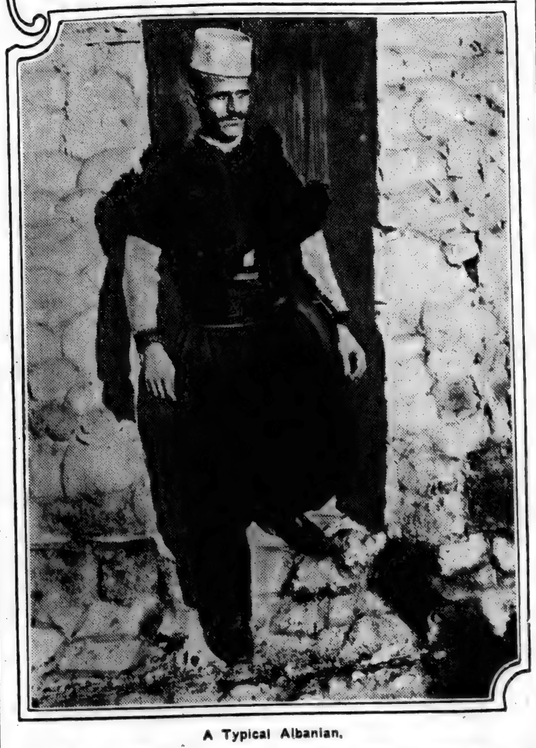
Albania Today



A Typical Albanian.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

EUROPE'S newest king is building a new palace in one of Europe's newest capitals. The king is Zog I (formerly Zogu) of Albania, who stepped to his throne from the President's chair last September; and his million-dollar palace is rising in Tirana which became the seat of government after the World war, when it was decided that the former capital, Durazzo, on the coast, was too exposed.

Until this move was made Tirana was as little known as the rest of Albania is today. Boat loads of tourists drifted down the Albanian coast, stopping now and then at some picturesque island, or at a coastal village.

At Durazzo, they took one glance at the impassable roads to the interior and another glance at the springless ox-carts and donkeys which were then the only Albanian taxis. Then most of them decided to see Tirana when conditions were improved.

The capital has changed, however, since President Zogu established government headquarters there in 1925. Bus service on the new road from Tirana to Durazzo brings increasing numbers of travelers and the once quiet little Moslem city is making splendid progress.

The mosque, domes and minarets that once dominated the city's sky line are being encroached upon by modern government buildings and legations of foreign governments who recognize Albanian sovereignty. Hotels are also poking their upper stories above the red roofs of old Tirana's mud-walled structures, and new avenues, parks and public gardens have been laid out for the enjoyment of the city's inhabitants and guests.

Market Place of Tirana.

The Tirana market place is one of the few spots in the city that has not been disturbed by the newcomers and there, among the vegetables and fruits piled on the cobbles, roam folk of the surrounding mountains and valleys, apparently unmoved by the changes taking place in their capital.

Both the Ghegs of the north and the Tosks of the south crowd the aisles. Mingling with the lively throngs, one sees a bewhiskered Moslem holy man whose somber robes sharply contrast with the flaming colors of the natives' garments. The Ghegs, three-fourths of whom are Moslems, can be singled out from the rest of the crowd by their gray half-size fezzes which resemble the aluminum lids which keep pancakes warm on American restaurant tables. They also wear loose-fitting, sleeveless, buttonless jackets, tight-fitting trousers and homemade sandals of ox-hide.

The Tosks are less conservative than their northern compatriots. They like ornamentation, and their costumes are colorful. There may be enough silver and gold in their regalia to pay a first-class passage from Durazzo to New York.

The Albanians are a rugged, primitive mountain people who, it has been said, "occasionally d from ordinary disease, but more often from differences of opinion." They are classed along with the French, Portuguese and Walloons as members of the Greco-Latin branch of the Aryan race. Their mountain life has fostered a passionate love of independence and they cling to their language and their customs with a vigorous tenacity, even when groups are transplanted to other lands. The name of the Albanians, meaning "people of the snow-land," has been fastened upon them by their neighbors; they call themselves "Skipetari," or mountaineers. One important tribe, the Catholic Mirdites, bitterly oppose the settlement of any Mohammedans in their vicinity.

What Visitors Buy and See.

Tirana is in the west central part of Albania, 20 miles inland from Durazzo, the country's principal port. Until the outbreak of the World war the only well-paved highway in the country linked these two cities.

The visitor to Tirana can acquire as souvenirs specimens of locally-made brass work, distinctive and beautiful embroideries, done by the Tirana women and sold by them in the market places, and whether a smoker or not, he will wish to take along one of the oddly and intricately carved pipes. The city covers a larger area than its 15,000 or so inhabitants would seem to need, judged by our standards. Yet one would have a difficult time convincing a Tiranian, with his cottage and garden, that a more vertical mode of living, in crowded apartments, would be more civilized. Once one strolls beyond the bounds of Tirana, however, he will encounter mud houses, and the "simple life" to an extreme degree.

An Albanian family is sufficient unto itself. Except for the trading in a few cities—in Scutari, Korytza and Argyrocastro, besides those already mentioned—there is no semblance of an economic system.

A woman in a country district works hard, but she is not mere drudge. She makes bread of maize and cooks it over an open hearth fire. The remaining wood ashes she uses in place of soap. She weaves woolen cloth and plaits black braid for the garments she makes of it.

Before the Christian era, the ancestors of the present Albanians occupied practically the whole of the peninsula north of Greece, to the Danube. They are, in fact, the remnants of the oldest race in eastern Europe. The conquest and policing of the region by Rome did not displace these early inhabitants; but when the Slavs burst southward into the peninsula in the Seventh century A. D., only those who lived in or fled to Albania kept their blood and customs unaltered by the newcomers.

Their History One of Struggles.

It has been the fate of the Albanians to struggle constantly against some powerful neighbor. First it was imperial Rome, next the Slavs, then Turkey. When Turkish power waned, Albania found Austria coveting her lands. Just before the World war, Austria had succeeded in placing a Germanic prince on the throne of the newly created Albanian state; but this arrangement did not last long. Since the World war Albania has found herself between two forces. On the east and north Yugo-Slavia has advanced her frontiers to Albania, and eyes her territory with interest; on the west, Italy, separated only by the narrowest part of the Adriatic, has shown a desire to control Albania.

The eastern frontier of Albania, where, Italy has charged, the Yugo-Slavs have been making preparations of a supposedly military character, is much less isolated today than before the World war. Then the region had just been liberated from Turkey and had been little developed. Monastir, second among the cities of Turkish Macedonia, had rail connections only southeastward to Saloniki, the metropolis. Now a line also extends northward connecting with the trunk railway into old Serbia.

The region about the two large lakes, Ohrida and Presba, midway of the present Albanian-Yugo-Slav line, was also isolated. Now a new railway from Uskub and the heart of Yugo-Slavia beyond reaches down to the city of Ohrida on the lake. This lake country of the Yugo-Slavian borderland has both geographic and historic interest. The claim has been put forth for Ohrida that it is "the clearest lake in the world." Fish may be plainly seen swimming about at a depth of 60 feet or more. Dense chestnut forests cover the slopes of the hills surrounding the lake.

GET CHICKS OUT OF WET HOUSES

Muddy Runs and Yards Encourage Parasites and Ills.

Get the chicks out of the mud.

Long-continued sloppy weather, muddy runs and yards, furnish ideal conditions for the parasite which causes the disease coccidiosis, as well as making things unpleasant around the brooder houses for the owners who take care of the flocks.

"The brooder houses ought to be moved to grass sod," says E. L. Dakan, head of the poultry department of the Ohio State university. "Even if the chicks are moved only 50 feet, from bare, muddy soil to grass, they will miss a lot of the infestation of parasites which have made their homes in the old runs where the grass has been destroyed."

Coccidiosis or white diarrhea results from the activities of a parasite which will infest the soil where chickens have been kept for a year or more. Sanitary measures which include moving the flocks away from the infested soil, have been found more satisfactory control measures than trying to treat the disease with medicine after it has started in a flock. Under the conditions which have existed for a month or more, the parasites have been flourishing.

For late chicks which are showing signs of rickets because it has been impossible on account of weather conditions to get them outdoors as much as they should have been, should have their cod-liver oil ration increased to 2 per cent of their feed, Dakan says, in order to counteract the lack of sunlight.

Quality Eggs Can Be Produced on Any Farm

Eggs unfit for food cost farmers from one to three cents per dozen. Approximately 17 out of every 100 eggs marketed are unfit for human consumption, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. This means a loss of about $4,000,000 annually to farmers. An egg buyer of Clinton county, Indiana, recently reported to Purdue university that one-half of the eggs delivered to him were not good enough to eat.

Two principal causes for the large volume of inedible eggs are as follows: Improper care of eggs at the farm, and neglect in marketing them more frequently, according to E. R. Menefee of Purdue.

Quality eggs can be produced on corn belt farms if producers will follow the suggestions which he makes.

Remove all the males from the flock immediately. Males are not necessary for egg production and fertile eggs will not keep their quality in warm weather.

Remove all broody hens from the nests promptly. The body temperature of a hen is 106 degrees and will reduce the quality of the egg in a few hours' time. Gather the eggs twice a day in hot weather and place them in a cool room promptly. A basement or cellar if not moldy or containing any peculiar odors furnishes about the best place on the farm for holding eggs.

To Distinguish Sex of Guineas Is Hard

There is no sure way to tell the male guinea fowl from the female by looks. Usually the wattles of the male are a little larger than the female's, but this is not always noticeable—nor is it true in every case.

But their cries are different, and will reveal which is which. The female has a two-syllable cry which sounds like "buckwheat, buckwheat," or to some folks "pot rack, pot rack." Anyhow it's a two-syllable cry. But the male has only a one-syllable sort of shriek. Sometimes too, he makes a chattering noise and often says "quit, quit, quit."

But don't try to tell the two apart when they're frightened or excited. Both the male and female then make the one-syllable cry.

Oats Cause Trouble

The use of ground whole oats containing an abundance of indigestible fiber has caused many losses among young chicks when such material has been included in the home-made starters. A laying mash containing a lot of ground oat hulls has less feeding value than a mash without so much fiber. There should be a good demand for hulless oats for chicken feed if they can be raised as economically and are as good feed as oats which have been hulled.

Remove Litter Daily

Daily removal of soiled litter from the henhouse is important. If the dampened litter is left on the floor, ideal conditions are created for spreading of disease. The soles of shoes that have come in contact with such litter should be disinfected. Contamination is easy unless every caution is used. This risk can be greatly reduced by wearing a special pair of rubbers and by having a pan of disinfectant outside the brooder house to use when entering and leaving.

Browse Supplies Feed for Goats

Essential to Have Succulent Grass and Weeds for Does in Summer.

Ideal range for Angora goats should possess suitable forage at all times of the year, be well drained and free from continued heavy rains, and be adequately supplied with watering places and suitable bed grounds, according to W. R. Chapline, in charge of range research, forest service, United States Department of Agriculture.

Feed for Goat.

As browse furnishes much of the forage for goats on the ranges, and in the winter is the principal goat feed, an abundance of good browse should be available. Some important browse plants of high palatability are mountain mahogany, the bluebrush of the Pacific coast, Fendler ceanothus of the Rocky mountains, fendlera, bitter brush, and service berry. The oaks are less palatable but important browse plants in the West. It is also essential to have succulent grass and weeds for does at kidding time and during the summer.

Good range management includes conservative stocking, dividing the range so as to afford the best feed during each season, and obtaining as nearly even utilization of all parts of the range as possible. The grazing capacity of a range area is the number of animals which may be carried on it year after year without injury to the forage and with sufficient palatable feed. An average of approximately four acres of the grass-brush type and from three to six acres of the true-brush type can be allotted to each goat for year-long grazing.

Reduction in the quantity of palatable forage, increase in nonpalatable plants, stubby appearance in the browse species, and thin goats are signs of overgrazing. Overgrazed areas should have the number of animals reduced so the palatable forage plants will not be injured; and, if possible, such areas should be protected from grazing until after the main forage plants have matured seed. Open, quiet herding, and the bedding of the goats on a new ground every night are recommended.

Mr. Chapline discusses the management of goat range in more detail in Miscellaneous Circular No. 50-M, The Angora Goat and Mohair Industry, recently published by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Three Kinds of Trees in Effective Windbreak

A windbreak to be most effective should consist of at least three kinds of trees, depending on the locality and the type of soil. The advice of a good nearby nursery is a great help in securing the right kind of trees. A dense growth close to the ground on the outside of the shelter belt stops snow. The main body of the belt should consist of at least six rows of both temporary and permanent trees. For the temporary growth Northwestern and Norway poplars and cottonwoods are the best, and white elm and green ash are among the best of the slow growing permanent trees. At least two rows each of white elm, green ash and poplar makes the best kind of shelter belt.

Groom Cows Frequently to Remove Loose Hairs

It is evident that the wisest course is, so far as possible, to prevent the introduction of dirt and bacteria into milk, and to use the most efficient straining methods to take out all of the sediment that can be removed.

Since the body of the cow is the chief and most dangerous source of milk sediment, preventive measures must begin there. Cows should be groomed frequently, to remove loose hairs, bits of manure, or bedding. In addition the flanks, udder and adjacent belly should be cleaned with a moist cloth just before milking. If these parts are kept clipped they will be much easier to clean.

Find First Year Sweet Clover Equals Alfalfa

Tests at several corn-belt experiment stations have demonstrated that first-year sweet clover is practically equal to alfalfa for hog pasture. Second-year sweet clover is equal to alfalfa in the early part of the season but becomes woody and coarse by midseason and less valuable. Sweet clover, since it is a biennial, works in better with a hog lot sanitation program than alfalfa. On the other hand, alfalfa has the advantage of being ready to pasture earlier than first-year sweet clover.—A. W. Weber, University of Nebraska.

Killing Morning Glory and Other Perennials

Wild morning glory vines and other pernicious perennials should have their tops cut down into the ground the last of July, and they should therefore be cut as often as any leaves show above ground, and such cutting should be continued until winter sets in. How this is best done depends on how best it can be done.

On stubble ground it can be done with plow and cultivator or by discing frequently; in corn it may have to be done with hoes.

Best Seed Corn Can Be Obtained at Home

Select From Own Patch Ears of Type Desired.

The home gardener who does not select his own seed corn from his own patch is missing some of the pleasure of gardening, say specialists at the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell. But they add that one should know just what type and characteristics he wishes to perpetuate in his corn patch and then use care in selecting and gathering the seed ears.

Those who wish earliness, for example, mark the stalks which produce the earliest ears of the correct type and also the earliest and best ears on these stalks. These ears are allowed to mature on the stalks and then are picked with the husks on, hung up to dry in an airy place away from rats and birds, and left there until winter or early spring.

After they are cured, the ears are sorted and only those of the most uniform type, shape, and size are used for seed. The best ears are well filled, solid, with good kernels and well dried, the college says.

Shelling is usually done by hand, and the kernels from the butts or tips thrown away. Before shelling, several kernels from each ear should be tested for germination. When one has developed the type, it is well to produce at least twice as much seed as will be necessary for home planting; something may happen to the crop the next year, and this extra seed can be carried over. Continued selection and careful growing will be necessary if the desired characteristics are maintained.

Saving Feed by Culling Out Unprofitable Cows

The feed lot is often a more profitable place for old cows than the dairy barn. Cows that have reached the limit of their period of profitable production should be fattened and sent to market so that their places may be used for heifers that are coming into production.

Old cows that have started to lose their teeth, or that are no longer sure breeders, should be sold while they will still take on flesh. This pays better than to winter them with the idea of selling them in the spring. Usually such cows are in better flesh during the fall and early winter months than at any other time of the year. This means that they can be fattened and sold on the market with greater net returns than at any other season.

Prevent Calf Scours by Using Care in Feeding

Calf scours is a common disease of the digestive tract and is usually caused by indigestion. The calf that scours early in life may be seriously handicapped and of course sometimes dies. Prevention is best but not always possible. Care should be taken that the calf is not overfed, that the milk is always fed warm, and that the milk is uniformly sweet and fed from clean buckets. If scours occur, cut the milk down one-half and give a dose of one to three ounces of castor oil or of mineral oil. Raw eggs may be used to correct the trouble. Two or three tablespoonfuls of lime water in the milk is sometimes effective.

Feeding According to Weight and Production

Silage and hay should be fed according to the weight of the cow. A good rule to follow is three pounds of silage and one pound of hay for each 100 pounds live weight. If silage is not being fed, feed two pounds of hay instead of one pound as when silage is being fed.

The grain mixture should be fed according to the amount of milk and its per cent of butterfat. Feed one pound of grain per day for each three or four pounds of milk produced, or feed one pound of feed per day for each pound of butterfat produced per week.

Distance of the Sun

A new method of determining the distance of the sun suggested at the Dominion observatory, Ottawa, depends on three accurately known measurements; the velocity of flight, the wave lengths of spectrum lines, and the shape of the earth's orbit. Daily observations of the spectrum of the sun's center with a constant comparison spectrum have been made for years and preliminary measurements indicate promising results.

Soviet Youths Put End to Life Without Hope

Press dispatches report an epidemic of suicides among the youth in certain parts of Russia. A "League of Death," which caused eleven young Communists to take their own lives during the last summer and autumn, has been discovered in the far off town of Liesva, in the Urals. Suicides of some of the most active members of the local branch of the Communist youth had been occurring for several months before it was realized that the movement for self-destruction was organized. The results of an investigation have been published in detail in the Moscok Communist Youth Pravda. Inquiries revealed that a pessimistic atmosphere had suddenly enveloped in its black folds a large section of the most intelligent young people. They assembled to read strange poetry and to discuss the futility of existence and of striving. They decided that life was not worth living and glorified death as the only sensible and beautiful thing.

Unusual Mineral Deposit

During the World war a prospector searching an old tunnel near Libby, Mont., noticed flakes of a coarse mica-like mineral that writhed and swelled enormously when touched by the flame of his candle. The flaky mineral proved to be vermiculite, which further examination showed to be present in great quantities. Vermiculite is applied to a group of minerals that expand and give off water upon heating. The name arises from the fact that some members of the group open into long, wormlike threads. The heated and expanded material is very light, exhibits a golden or silvery luster, and appears to have very low heat conductivity. These properties suggest possible important uses, says Geological Survey.

A DAY'S VACATION

Mrs. J. G. Nelson

"Oh, Mother," cried John as he rushed into the kitchen where his mother was just beginning to attack the pile of breakfast dishes, "Daddy and I are going to the river to fish. Put us up a lunch quick, please."

"I haven't anything cooked for a lunch. Why didn't you tell me last night that you were going, so that I could have prepared somthing?" answered his mother.

"Give us some bacon and eggs to cook and some bread. I wish you would go with us, Mother. Sister is crying so hard to go, but Daddy told her she couldn't unless you went, and that you were too busy to go," said John.

"Well, I am busy. I haven't done any of my morning's work and this is ironing day, and I want to bake a cake, for tomorrow Aunt Sarah is coming for lunch."

"Sister and I will make the beds and Daddy will sweep, while you hurry and dress. Let the ironing go; I like to wear my shirts and overalls not ironed. Aunt Sarah has cake at home every day. We have so much fun in the woods. Come on and go with us," argued John.

Mrs. Robinson looked at him thoughtfully. "I believe I will," she said. With a half reluctant glance at the pile of unwashed dishes, she began to pack bacon, eggs, a jar of butter, another of jam and bread in a box. Then she went to her room to change to her outing clothes. The beds had been made and the floor swept, but in a hasty manner.

"I can't leave my house this way," she thought. "Aunt Sarah might come today."

She started to the door to give John the lunch and to tell him that she would not go. But a glance at Sarah's radiantly happy face as she danced up and down the hall, made the mother change her mind again. Soon she and the happy little girl joined the others at the car, where John was packing in the fishing tackle and bait.

A short drive brought them to the river. The hooks were made ready and in a very little while they were all trying their luck in the water. As the restful stillness of the woods stole over Mrs. Robinson, she forgot her household cares and entered into the spirit of play with her family.

Such an exciting moment when Sister caught her fish! Then Mother caught the largest one of them all. How good were the bacon and eggs cooked on a camp fire, with jam sandwiches for dessert and how many interesting things they saw in a walk down the river! Time to go home came entirely too soon.

"It has been the happiest day I ever had," confided Sister to John as they were washing the breakfast dishes while their mother cooked the fish for supper, "and Mother says that we are going with you every time you and Daddy go this summer."

LABORATORY METHOD IN RELIGION

A very interesting experiment along the lines of supplying modern service in Protestant churches is being watched with keen interest in the National Capitol. Reverend Moses R. Lovell, an energetic young preacher, leads the movment, which he started in a leading Congregational Church in Washington, of which he is pastor, last winter. He based the work on the theory that a confidential clinic, presided over by a staff that includes physicians, psychiatrists, social workers, and various specialists capable of giving advice, should be able to meet a modern need of Protestantism in supplying a service similar to that of the Roman Catholic Church. Reverend Lovell proceeded to prove that such a clinic would be "an extension of the arm of the ministry."

Nearly 200 persons accepted the invitation, and confided their "complexes," and difficulties, to the specialists who volunteered their services in aid of the new "laboratory method in religion."

The clinic produced a city-wide discussion and there was unanimous approval among Protestants of the Lovell idea. A citizens committee of twenty-five which includes the names of nationally known public officials, scientists, educators and professional and business men and women, has been organized this month, and it will sponsor the movement which will henceforth be known as the Washington Life Adjustment Center.

The Washington newspapers have all commented favorably on the movement, even to the extent of publishing special Sunday feature articles explaining what the Congregational minister hopes to accomplish. The Literary Digest gave a very prominent place to it in a recent issue, and the snowball of publicity is continuing to roll with the result that correspondents and news letter syndicates are calling attention to the modern experiment in behalf of Protestantism service.

WHEN WE FOLLOW THE GYPSY TRAIL

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

With the coming of warm weather, our love of the outdoors makes us receptive to the friendly call of the road, and the urge to take to the open is irresistible, if only for a few hours.

On such expeditions a few simple camping utensils and a well-stocked emergency shelf enable one to arrange delightful picnic meals on short notice. Foods may be prepared at home and carried in a small fireless cooker, or reheated over a campfire or small portable alcohol stove. A long-handled corn popper serves admirably as a broiler for bacon or steak, or to toast crackers or bread. Other useful utensils for camping are thermos bottles, coffee pot, can opener, corkscrew, sharp knife, long-nandled spoon and cake turner.

Here are several delicious out-of-door menus!

Deviled Cheese—Mash half-pound rich American cheese. Mix with 1 tablespoon butter, two teaspoons tarragon vinegar, dash of cayenne and 1 teaspoon each of sugar, prepared mustard and Worcestershire sauce. Prepare in advance and carry in glass jar. Toast large soda crackers in corn popper and while hot spread with cheese mixture and serve.

Broiled Bacon and Olives—Roll a thin strip of bacon around a stuffed olive, fasten with toothpick and broil over campfire in corn popper or on end of long, slender stick. Serve in rolls.

Apple Butter Cookies—2 cups brown sugar; 1 cup butter or lard; 1 whole egg; flour; 1 cup sour milk; 1 level teaspoon soda; 1 level teaspoon salt; apple butter.

Cream sugar and butter, or lard. Add egg, well beaten. Add sour milk mixed with soda and salt. Add enough flour to make soft dough. Roll dough to ⅛ inch thickness, shape with cooky cutter and cover with cooky of equal size. Press edges together and bake in moderate oven.

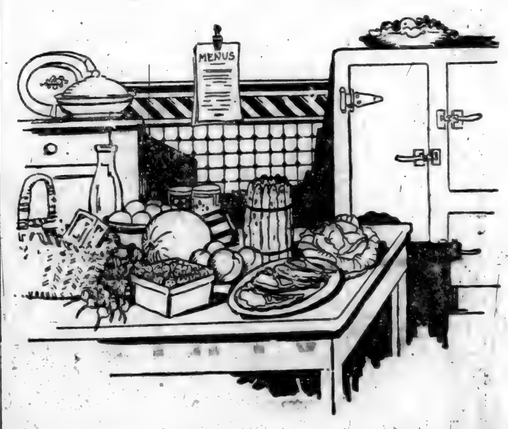
EASIER WAYS OF MARKETING

By KATHERINE G. CORNELL
Director of the Kelvinator Domestic Institute



"BUT where is the man who can live without eating?" asks the poet. And many of us who are not poets, in any sense of the word, would like to reply: "Where is the man who would live without eating." For we must admit that food constitutes one of the most important as well as the most pleasurable adjuncts of life.

Food supplies the material needs of our bodies, and its purchase and preparation, therefore, is of universal interest. Much has been said of the romance of cookery, and more might be added about the fascination of marketing. But, to the woman who must market every day because delicate fruits and vegetables will not remain plump and fresh under ordinary conditions for a longer time, marketing soon ceases to be a fascinating occupation and becomes an irksome task.

Dry groceries, and sturdy root vegetables she may buy in quantities. But meat, milk, eggs and delicate vegetables and fruits must be purchased afresh every day, under ordinary conditions, if they are to be fine of flavor and texture, wholesome and good.

Can Buy in Quantity

Since the advent of electric refrigeration, however, marketing advantages have changed surprisingly. Where the home is equipped with this scientific ice-box, it is possible to lay in a stock of even the most fragile fruits, and perishable meats, of eggs, and even of milk, to last for several days, a week, or for even longer periods. The uniform, dry, cold air of the electric refrigerator safeguards these delicate products and keeps them in perfect condition until they are required for the table.

This improved method of buying is most satisfactory, for it means a considerable saving in the cost of these most important items of food, since it is possible now to buy them at quantity prices. It means, too, a saving of the housewife's time and effort; which also is an important consideration. The time saved by marketing once or twice a week, in place of every day, as formerly, is not to be despised by any woman.

Menu Planning Easier

Quantity buying has the added advantage, too, of making menu planning not only a much easier and more economical proceeding, but a far more interesting one as well. Arranging the menus for several days in advance, when one has the contents of the faithful electric refrigerator to select from, is really a most absorbing undertaking.

With pencil and paper, the housewife takes careful note of her food supply and then, when the menus are prepared, they are posted near the refrigerator for later consultation. It all goes so smoothly that there is no last minute hustle or bustle, no wondering what to have, no wasted food or effort. Truly, the household which has installed an electric refrigerator of the proper kind has eliminated the word "drudgery" from its glossary of cooking terms.

It is a delightful matter to add some specially dainty little touch to the menu when one has electricity at one's beck and call—and the family may have a surprise dish to make it happy nearly every day.

OBITUARY

Lester Curie, of Tulsa, Oklahoma. first son of William and Delora Curie, was born March 20, 1886, at St. Joe, Indiana, and died at 5:45 o'clock Wednesday evening,, July 17, 1929 at the Lutheran Hospital, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Approximately six weeks ago, Lester was confined in the Morningside Hospital, at Tulsa, suffering a critical infection, which gradually grew to a vitally serious condition. Upon the advice of his doctors, his many close friends of Tulsa and the request of his parents, Lester was brought nearer home to Fort Wayne on July 11.

The medical cause of his death, as pronounced by four doctors, was carcinoma.

Lester was a graduate of the St. Joe High School, the International Business College and was associated with the Mossman Yarnelle Co. at Fort Wayne after his graduation. His successful work and excellent record with this company resulted in an opportunity to enter the banking business and through the direction of the late Beeks Erick, he became associated with the Union Trust Bank at Tulsa in 1906. After four yeears of banking, he entered the oil producing business in which he was engaged until his death.

In 1917 upon the entry of the United States in the World War, Lester volunteered in the First Officers Reserve Corp training camp at Fort Roots, Arkansas, where he served for several months.

After his period of serivce in the Officers Reserve Corps, he was with the McMann Oil & Gas Co., J. Arthur Hull, the Charles Page interests and since 1921 Lester has been associated with T. J. Wood.

In early life Lester became a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, the family faith.

During his residence at Tulsa, he was a member of the Elks Club.

Th writer of this record of the life of Lester Curie has no wish to emphasize, unduly, his quality—his character—his ability. It is a simple fact, that his family, his relatives and his friends and associates know that he possessed the highest type of manhood, strict integrity, sincere and loyal devotion to his business and social affairs.

Lester Curie needs no granite monument. He has built his own in the hearts of his family and the affections of his many close friends.

Four of his friends from Tulsa, Ross Raeburn, Tom Wood, Warren Guiss and Clyde McMichael have come 1,000 miles to be with him today. Gaylord Morton of Indianapolis and Ted Erick of Fort Wayne have come to help him.

His immediate survivors, the parents Mr .and Mrs. Wm. Curie, his brothers, Elgin and Paul, his relatives and his friends mourn his departure.

The body of Lester rests in peace and his soul marches bravely on to a brighter Infinite.

The following excerpt from a poem by Browning was often quoted by Lester:

The Year is at the Spring,
And day is at the Morn,
Morning is at Eleven,
The hillside is dew pearled, the lark is on the wing,
The snail is on the thorn,
God's in His heaven. All's well with the World.

A TRIBUTE

We, who are here from Tulsa to attend the final ceremony for our dear friend and brother, Lester Curie, wish to give public expression of our love and esteem for him; dedicating it to his parents, brothers and boyhood friends in the town in which he was reared.

All of us have known him for a long time—none less than fifteen and some more than twenty years. During this time some of us have lived with him, we have all worked and played together. Collectively and individually, many interesting experiences and incidents can be recalled. These include successes and reverses, joys and sorrows, and other impulses which naturally occur in the course of our lives. At no time has Lester ever failed to be a faithful and loyal friend, ready to sympathize and assist when needed, or to rejoice and share in successes when realized.

His personality was engaging and interesting, making friends easily and keeping them without effort. Unusually modest and reticent as to his own qualifications and attainments, and charitable and understanding of the misfortunes and frailties of others. His standard of conduct and ethics was of the highest and at no time during all of our association with him did he ever waver from the course of integrity and honor.

In addition to ourselves, Lester had many friends and acquaintances in Tulsa, where he lived ever since leaving his boyhood home, in fact, many more than the average person in private life enjoys. These were not acquired by any special effort, but by the every day contacts met in the pursuit of one's affairs. To be noble and manly may come to some people naturally but more frequently it is the training and teaching received during boyhood which is responsible and these traits can usually be traced to a home influence. Luck may make a rich man, but it cannot make a gentleman, nor does culture and refinement come by accident. His boyhood instructions and admonitions he carried with him throughout his life. In the midst of his deepest grief, his parents can with pride, be comforted in knowing that their teachings were not in vain.

We mourn the passing of a very dear friend. May he rest in peace.

Dodge Car Stolen Monday Morning

From Virgil Bassett; No Clues Revealed. Other Merchants Have Loss

Virgil Bassett suffered a heavy loss of his Dodge car being stolen early Monday morning by some unknown persons. An entrance was made to the garage by breaking out a back window. All the gas obtainable from other cars in the garage was put into the Dodge, a good supply of oil was taken in order to carry them on their journey.

Possibly the breaking into the garage was the last place entered before their get away.

The glass in the ticket windows at the B. & O. was carefully removed and laid on the floor and every draw was ransacked for money. Several boxes of freight were opened, but nothing was taken out.

The Curie Implement store was entered by smashing glass in a rear door. Cigars were taken besides every draw in the store was searched for cash. Every door in the store was left open.

Mr. Curie came to his store about one o'clock finding that the place had been looted. He stated that as he was coming down street a car came out of the street north and turned east at a rapid speed, which was no doubt the robbers making their get away.

Sheriff Armstrong was called when all the places were discovered being broken into, but as yet no clues have been reported.

A window in Zonker's store was also broken but it is thought that the robbers did not enter.

ONE of these evenings, when you're exhausted from the heat, how would you like to sit down to a dinner like this? An ice-cold fruit cup, jellied chicken and ham, a salad of crisp lettuce with a stuffed tomato in aspic. And, for dessert, a strawberry sundae. Tempting, isn't it?

All the real work can be done in the morning. Then your General Electric Refrigerator will do the rest.

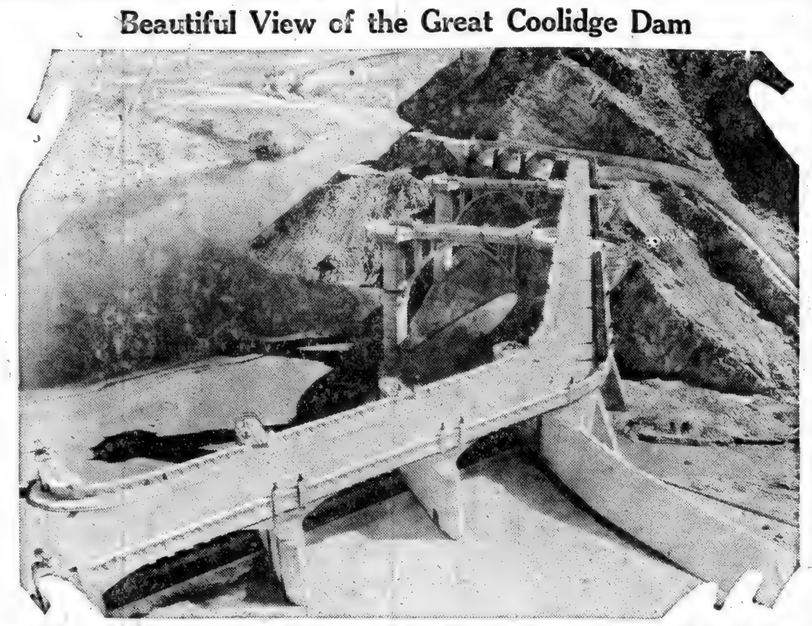
Beautiful View of the Great Coolidge Dam



Here is a remarkable view of the new Coolidge dam on the Gila river in the heart of the San Carlos Apache Indian reservation in Arizona. It is the first multiple dome dam ever built. It impounds 1,200,000 acre-feet of water to irrigate 100,000 acres of desert land, generates 15,000 horse power of electricity, and provides a great bridge for the transcontinental automobile highway.

Lincoln Memorial Bridge Is Completed

This is the new Abraham Lincoln Memorial bridge which spans the Missouri river between Blair, Neb., and Missouri Valley, Iowa, which will be formally opened and dedicated on Friday, July 26, with Gov. John Hammill of Iowa and Gov. A. J. Weaver of Nebraska participating. Tom Osterman, editor of the Blair Pilot-Tribune, is president of the dedication committee. This bridge makes a cut-off on the Lincoln highway, shortening the route by 28 miles.

SUMMER GRID COACH

Bob Zuppke, for sixteen years a coach at the University of Illinois, is shown teaching Barkham Garner, a San Diego (Calif.) State college student how to "hit 'em low." Football is simple, Zuppke says, if players will only use their head, keeping it down, tackling low and turning their face in toward the knee. Zuppke gave a summer course on the sand of the Pacific at Coronado, Calif., where eighty California college boys learned something of the Illinois "system."

THE STORY OF DANIEL

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:1-4, 19, 20; 2:17-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Boy Who Obeyed.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Boy Who Obeyed.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Preparing for a Life Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Character and Career of Daniel.

I. Daniel in Captivity (1:1-4).

His captivity took place in the third year of Jehoiakim's reign by Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon. While a tender youth, he was torn from home ties and made a captive in a foreign land to be trained for court service.

II. Daniel in Training (1:5-20).

In order to be of the largest service in the kingdom, it was necessary that he be taught to love the king and nation and to be detached from his own people and religion.

1. Daily portion of the king's meat and drink appointed (v. 5).

The object of this was:

(1) To gain the good will of Daniel. Such recognition would encourage him to give himself to the king's service.

(2) To supply the proper food for his physical and intellectual growth.

2. His name changed (v. 7).

He was named Belteshazzar. The object in this change was the obliteration of national and religious connections, and his identification with the Babylonian nation. Daniel means, God is my judge. Belteshazzar means, Bel's Prince.

3. Daniel's purpose of heart (v. 8).

Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat and wine. He requested to be tested for ten days with the food which the law of his God allowed, agreeing to abide by the results.

4. Daniel's reward (vv. 15-20).

(1) Physical health (v. 15). The king's meat and wine would have been palatable, but to have partaken would have violated his conscience.

(2) Mental growth (vv. 17-20). He was found to be ten times wiser than the magicians and astrologers.

(3) Socially (v. 19). He was not only next to the king, but president of the college of wise men and prime minister of the empire, continuing through several dynasties (v. 21).

(4) Spiritual (v. 17).

God revealed to him Nebuchadnezzar's dream and gave visions stretching across the centuries. The secret of Daniel's success was:

a. Conscientiousness.
b. Loyalty to God.
c. Decision of character.
d. Prayerfulness.
e. Patience.
f. Courtesy.

III. Daniel Interpreting Nebuchadnezzar's Dream (2:14-46).

1. The dream revealed (vv. 14-35).

Nebuchadnezzar had a dream which made a tremendous impression on his mind, but its content had been forgotten. He urgently demanded of the wise men that they make known the dream and its interpretation. Because of their failure to do so the king was furious and commanded all the wise men of Babylon to be slain. Daniel sought an interview with the king and obtained time. In answer to prayer, God gave to Daniel the content of the dream. He told the king that in his dream he had beheld a great image with a head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet part of iron and part of clay. He beheld this image smitten by a stone which became a great mountain.

2. The dream interpreted (vv. 36-46).

(1) The head of gold represented the Chaldean monarchy, with Nebuchadnezzar as its head (vv. 37, 38).

(2) The breast and arms of silver represented the Medo-Persian power (v. 39).

(3) The belly and thighs of brass represented the Grecian empire under Alexander the Great (v. 39).

(4) The legs of iron represented the Roman empire (vv. 40-43).

(5) The stone cut out of the mountain (vv. 44, 45). This is the Kingdom of Heaven so graphically set forth in the New Testament.

a. The stone is Christ (Isa. 28:16; Matt. 21:42-44).

b. When did the stone strike? Observe that the impact upon this man was upon his feet (v. 34).

c. The Kingdom of Heaven is brought into realization through a great catastrophe.

Accepting Christ

We urge men to accept Christ, to accept Him now, and they say, "Well, we will think about it," or "Yes, I know it ought to be attended to." Why, you wouldn't act that way five minutes about your health or your wife's health, or your business.—Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock.

Trust the Creator

All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all I have not seen.—Emerson.

SUMMER HATS IN VARIED MOOD; TYPICAL DINE AND DANCE FROCK

Some of the Summer Hats.

MILLINERS are gradually growing more liberal-minded in regard to the use of trimming on milady's chapeau. Note the word "gradually" for it is a slow process, this of reviving interest in trimmed millinery. After the despotic and long-continued reign of the "tricky" little untrimmed felt, it is bound to take time for women to come out from under its sway.

Among midsummer collections there is considerable reaction of the "eternal feminine" to the call of lace, ribbon and flower adornment. Especially is lace lending its enchantment to current hat fashions. Considering that this is a "lace season" it could not be otherwise that creators of the hat beautiful should incorporate lace into its making.

In many instances so adroitly does the modiste introduce lace, it becomes a very part of the hat rather than giving the appearance of applied trimming. One sees this to a fascinating degree in colored felts which have insets of matching lace worked into the very structure of the shape. One very charming method is to form the long side of the felt brim of stiffened lace, after the manner of the modish hat shown centered to the right in the picture. The original model photographed here happens to be black, but the idea is just as often carried out in beige, or grayish green, porcelain blue, or any of the newer shades.

Thin, filmy mesh stretched over smooth straws or felts is another favored lace treatment. The exotic linenlike straws such as bakou and batibunti make an inviting background for lace thus manipulated. Sometimes the lace is drawn taut all over the top of the hat, or perhaps just the crown is covered, or the brim. Often the brim of a large picture shape is lined with lace. A beguiling use of fine black lace is made in the instance of the natural bangkok bonnet illustrated to the left center of this group in the upper picture.

Sprightly ribbon bows for hats of more or less tailored aspect give an air of piquancy to any number of the newer felt and straw modes. The cloche with a cluster of loops and banded as shown on the model below to the left is a favorite type among those who sponsor ribbon trims.

Much is being said in favor of the long-side off-the-face shapes. Completing the group in the picture you see one of these very recent silhouettes, its charm accented by a perky bow placed just over the left eye.

Multicolored grosgrain ribbon trims the wee cloche at the top.

Sheer, sleeveless and flounced, with color enchantment its chief asset, cleverly tells the story in brief of the typical dine and dance frock as it registers on the summer program. Perhaps it is the very simplicity of frocks such as this which has captured the heart of fashion's clientele. At any rate, no modern, young or young-plus can boast of a perfectly appointed wardrobe, unless just such a frock as here pictured is included in her dress collection.

The tone-and-tint role played by these utterly feminine frocks is endless. One simply decides on her favorite color—the one most becoming and there's no doubt about finding the chiffon or georgette in the wanted shade.

An idea which is being followed by certain color enthusiasts is the matching of one's chiffon frock to the color of one's eyes. Try it. In the fabric field there are chiffons to match eyes of hazel brown, and brown is wonderfully chic this season. The color card is largely given over to ravishing blues, prominent among which are the very light blues which Paris acclaims for evening wear. Milady fair whose eyes are blue, will find that the new and lovely blues will prove a happy choice for her next chiffon party dress.

A color especially highlighted for boudoir, beach and sports clothes, also ultra formal attire, is yellow. Maize to pumpkin yellow and allied shades of chartreuse, lime and citron are everywhere in the summer landscape. Quite the newest color note for chiffon gown is smoke gray.

The styling of the dress pictured is typical of the general trend for chiffons—a few flounces placed low on a bodice which suggests the new princess lines. The latest maneuver of hemlines is to dip almost with the effect of a short train at the back, as does the one in the picture. No sleeves, of course, not that sleevelessness is confined to evening mode, for without sleeves is the message for every hour from morning to midnight.

"It's not your fault, old man," I said after a moment's silence, trying dismally to be cheerful. "The lead looked good. We followed it because we hoped it would make you rich. We failed, and that's that."

Betty stared wildly from one to the other of us.

"You all make me tired," she exclaimed. "Why should we give up hope? How long have we looked, so far? What—Oh, let me by! I must think!"

She brushed by me into the fake passage, and the echo of her footfalls reached us as she ascended to the garden.

"We might as well follow her," said Hugh. "I'm awfully sorry, you chaps. You risked your lives for this rotten show. My poor deluded ancestor! I expect most of these buried treasure stories are bunk, anyway. In fact, I have a dim recollection of telling poor Uncle James as much. And there's another thing to make the gods laugh! A fine old cock like Uncle James devoting his whole life to following a will-o'-the-wisp—and then losing it for nothing. It—it's—oh, H—l, I suppose it's really funny!"

We climbed wearily up the thirty steps to the garden level. As I reached the surface the first object my eyes encountered was Betty, sitting on the red stone and poring over a sheet of paper.

"Hullo!", she called, loking up with all her accustomed vivacity. "Do you recognize this paper, Hugh?"

She fluttered it at him.

"Looks like my handwriting," he admitted.

"It's the copy of the instructions you sent me, which I remailed to myself Poste Restante. I remembered it this morning when we were in Pera and called for it at the post office while you were packing the bags at the hotel. I thought we might need it."

"What good can it do?" asked Hugh heavily.

"There's an important point in it, which nobody has appreciated up to this time. It becomes doubly important in view of what we have just seen."

"The elided portion!" exclaimed Nikka.

"Exactly! Look!"

And she spread the paper before us. Hugh had faithfully copied his uncle's translation of the old Latin, setting down also the several lines of dots by which Lord Chesby had indicated the words which had been smudged out by moisture and handling at some past time. They appeared, you will recall at the conclusion of the explicit directions:

"Underfoot is a red stone an all square. Raise the—"

And then nothing distinguishable until the concluding line of farewell.

"Well?" demanded Betty triumphantly as we all studied the cryptic dots.

Hugh shook his head.

Betty, you were a brick to remember it," he said, "but honestly, what use is it? Whatever words are missing are unimportant. They must have been or somebody would have rewritten them."

"That does not necessarily follow," spoke up Vernon King. "Old documents, especially those inscribed on parchment, are tricky records. It frequently happens that some isolated portion will be spoiled, while the other parts of the same sheet may retain their integrity. Moreover, we should not lose sight of the possibility that the person who last concealed the parchment, the Lady Jane Chesby of whom you have spoken, seems not to have been inclined to attach much importance to it. She would have been the last one to attempt to make good its deficiencies."

"But where could the treasure be that we have not looked?" demanded Hugh. "The directions are explicit. We followed them faithfully. So far as they exist we have verified their accuracy. But we have uncovered no place which could have served as a treasure chamber."

"Yes, Hugh, the directions are explicit," retorted Betty. "And as you say, so far as we have them they have proved correct. They left us in the passage under the red stone which ends at the drain. And why was that passage built? Why, to get into the drain!"

"And the treasure was in the drain?" protested Hugh. "That's absurd, Bet."

"It would have been washed away long ago," I scoffed. "That place is full of water at very high tides."

"I didn't say it was heaped on the flood and left there," returned Betty.

"Where would it be?" asked Nikka.

"That's what we have to find out."

"What about the grating in the floor of the dungeon?" I cut in. "If they wanted to get into the drain—"

"But no man who had hidden a treasure in the drain would have relied on a drainage grating in a dungeon for means of access to it," answered Betty.

"That dungeon was a place for getting rid of special prisoners," interrupted King. "When the drain was actively in use, the water must often have backed up into the dungeon. I agree with Elizabeth that an emperor hiding a vast treasure would not have utilized the grating for access to it."

Nikka closed the argument.

"I am on Betty's side in this," he said. "At the least, she has given us something definite to work on. Now, if you will take my advice, Hugh, you and Professor King, with Betty and Jack to help you, will be the treasure-hunting squad. I had best remain here to act as expeditionary liaison officer with Wasso Mikail and his people at need. And if you don't mind, I'll need Watkins as galloper."

Every one agreed to this plan, and the four of us immediately descended into the passage again. King made a careful study of the stonework, in which I assisted him, with a view to ascertaining beyond any doubt whether there was any sealed opening in its walls. Both of us considered this the logical first step, but Hugh and Betty wearied of so unexciting a task and left us to explore the upper end of the drain.

We had been at this for rather more than an hour, without the faintest hint of success, when we were interrupted by a hail from Hugh.

"Professor! Jack! Come here!"

"Oh, dad," called Betty, "here's a funny inscription on the wall."

We dropped into the water, and waded inland for some twenty-odd paces to where they were standing, with their torches bearing on a patch of marble let into the rough face of the right-hand wall. Hugh was working with his knife-point, scraping away the moss and fungi that partially obscured the letters.

"I saw it by accident," bubbled Betty. "We went up a long way to where the roof gets much lower, and we heard water rushing ahead of us, so Hugh said we ought to turn back. My light just happened to catch on this piece of stone here as we passed it. There was one row of letters quite clear, but the others were all overgrown with this slimy stuff. What does it say, dad?"

"It's Greek, right enough," added Hugh, still scraping industriously. "I can make out a word here and there, but it doesn't seem to be the same language I boned at school. Just a moment, sir, and I'll have the whole inscription cleared."

I peered over their shoulders at the deeply-carved lines of angular characters.

The Stone Was About Three or Four Feet Square, and Below It Was Another Similar One.

"Most amazing!" he muttered to himself.

"What is it, dad?" clamored Betty.

"But it can't be," he said, shaking his head. "Quite extraordinary! Dear me, I never saw this formula before."

"For Pat's sake, tell us!" I implored.

"It says nothing about the treasure, my dear boys," he answered sadly. "My surprise was called forth by the unusual form of expression. These inscriptions always follow a certain set phraseology, but this one is strikingly different."

"By gum," groaned Betty inelegantly. "Isn't this the limit?"

"Read it anyway," I urged.

Hugh was beyond words.

"It says," began King, "and mind you, I am translating roughly—'In the year after Christ 1185 and of the Indiction 2, Andronicus, the Scepter Wielder, Christ-loving Emperor of the Romans, built this drain new from the tide level.'"

He broke off.

"So far it is no different from thousands of other inscriptions we might find on the city walls, aqueducts, cisterns, churches or other public works. But now comes the part I cannot understand: 'If there were tongues, many might praise him.'"

"'If there were tongues many might praise him,'" repeated Betty.

"What does it matter?" said Hugh dispiritedly. "We're not interested in whether or not the subjects of the Emperor Andronicus were anxious to praise him. I could curse him for putting a cock-and-bull story on my foolish ancestor."

"'If there were tongues many might praise him,'" repeated Betty again. "And it was the Emperor Andronicus! The same, daddy? The one the Instructions speak about?"

"Manifestly, my dear, the date certifies to that."

"Then there must be something in it," she insisted. "'If there were tongues many might praise him.' Don't you see what it means? There were no tongues to praise him. This work was not known at the time. Why? And why was he able to keep it a secret?"

"He may have murdered all the workmen," replied her father slowly. "He was a singularly bloody tyrant, according to the contemporary historians."

"Exactly," triumphed Betty. "And why would he have murdered them, in order to keep this work a secret? You see, he 'built the drain new from the tide-level,' probably to this point. That means there was a drain, but it needed repair, and he seized the opportunity to hide his treasure. Hugh, where are those tools? I'm going to get this stone out of the wall."

It was as hard a job as we tackled, despite the softening of the mortar by the moisture of the ages; but after two hours, Hugh and Vernon King were able to pry the slab loose and it fell out with a mighty splash. Hugh thrust in the end of the crowbar, and it struck brickwork. Our torches showed this to be very flimsy, and when it was pounded it rang hollow. The three of us who had two arms apiece went at it with a will, and I was dispatched for reinforcements.

Nikka refused to come himself, but he sent Watty, and the valet helped in the final act of demolition. By the end of the afternoon we had smashed through an embrasure nearly three feet high and four feet long, and Hugh nominated Betty for the honor of leading the way into the dim passage which abutted on the hole. The rest of us crawled in afterward. My uncle and Watkins boosted me up, for my bad shoulder hindered me.

The passage was seven feet high and four feet wide. It led straight back between brick walls into a large chamber the roof of which was upheld by brick piers. The place was musty, fetid even, and very damp, but as our torches struggled through the darkness the rays were captured and juggled by glinting, sheeny heaps that were stacked against the piers and walls. Betty started forward involuntarily. There was a slurring sound, and then a tiny tinkling that died away in a faint murmurous ss-ssh.

"It's gold!" she cried.

We flushed our torches right and left. It was true. Great golden piles sloped away from us. The fragments of the bags that once had held this wealth projected from the multitude of coins. At the end of the chamber the piles mounted to the roof. There were stray rivulets of gold that trickled almost to the mouth of the passage. To the left stood several tiers of ancient chests. The first yielded at once to the point of Hugh's knife. The rotten wood cut like cardboard. When he flung the lid back it fell apart, but we scarcely noticed it for the dazzling glamor of the gems that seemed almost to fight to escape from their centuries-long imprisonment.

Jewels and jewelry and massive plate were heaped in indiscriminate confusion, huge salvers, cups, chalices, amphorae, bracelets, armlets, amulets, brooches, necklaces, rings beyond number—and running in and out of the set stones, the endless profusion of unmounted gems, diamonds, amethysts rubies, opals, pearls, sapphires, topazes, garnets, turquoises, emeralds, and others I could not name.

I picked up what had been a king's crown, a barbaric headdress of crude unalloyed gold, red and soft, set with enormous uncut stones. Next to it was a chased bracelet that might have come from the goldsmiths' shops of Athens in the classic age. The quantity of precious things was almost inconceivable. And this was but one of a score of chests.

King stooped and scooped up a handful of gold pieces from the floor. Broad, finely minted, bearing the double-headed eagle of Byzantium and the busts and figures of dead-and-gone emperors.

"Was there ever such a find?" he muttered. "What a chance for the numismatists! See! Here is a bysant of Artavasdos the Usurper. I never saw one before. It was not known that he had coined money. And here is the likeness of Arcadius, first of the Eastern emperors."

Betty threw her arms around Hugh, as shameless, for the moment, as Kara.

"Oh, I'm so glad!" she murmured. "It's as much as you thought it would be, isn't it?"

Hugh was dazed.

"As much? By Jove, sweetheart, I—I never dreamed of anything like this! I—really, you know, I didn't honestly believe in it before. I used to pretend to make myself carry on. I told myself it was up to me to see the thing through on Uncle James' account. But—this! I say, professor, how much do you suppose there is here?"

Vernon King swept his torch in an arc around the chamber, the extreme confines of which were shrouded in shadow.

"I am no fiscal expert, my dear boy. It would take a committee of jewelers to assess those chests alone. As for the gold, I have seen the treasury vaults in Washington, and gold mounts up fast when you run into the thousands of pounds avoirdupois. Just as a wild guess, I might hazard a minimum of $100,000,000, £20,000,000, at normal exchange."

"But it can't be!" I protested, the sweat beading my forehead at the thought. "Why, it's ridiculous. They didn't have wealth on such a scale in those days."

"Not at all, Jack," returned my uncle, his scholar's pride aroused. "You must remember that you are reviewing here the hoard accumulated by a Roman emperor, one of the last rulers before the definite initiation of the empire's final collapse. It was then still by far the richest country of which we have any record. According to Benjamin of Tudela, the Jewish traveler of the Twelfth century, the revenue received by the emperor from the city of Constantinople by itself amounted to 7,300,000 numismata, or in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

"Benjamin and other later authorities, Andreades, Paparrhegopulos, Kalligas, assert the revenue derived from the remainder of the empire to have represented five times this sum. At the most moderate computation, the total revenue of the empire must have exceeded $120,000,000. It was probably very much more. In addition, the wealth of the individual citizens and nobles was enormous. The Emperor Andronicus, with whose efforts we have to deal here, had two years to milk the country's wealth. During those two years, he not only absorbed the taxes, but confiscated the wealth of more nobles than any ruler prior to that period.

"I should not be greatly surprised if the contents of this chamber was discovered to exceed $125,000,000. Andronicus was possessed with a mania for accumulating a treasure for rebuilding the empire. If he—"

"If you aren't very lucky, Hugh, you are going to lose all this stuff just because you were lucky enough to find it," said Nikka's voice behind us.

We turned to confront him. Kara's dark, passionate face was at his shoulder. Her eyes drank in the picture, and she stood on her tiptoes to whisper in Nikka's ear.

"No, thank you, my dear," he answered dryly. "She suggests that I give her my knife, and that between us we clean up you people. Oddly enough, she is not alone in possessing that idea. Who do you suppose is upstairs?"

"Mrs. Hilyer," I exclaimed.

"Right. But she's not alone. She came back with Mahkout Pasha. I've got them both safe under lock and key, with Wasso Mikail's knife at their throats. Still—"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"Out of the frying-pan into the fire, your lordship," remarked Watkins glumly. "Sure I was, this was too good to last."

CHAPTER XIV

Antiques, Statuary, Chgs. Pd., With Care

Reluctantly and with many a backward look, we retired from that glimmering vault of wealth, and climbed to the atrium. We were all soaked to the waist and suddenly conscious of the fatigue of the last two crowded days. Personally, I felt that I had reached the limit. I didn't care what happened. I thought that we were in a hopeless fix. Vernon King was equally morose. Betty was ready to weep. Nikka was sardonically amused at our ill-luck. Kara was indifferent, so long as Nikka refused to embark upon a scheme of wholesale murder in order to impound the treasure for themselves alone. Watty was tiredly hopeless. Only Hugh squared his jaw and said nothing.

"I'll have the precious pair fetched in if you like," volunteered Nikka as we sat about the room. "But I don't see the use. I've talked to them, and I can assure you they aren't in a mood to be agreeable. Mrs. Hilyer is consumed with revenge. She isn't thinking of anything else. She just wants to get back at us. Mahkout is politely threatening. He figures that he has us on the hip because of the killings last night—murder of his imperial majesty's subjects and all that. He talked about international complications, and lawlessness."

Printer Also Had a Proposition to Make

It seems that a printer somewhere down in Texas got slightly peeved at a letter from a doctor who wanted bids on several thousand letterheads and statements, different sizes, different grades of paper and printed in various colors; with the request that the forms be kept standing for possible reprint orders.

So Mr. Printer diagnosed the case carefully and answered something in this manner:

"Am in the market for bids on one operation for appendicitis—one, two, and five-inch incision, with and without nurse. If appendix is found to be sound, want quotations to include putting same back and canceling order. If removed, successful bidder is expected to hold incision open for about sixty days, as I expect to be in the market for an operation for gallstones at that time and want to save the cost of cutting."—Forbes Magazine.

POULTRY FACTS

TURKEYS PAY IF GIVEN GOOD CARE

Attempt to Keep Them With Chickens Causes Failure.

Turkey raising is passing from a general farm side line to a commercial enterprise, as more farmers begin to specialize in the business.

"The coastal and mountain sections of North Carolina are rapidly becoming centers of an important specialized turkey-growing industry," says C. F. Parrish, extension poultry specialist at the North Carolina State college. "These two sections are taking the lead in production. The growers are finding that where they handle the birds with care, excellent profits may be made. One of the greatest reasons for failure is that some growers attempt to keep the turkeys with chickens and usually do not provide the turkeys with a home, with feed and care."

To begin with, the turkey grower must get started right, says Mr. Parrish. He needs to use only strong, healthy birds as breeders and to place these on clean, well drained, dry soil, where chickens have not been kept. Turkey eggs may be hatched in an incubator, under the turkey hen or under a chicken hen. Where the hen method is used, the mother bird must be dusted with sodium fluoride to control lice. This dusting should be given during the first week and again in ten or fourteen days. Use only a small pinch of the material for each hen or serious results may follow with the poults.

When the poults hatch, they should not be fed until forty-eight hours old, a little milk and green feed, such as short tender grass, lettuce or onion tops might be given. When feeding begins, the poults must be fed often, as much as five times a day in small amounts. The scratch grain is given when the poults are about one week old. Feed the mash, scratch feed and greens until the young turkeys are three weeks of age, generally increasing the scratch and getting it finally to two good feeds each day.

Early Roosting Habit Is of Great Benefit

Chicks that get the roosting habit early in life will usually grow into better chickens than those that are allowed to cuddle in crowded houses throughout the summer. Early roosting used to be considered the cause of many of the crooked breastbones in chickens. Results of proper feeding have shown that this trouble is more often caused from a deficiency of minerals in the ration or from a lack of sunshine.

With this false notion of crooked breastbones out of the argument, practically all of the benefits lie with the early training of the chicks to roost. Such chicks will be easier to handle in the fall when they are put into laying houses. They will also be less apt to crowd and become overheated, in addition to being easier to care for.

In training chicks to roost, it is a good plan to have the roosts low. Often it is necessary to place the chicks upon the roosts once or twice. Soon they will find that such roosts are much more comfortable than muddling around the hover, and they will quickly adopt the roosting habit.

Poultry Notes

Keep house and yard clean.

Build a good house or shelter.

Provide roosts and dropping boards.

Grow some green crop in the yard.

Keep the hens confined to your own land and off the road.

Don't keep a male bird. Hens lay just as well without a male.

Kamala is a good remedy for tape worms in poultry and nicotine sulphate a good remedy for other intestinal worms.

Unless eggs are produced by healthy hens under sanitary conditions, the chicks produced will be liable to the diseases of the present flock.

If you cannot get your cockerels on the market early enough to get the top broiler prices for them, caponize some of them and see what they will bring you next spring as capons.

Bright green alfalfa is a very valuable addition to the mature ducks' ration and they will relish a little of it.

Keep the hens confined to the houses when the yards are muddy; this helps to keep the hens' feet clean. Gather eggs often.

What is a fresh egg? Strictly speaking, an egg is considered fresh until it has been in storage at a temperature of 300 degrees F. at least 30 days. However, the best prices are paid for the newly laid eggs.

Mrs. Belle Ridgway, who has been visiting for some time at Hobart, Indiana, arrived home Tuesday evening. Mrs. Olive Frye and daughter accompanied Mrs. Ridgway home for a visit with relatives.

Saturday morning as the section gang was leaving the St. Joe car house, a fast freight showed up from the west and the boys had a scramble to get unloaded and their car clear of the track. No time was lost when the train whizzed by. A close call.

Mr. and Mrs. Don Blair, of Butler, Mrs. Inez Chapman and son, Max, of Fremont, Indiana, Mr. and Mrs. Darl Todd, of Kendallville, and Mrs. Rose Ramey, of Fort Wayne, were entertained at Sunday dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Akins.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Wyatt, of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Miller of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hursh and Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Andress motored to South Bend, Sunday and spent the day with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miser. Othr guests for the day were Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hizer, of Chicago, also Mr and Mrs. David Furnish and daughter, Isobel, of Detroit, who came as a complete surprise to the rest of the family. The two families had a splendid day together.

Waldo Hanna, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Hanna, living two miles north of Waterloo, drowned in the Bowman gravel pit, two miles east of Waterloo about 8:30 o'clock Monday night. The body was recovered an hour later in 15 feet of water by Fred Quance, an expert diver, from Auburn. Authorities worked over the body for an hour attempting to resuscitate him. Hanna and six or seven friends, who had been threshing during the day, went to the gravel pit for a swim.

YOUR SNEEZE MAY NOT BE FROM COLD

Draft May Have Nothing to Do With the Matter—Million Particles.

WHEN you sneeze it is not always a sign you are taking cold. That is the opinion of physicians working on public health problems in the last few years.

Most men and women when they feel that tickling in the nose or throat immediately look for the nearest door or window, convinced that they are sitting in a draft.

However, the draft, if there is one, may have nothing to do with the matter at all, physicians say. The unhappy one merely has inhaled a few million or so dust particles.

That may be true particularly of our cities where enough dust floats in the atmosphere in one year to build a cone-shaped mountain 1,500 feet high, with a five-mile diameter.

Some statistician has figured it out that if all the dust that hovers above American cities were gathered in one place, say Manhattan Island, that dust would be piled up on the streets of Manhattan to the depth of 21 feet.

But one is likely to sneeze while walking along a country road, though not quite as likely as in the city. Here the dust that is raised usually comes from dirt or gravel roads. There is, however, less likelihood of this today than ever before as highway officials now have at their command many methods for "binding" the top cover, particularly the use of such chemicals as calcium chloride, considered by engineers the best of dust layers.

KANSAS FAVORS GRAVEL HIGHWAY

THE Kansas Highway Commission has adopted a definite policy of using sand and gravel on all the roads it can improve that way for the present.

"Gravel and sand coat only $1,500 to $2,000 a mile," said John Gardner, Highway Director. "By using these materials, which are plentiful in many sections, we can build roads passable at all seasons without difficulty or long delay. They are easy and inexpensive to maintain. By using the calcium chloride, the gravel and sand are held together and the dust is obviated. Of course, these roads will have to be rebuilt in five or six years, but we feel that it is better to build that way and get as many people out of the mud as possible rather than build short stretches of more permanent and more expensive roads, just at this time."

COBURNTOWN MEETING BRINGS OLD RESIDENTS

The annual home coming sponsored by the church of the Coburntown neighborhood, brought the largest group of former residents together Sunday, that has ever attended this occasion.

Visitors from four states showed their interest in their former home community by attending the meeting at this church, which was organized in a log cabin in 1837. The regular Sunday school and church services were held in the morning with Rev. J. N. Scholes delivering the sermon.

Following a picnic dinner on the church grounds a program was givn, Rev. J. O. Rose of Angola, a former pastor of the Coburntown church, delivering the principal address. Other numbers include the Pontiac male quartet, Pontiac, Mich.; Mrs. Mildred Curie, welcome address; Miss Margaret Hamilton, musical reading; Miss Thelma Poper, Jackson, Mich., reading; and a solo by Lauren Dale Laub. A letter from Rev. T. A. Hedges, Sharon Springs, Mo., a pastor in the community more than forty years ago, was read by Clyde E Hart, chairman.

The eoldest person present was Mrs. Lemuel Farver, 88, a former rsident of the vicinity.

Practical Dishes For Busy Days

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

We suggest these recipes for easily-prepared, savoury dishes for use on busy days when dinner must be prepared at the last minute. When you have used them you will think that they are good dishes for any day!

Chili Con Carne—Brown 1 pound ground beef in skillet with 2 tablespoons fat and finely chopped onion. Season with salt and pepper, add 1 medium can Oven Baked Red Kidney Beans. Simmer for few minutes, add 1 small can Tomato Soup. Add ½ teaspoon Chili powder, cook for ten minutes. Serve with boiled or baked potatoes. (Some people prefer to omit the Chili powder).

Sausages with Kidney Beans—Brown Sausage in a skillet. Pour over it 1 can Kidney Beans and simmer or bake in slow oven for ½ hour. Place beans in center of hot platter, surround with sausages and garnish with sprigs of parsley.

Ham with Ketchup Sauce—Brown thick slice of ham in skillet, place in casserole, cover with the following sauce:

½ cup Tomato Ketchup or Chili Sauce; ½ cup cold water, 1 tablespoon Pure Vinegar; 2 teaspoons flour; 1 teaspoon sugar; ½ teaspoon Prepared Mustard.

Bake in a moderate oven or simmer until tender (about ½ hour).

Creamed Ham Patties—

1½ cups diced cold cooked ham; 2 tablespoons Stuffed Spanish Olives chopped; 2 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour; 1½ cups milk; pepper, ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce; 1 loaf bread.

Melt butter in a saucepan, add flour and stir until well blended. Add ham and seasonings to cream sauce. Cut bread in 6 slices, trim off crusts, cut in squares and hollow out center. Toast boxes thus made, fill with the creamed ham. Garnish with parsley and serve. Cold pork or veal may be prepared in the same way.

Everyday Chop Suey—

1 pound ground beef; 2 onions; 2 green peppers; 1 cup water; 3 tablespoons butter; 1 teaspoon salt; ¼ teaspoon pepper; 1 medium can Cooked Spaghetti in Tomato Sauce with Cheese.

In a skillet with butter, fry chopped onions and green pepper, until slightly brown. Add chopped meat and fry until meat browns. Add water, season with salt and pepper, simmer for 10 minutes. Add Spaghetti, allow to boil and serve.

Boston Rolls—

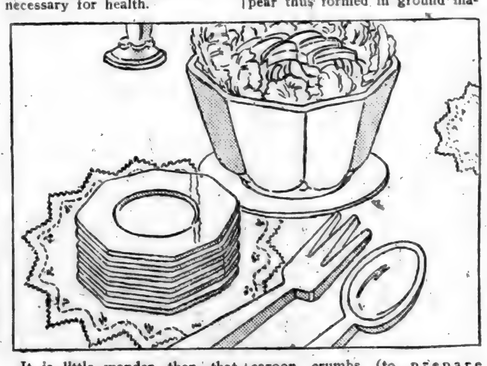
1 can Baked Beans, 1 cup grated cheese; 1 tablespoon chopped onion; 1 cup bread crumbs; ¼ cup milk.

Drain sauce from beans, chop them, add crumbs, onion, cheese, salt to taste, and enough milk to moisten. Form into small cakes or rolls, place in buttered baking dish in moderate oven for 30 minutes. Baste several times with one cup boiling water to which has been added ¼ cup Tomato Ketchup. This dish makes an excellent substitute for meat.

Cultivate The Habit Of A "Salad A Day"

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

The salad habit is growing in America. We have salads suitable for every occasion, substantial ones for the main dish of the luncheon or supper, simple salads of greens for the dinner menu, and the fancier salads for dessert or as party refreshments. Besides being attractive in appearance and appealing to the appetite, salads supply in our diets the minerals and vitamins so necessary for health.



It is little wonder, then, that when we women meet, new salad recipes are often the topic of discussion. They are a subject of genuine interest to us!

Here are a few recipes for easily prepared, attractive salads, which you will enjoy using:

Mock Salmon Salad—

2 cups carrots coarsely grated or ground; 1/2 cup chopped English walnuts; ¼ cup stuffed olives chopped; 1 green pepper chopped; 1 tablespoon preserved sweet onion chopped; ½ teaspoon salt; ½ cup well seasoned salad dressing.

Mix thoroughly and serve in nests of lettuce. Garnish with slices of stuffed olive. This makes a delicious, healthful salad, also a good sandwich spread.

Kidney Bean Salad—

2 cups Baked Red Kidney Beans; 1 cup celery, cut in pieces or cup cabbage; 2 tablespoons India relish; ½ teaspoon salt.

Put kidney beans in strainer and pour boiling water over them. Cool, mix with celery, India Relish, and salt. Moisten with well-seasoned salad dressing, chill thoroughly, and serve in beds of crisp lettuce. Garnish with slices of hard-cooked egg or dash of paprika. Serve with whole-wheat bread sandwiches.

Pear Macaroon Salad—Mash a package of Philadelphia cream cheese. Moisten with Mayonnaise dressing. Spread half a canned pear with this mixture, cover with another half of pear. Dip whole pear thus formed in ground macaroon crumbs (to prepare crumbs roll stale macaroons finely). Serve in nest of crisp lettuce. Garnish with spoonful of Mayonnaise Dressing and a maraschino cherry. Peaches may be prepared in same manner.

Banana and Peanut Butter Salad
This is a favorite salad with children. Peel bananas, cut in half lengthwise. Spread one half with peanut butter and cover with other layer. Cut bananas into thirds and arrange on beds of lettuce. Garnish with spoonful of mayonnaise.

Country Club Salad—Cut cold boiled or baked ham into small dice and add equal amount of diced celery. Moisten with mayonnaise dressing. Chill thoroughly and serve in beds of lettuce; garnish with slices of stuffed olives.

In The Soup

WE have all heard of the little boy who said that "soup is a little bit of everything and not much of anything." If one is thinking of a soup similar to the French pot-au-feu, the first part of the boy's statement is true, but the second is certainly a mistake. A soup made with milk or cream has a definite food value and is an excellent way to induce children who dislike milk to take it. It will give a certain "fillingness" to an otherwise light meal. And its tempting color and consistency will give a fillip to the appetite.

Easy Variations

The vegetable soups, on the other hand, are not so high in food value from a caloric standpoint, but they are rich in vitamins and minerals, and their appetizing flavor will stimulate a languid appetite.

Making soup for a meal is an easy part of the menu's preparation, too. For instance, it is easy to keep a can of beef bouillon on your shelf. Then if there are any buttered vegetables such as beans, peas, celery, left-over from the last meal, they can be heated in the soup to give it a different and intriguing flavor.

A soup that is delicious and that may easily be varied is tomato bouillon with mushrooms. Stew one quart can of tomatoes, two cups water, liquor from one can of mushrooms, one and one-fourth teaspoons salt, and one teaspoon paprika for five minutes. Add two bouillon cubes, dissolve, then strain mixture. Add two slightly beaten egg whites and their crushed shells. Boil one minute. Let stand half an hour to settle, then strain through double cheesecloth. Add one-half cup chopped mushrooms sautéd in two tablespoons butter and reheat but do not boil. Almost any other vegetable may be substituted for the mushrooms.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

THE League of the Scarlet Pimpernel! It is a name associated with heroism and adventure. The daring spirits who composed it gave little heed to the dangers that beset their own lives in combating tyranny and rescuing the innocent. Its history is the one bright spot in the darkest days of carnage and terror that France has ever known.

PLEASANTLY SCREENED PORCH FOR SUMMER

Outside View of Back Yard as Seen From Screened Porch, Maryland Farm Home.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What do you see from your kitchen as you work? And have you a restful corner near or in your kitchen where you can relax occasionally? There are times almost every day when you may have a few minutes free, not enough to go all the way to another part of the house, but well worth using, if possible, for sitting down and in the homely phrase, "taking the heft off one's feet."

Here is a glimpse of a screened porch attached to a farm kitchen near New Market, Md. Following suggestions made by the county home demonstration agent, the porch was arranged with a divan and an easy chair where the intervals between the more active kitchen tasks could be passed restfully. During six months of the year at least, and in Maryland sometimes more, the homemaker can sit out here when preparing the vegetables, or chatting with a morning caller, or pick up her darning bag, or otherwise spend the odd minutes that count up in the course of a day. The outlook into the yard is made attractive by shrubs and flowering plants. It can be seen from the kitchen, too.

Home beautification is one of the home-making activities being carried on by a great many farm women under the stimulus of extension workers of the United States Department of Agriculture and the various states. Suggestions are made for improving the existing surroundings, both out of doors and inside, by simple means such as this porch. They may usually be accomplished by the housewife herself with very little assistance or expense.

ATTRACTIVE SUIT FOR LITTLE GIRL

Combination Outfit Will Appeal to All Mothers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Jane is going to wear one of her sun suits almost all day long while she visits a little friend who has a wonderful back yard with a sand pile in it, and swings and all sorts of other interesting things to play with. However, the automobile ride comes first, and Jane's mother feels that the sun suit with its open top, is not quite a protection from the breezes during the ride, even if Jane herself does not in the least mind appearing in public in her sun suit. So a little matching dress has been designed, made as simply as possible, with the lower part of the sun suit serving as panties. By undoing one button and pulling the dress over her head, Jane is ready for play, and equally quickly, all dressed again to go home.

Little combination outfits like this will appeal to mothers who are obliged to take their children in public conveyances before reaching the beach or park where sun baths are possible, or those who for any other reason wish to be prepared for a quick change in the child's costume. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has been much interested in designing practical, attractive clothes for little children, with special attention to easy laundering features and simple construction. Soft cotton prints make charming outfits of this kind.

"FRESH" BERRIES ALL YEAR ROUND

Feasible to Pack Soft Fruits in Small Containers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Experimental results with the "frozen-pack method" of storing berries promise to furnish "fresh" strawberries, raspberries, and other soft fruits to the housewife the year round, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Department investigators have found it feasible to pack these fruits in small containers suitable for domestic use which may be handled by groceries and markets with improved refrigeration facilities.

The preserving of berries by freezing them in barrels, kegs, or cans, commonly called the frozen-pack or cold-pack method, is already an industry of considerable importance in the Pacific coast region, where approximately 100,000 barrels of berries are put up by this method yearly. When good fruit is put into cold storage within a few hours after it is packed in the barrels and is cooled quickly to freezing temperature, it has a quality which compares favorably with the fresh fruit. The berries may be packed with or without sugar, and if enough sugar is used the rich color and the flavor of the berries will be retained.

Although the 50-gallon container is commonly used at present, there is a tendency toward the small package which can be sold direct for domestic use. Experiments indicate the practicability of packing strawberries and raspberries in the smaller package and storing under refrigeration, so they will retain much of their freshness long after picking.

Cleaning Silver

To remove tarnish from silver, place three teaspoonfuls of salt, three teaspoonfuls of soda and three quarts of water in a bright aluminum pan with the silver. The solution must cover the silver. Boil three minutes. Remove the silver, rinse in hot water and dry. An old aluminum pan may be kept for this purpose but it should not be used for cooking. A bright piece of aluminum may be used with the solution in an enamel-ware pan, provided each piece of silver touches the metal direct or through another piece.

This method of cleaning is satisfactory with solid or plated silver. It is not successful with German silver or metal alloys.

GRAY FOR AGE; COLORS FOR YOUTH

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

DOCTOR ANTHONY MOROW turned over in his bed that June morning and looked at the clock. Just 7:30. He could hear the rattle of dishes in the kitchen below. Myra always arose early and sharply at eight she would come to the foot of the stairs and call—just as she had called every morning for the past several years—

"An-tho-nee. . . breakfast is on the table. . . . An-tho-nee!"

The sun was streaming across the gray rug like a golden shaft and a gentle breeze ruffled the soft mull curtains. It was a day for youth . . . for bright colors. . . laughter. . . beauty. He looked up toward the ceiling and closed his eyes with a groan. Gray! Gray everywhere! Even the furniture and the rug were gray! Dull—drab! Gray was a color for old folks. . . . Doctor Morow sat up and looked in the mirror of the gray enameled dresser. Slightly bald rotund, rosy cheeked. . . not so bad for fifty-six. He wasn't ready for gray yet! Myra was seemingly quite content to settle down in the bungalow on the edge of town with sewing and church duties—and gray room, but not him! He would move his belongings to the room at the end of the hall and make a real man's room of it. He jumped out of bed and while the water ran in his bath he stood before the open window and did the daily dozen, the last four not so spryly as the first four. He shivered as the ice spray struck his back—but that would bring back the vitality! Cold showers—exercise—youth!

He ever touched Myra's powder puff to his round face after shaving and dressed carefully. Doctor Morow was particular about his clothes and this morning he chose an unusually colorful tie—one his niece Ethelwyn had sent from Hollywood at Christmas saying they were all the "rage;" a background of old blue with dashes of orange. He view the effect with satisfaction.

"Not bad—for fifty-six—many years to go yet. . . ."

"An-tho-nee . . . breakfast is on the table . . . An-tho-nee!"

In his office, sharply at nine, he donned his long white linen coat and looked through his appointment book His office girl was on her vacation The list of patients was small. Rosamonde Leahy at 9:30. There was—a girl! Nice little thing—lots of pep and a classy little dresser. Drove a green roadster; just recently come to Fairmont; whispered around she had been on the stage; old Mr. Lawrence at 10:45 and Mrs. Dibble, city librarian, on her noon hour; then, little Jackie Adams at 3:30, after school.

Miss Leahy came in promptly at 9:30, dressed in an orange colored knit suit, a tight-fitting white hat and white golf shoes.

"Oh, Doctor Morow, what a stunning tie! Look! It just matches my sport dress, doesn't it? Nearly canceled my appointment. Would you have been sorry? I'm going out to play golf—all by my little lonely this morning—need the practice, and I knew if that nasty old drill of yours hurt me it would just spoil my day. You won't hurt me now will you, Doctor Morow. . . ."

Doctor Morow carefully adjusted a towel about his patient's chin and smiled down at her. "Hurt you? Hurt such a little ray of sunshine as you? You look just like a summer rose in bloom, all color and loveliness. Now open wide and maybe, maybe . . . if you are so lonely this morning, all by your lonesome, what do you think of me when the ray of sunshine leaves this gloomy old office all dark and we just won't use the old drill today."

"I just dread going out there all alone," she said petulantly as she adjusted her hat over her carefully marcelled hair and patted her already overpowdered nose with feathery puff. "I get so lonesome."

"I'll lonesome right now, and for two cents I'd go to . . ."

Miss Leahy opened her purse and as she placed two copper pennies in his outstretched palm his fingers closed over hers and he reached for the telephone to cancel his other appointments. Color! Youth! No grays or drabs about Rosamonde. They stopped and bought some golf shoes, and further on they purchased a set of clubs. Next week he would have his tailor measure him for a golf suit. A sporty looking tweed—tan or brown—anything but gray! Gray was meant for age. Colors for youth.

Doctor Morow prepared to drive from the first tee with gusto. It looked easy, but he dug into the ground behind his ball and Rosamonde took his club and instructed him how to hold it and to swing clear through. By noon they were in the sand bunker between the third and fourth holes. His new shoes were tight and felt like lead. One o'clock found them trying to rescue his last ball from the creek that flowed between the sixth and seventh holes Three o'clock found them on the ninth green. Rosamonde was by this time calling him "Tony," and as they walked toward the clubhouse she slipped her hand through his arm.

"We'll have just a bit to eat in the grill and then we'll have a delicious long drive before dinner to the Green Lantern. My 'gang' will be there—good music and everything."

Doctor Morow was limping—a large blister on either heel. His neck smarted frightfully and his collar, which had been so white and fresh when Myra had announced that breakfast was on the table, was sadly wilted and chafed the back of his neck. He was too tired to undress for a shower; too tired to eat. He called Myra that he would not be home for dinner—out with friends—and then followed Rosamonde to the green roadster. The golf bags—he carried both—weighed a ton. He had slipped his shoes off under the luncheon table and exposed the blistered heels to the cooling air. The shoes were now tighter than ever.

The drive revived him, although his head continued to ache badly. The sun had been very hot on the links. He dozed once or twice . . . dead tired, but Rosamonde would not allow him to sleep long. Her gay chatter did not diminish. By the time they were headed back down a shady road toward the Green Lantern in the early twilight he felt so much better he placed his fat white hand over the smaller one at the wheel. Nice girl—but that orange-colored dress was—rather flashy.

Dozens of cars were parked around the roadhouse and music floated out into the air. As they entered Rosamonde turned to him expectantly. It was a waltz, and Doctor Morow could waltz. He had always waltzed. He began to perspire again; his neck was raw and his feet were crying out in revolt. Rosamonde conducted him to the table at which her friends were seated, and he danced again—twice—then he reeled out of a door that opened upon the veranda overlooking the entrance. He carefully lowered himself into a chair, his bones creaking when he moved. With his handkerchief he fanned his sore neck and was just removing his second shoe when a taxi turned into the driveway. The passengers alighted with considerable laughter and merriment. Then as the car backed up and started to turn around, Doctor Morow came to his feet.

"Wait! Taxi! I'm coming! And if you go off and leave me I'll shoot you. Wait!"

He delivered a message to a waiter together with a liberal tip; got his hat from the check girl, and with his shoes in one hand, the other pressed firmly against his aching back, he painfully left the Green Lantern and climbed into the taxi.

Myra was reading in the living room and answered his greeting as he hurried upstairs. He took a warm bath, opened the blisters on his heels and applied a healing lotion, creamed his sunburned neck, and then groaning wearily, he crawled into the cool sheets of the gray enameled bed.

"My dear," he said softly, as Myra came into the room, "this is—a sweet home. And this particular chamber such good taste for middle-aged folks like us. Gray is so soft, so soothing, so restful. . . ."

Commercial Use Found for All Waste Product

Herring and sardine tinning factories have reached the stage where practically there is no waste and all by-products are utilized. The scales of the silvery herring, which were once nothing but a nuisance, now bring in hundreds of thousands of dollars to the pearl essence manufacturers. These scales possess beautiful iridescense when affixed to a sphere or rounded surface. When laid flat, however, they lack the pearly luster Then there are the heads, tails and other waste products that formerly were loaded on scows, taken far out to sea and dumped, or else destroyed in incinerators or to a limited extent used as a field fertilizer. Now the increasing numbers of fish-meal plants quickly convert them into nutritious and cheap poultry food. The waste oils from the overflowing tins are all caught and used in the production of varnish and paints. Even the bright tin trimmings from the cans are saved. Compressed into big bales, they are shipped to England, there detinned, smelted and processed over into new sheets of metal.

Jonah Story on Jug

An independent version of the story of Jonah and the whale, probably current in ancient Greece long before the Hebrew Bible was written, is believed to be depicted on a decorated pottery jug found in the former Greek island of Cyprus and recently acquired by the British museum.

The scene painted on the jug, probably at least 25 centuries ago, shows a ship from which a sailor is falling or being thrown into the waves. Awaiting him in the water is a great fish, apparently ready to swallow him.

The jug shows evidence, according to the museum authorities, of having been made by some potter of ancient Cyprus, who was influenced by the Phoenician sailors and traders, then numerous in the Mediterranean.—Detroit News.

Rosenthal's Sly Dig

Rosenthal, the famous pianist and composer, who is well known for his wit, was once invited to a musical evening at a friend's house, where at the same time a pianist was invited who should play the very short so-called "Minute Waltz" of Chopin, the best-known arrangement of which is by Rosenthal himself. The pianist, however, played the work far too slowly, and one could see Rosenthal frowning. After the piece was over, however, Rosenthal got up, went to the player, and thanked him most heartily, saying in a genial way: "This Minute waltz, my dear sir, as I have heard it tonight, has provided me with a most delightful quarter of an hour."

ROUGH WAIT FOR PERMANENT WAVE

Impatient Woman Says She Was Manhandled.

Detroit.—Dan J. Healy, proprietor of a beauty parlor, was named recently before Judge Edward J. Jeffries in the recorder's court, on an assault and battery complaint obtained by Mrs. Betty Wimberly.

Mrs. Wimberly complained that Healy locked her in his private office, called her names, twisted her arm, and scratched her, because she raised an objection to waiting in line with 51 other women for a permanent wave.

"When I went there the girl told me I first would have to have a shampoo," she said. "I did that and then was given a ticket for the permanent wave. I asked how long I would have to wait and the girl told me, 'just a few minutes.' Then I was escorted into another room, where women were lined up in droves.

"My ticket had number '52' on it, and one of the women told me that meant I had to wait until 51 other women had been given permanents.

"Mr. Healy called me over to his office and in a very nice way asked me to step inside. When I did he locked the door, and then he scowled and demanded 'what I meant by creating a disturbance in his place of business.'

"Then he grabbed me by the arm—you can see the scratches and black and blue marks yet—and flung me into a chair. He swore at me something fierce. Then I got up and demanded my hat and coat. I said I was leaving, and he said, 'No you are not. Not until I call the police,' and he threw me into the chair again."

The police were called, but refused to make any arrests, either at Healy's request or the request of Mrs. Wimberly.

Absent-Minded Cop Gives Himself Ticket

Salem, Ore.—Here's a story of an absent-minded cop.

Charles Kuykendall, member of the Salem police force, whose duty it is to mark automobiles that are parked overtime in the business section of Oregon's capital city, drove his car downtown and parked it.

In the course of his rounds he came to his own machine. It looked familiar, but he failed to "peg" it as his own.

"Humph, that guy's got a lot o' gall," he muttered, chalking a tire. "Why didn't he park on the sidewalk in front of headquarters, I wonder?"

"Still here," he mused, an hour later on another round. "Guess that guy wants to see the judge."

He made out a slip instructing the owner to report to police court.

When he completed his trick and hunted up his automobile he was confronted with the overtime parking slip, signed by himself.

"That guy sure did have a lot o' gall," he commented. Must have thought he had a drag with the police department."

He thereon drove to municipal court, presented the slip to the judge, and cheerfully paid his fine of $1 as a first offender.

Wouldn't Squeal; Judge Gives Him Jail Term

New Orleans.—James Joseph Morales, arrested at a post office in the act of signing for a registered package containing 30 ounces of morphine, told his attorney, "I won't squeal no matter what they do to me."

The attorney therefore told the court: "My client, your honor, is not a squealer. He was to have been paid $50 for receiving the package and giving it to the 'George Spence' it was addressed to. He will not reveal the identity of the man who hired him. He pleads guilty."

The court thereupon said: "It is the duty of all good citizens to report crimes. Two years in prison and $500 fine."

Three Graf Stowaways Are Sent to Prison

Friedrichshafen, Germany.—Three of the men who tried to stow away on the German dirigible Graf Zeppelin before its departure for the United States recently have been sentenced to 18 and 21 days. A fourth was held for future investigation. Repairs up on the Graf's motors are still under way.

Seeking One Dog; Is Attacked by 13

Yonkers, N. Y.—Edward Smith, the local police department's official dog catcher, penetrated the marshes of East Yonkers in search of a vicious hound, and as he picked his way gingerly through the swamp 13 dogs attacked him. Smith fled from the swamp and to a telephone where he called for police reinforcements.

Then he returned to the marsh and stood off the pack with a club until three policemen arrived, opened fire and killed three of the dogs and put the rest to rout. Smith followed the fleeing pack and grabbed the particularly vicious one triumphantly.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

Apple Trees Are Cut by Millions

Survey Shows Concentration in Favorable Sections of Country

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In twelve of the last fifteen years the average farm price of apples has been below the general prewar wholesale price level of all commodities. As the result, millions of apple trees have been removed and others have been neglected. From 1910 to 1925 the number of apple trees in the United States decreased nearly 40 per cent. Notwithstanding the decline in the number of apple trees, production of apples has been practically maintained. These are some of the important facts noted by the United States Department of Agriculture in an analysis of the prospects of the apple industry. Recent changes and present tendencies, the department indicates, promise a better approach to stability in the industry, but with the number of trees now planted, commercial production is expected to continue at a high level for several years.

Production Increased.

Though total apple production has declined slightly since 1917, commercial production has steadily increased. Moreover, carlot shipments have increased at an average of 4,600 carloads a year since 1918, and movements by motor truck have grown considerably. Increased production per tree has largely offset the decline in the number of trees. The department expects further increases in commercial apple production during the next few years, accompanied of course by an increase in the domestic demand resulting from population growth. The rate of increase, according to the department, will be less than it was during the last ten years. The future appears somewhat brighter for the real commercial grower who is favorably located and who produces apples of high quality at low cost. Conditions in the industry are changing so rapidly, however, that success for the individual grower requires attention to conditions throughout the country, as well as to the technical problems of his own orchard. Apple production is a business in which long views are necessary. The orchard planted today will not return a revenue for seven or ten years. When it starts producing, however, it may be a source of income for 30, 50 or 60 years. In the past this fact seems not to have been sufficiently borne in mind, and overplanting has resulted.

In a survey, started by the department, information has been obtained on the number of trees of different varieties and ages in the country as a whole and in different apple producing sections. Some of the outstanding facts revealed are announced by M. R. Cooper, senior economist in the bureau of agricultural economics.

Future of Industry.

So that the future of the apple industry may be regionally considered, Mr. Cooper grouped 22 important apple states in six divisions, largely according to location, but partly according to the number of varieties grown. These 22 states have about 74 per cent of all the apple trees of bearing age in the country. They produce about 81 per cent of the annual apple output.

In the western group of apple states (the Pacific coast and mountain states) apple production has increased enormously in the last fifteen years. These states from 1909 to 1913 produced annually about 19,000,000 bushels. Their average annual production in the years 1924 to 1928 was more than 54,000,000 bushels. In recent years apple production in the western states has been fairly well stabilized, though many of the trees there have not reached their full bearing capacity. It seems certain that heavy increases in production in this region will not recur in the immediate future.

Constructing Silo for Use in Summer Months

One of the first things to consider in deciding on the size of a silo is the number of head of live stock to be fed from it during the warmer months when the silage on the surface begins to mold shortly after it is exposed. Two inches or more must be taken from the entire surface each day in summer to avoid loss by spoilage, sufficient for about 26 head from the 14-foot silo and 53 head from one 20 feet in diameter.

Green Feed for Fowls

Rye makes good green feed for either chicks or hens. Oats is good, but is more easily destroyed than rye. Essex rape lasts longer than either, providing it is allowed to grow to the height of four to six inches before the chicks are turned in. Alfalfa and red, white or sweet clover make excellent range for both chicks and laying hens. Choose whichever is best suited to the soil in the poultry yard, but for hens' sake choose one of them.

Raise More Turkeys

A sufficient number of turkeys were raised last year by poultry men to convince others that turkeys are profitable. Because of having reached this conclusion a large number of farmers and poultry men will no doubt be added to the ranks of turkey breeders during the coming year. For the farmers who buy a few turkey hens for breeding purposes there are a number of pointers which should be kept in mind.

Hog Sanitation Is Meeting With Favor

Many Indiana Farmers Saving Eight Pigs Per Sow.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Attention to swine sanitation is changing hog production on many farms in Indiana from a losing to a profitable enterprise. A report received by the United States Department of Agriculture from Dr. J. E. Gibson, federal inspector in charge of hog-cholera-control work in Indiana, credits the swine-sanitation system developed by the bureau of animal industry with many practical benefits.

"Our reports," he says, "indicate that heretofore the average number of pigs per sow has been about five and one-half, whereas farmers who are following instructions as to swine sanitation are now saving more than eight pigs per sow. Cases almost without number have been found where farmers were nearly ready to quit raising hogs because they were unable to save a sufficient number of their pigs to make the business profitable. Since they have been instructed in swine sanitation and are following the instructions in whole or in part they are able to grow hogs at a profit."

Referring to the extensive use of the system in 11 counties of the state where the project has been introduced, Doctor Gibson adds that, aside from the educational work done on hog-cholera control, nothing has had such a noticeable beneficial effect on hog production.

Pullets and Hens Pay Better if Kept Apart

In order to lay the maximum number of eggs during the winter, pullets that are ready to lay must be well fed during the fall and winter months. They should be well developed and carry a surplus of fat before they are placed in winter quarters. Since these birds are ready for egg production, they should be given feed that will enable them to lay during this season of high prices. Allowing pullets free range to a good laying mash will bring them into production and make them return a profit during the winter.

After they stop laying in the fall, there is a natural tendency for hens in the old laying flock to eat much less mash than they have been eating. It, therefore, is a good plan to increase the grain allowance in order to keep them in good flesh. The hens which are to be used as breeders next spring should be given a vacation this winter so that the hatching eggs they lay will produce strong, healthy chicks.—Illinois College of Agriculture.

Beans as Poultry Feed Do Not Rank Very High

Beans do not seem to rank very high as a poultry feed. Some poultry men use boiled cull beans as a supplement to the regular ration but not as a substitute for the laying mash or scratch grain. Potatoes are not a very desirable poultry feed especially when they are high in price. Cull potatoes are sometimes boiled and mixed with a little bran and fed to the hens to supplement the regular ration. The best way to use cull beans and potatoes is to feed at noon the amount that will be readily eaten by the hens. Keep the laying mash before them so they will eat plenty of egg-making material. Feed the regular scratch grain ration morning and night. The use of the beans and potatoes will reduce the amount of mash the hens will eat but will not cut down mash consumption enough to seriously curtail egg production.

Prevent Diseases

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, no sure remedies are known for contagious abortion in cattle, hog cholera, influenza of hogs, horses, and other animals; tuberculosis of cattle and poultry; distemper of dogs, cats and foxes; heaves of horses; bacillary white diarrhea, fowl cholera, roup or diphtheria, and chicken pox of chickens, and blackhead of turkeys. These diseases must be conquered by methods of prevention.

DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Australia Pictured as "Land of Opportunity"

An American salesman, who has spent several years in Australia, says that it is no uncommon thing for a man by farming to accumulate sufficient money to warrant his retirement in that country in ten years. The land is the asset of Australia. Farmers can start with little or no capital and in ten years can amass sufficient competence to retire, he said. He can take up 2,000 acres at 50 cents to $5 per acre, and can get advances from the National Agricultural bank with which to make the improvements.

The farmer has 30 years to pay off his farm, and the interest is only 5 per cent. The first five years he is not required to pay any interest at all. No man can take out more than 2,000 acres in his own name, but he is allowed to take out that much for each of his sons. The great problem of the country, however, is labor. The native labor is of a very indifferent character, but this is largely overcome by the use of agricultural machinery, and the machinery from the United States is the most favored by the farmers of Australia.

It has acquired now 514,000 acres or 803 square miles. Much of it is virgin forest, says Nature Magazine. There are 61,000 acres in which an axe was never used.

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

CHILDHOOD SPEAKS
Pauline H. Thomas

The guests were chatting merrily while Jeanne sat listening (rather silently for her) for a long while.

Finally, when Aunt Mary hesitated just a moment in the midst of something she was relating, Jeanne burst in with a tale of her own. I felt obliged to reprove her and she obediently asked to be excused. However, she exclaimed, "Mother, you tell me to wait until no one else is speaking, but if I do, I never get a chance to say one word!"

Realizing that I had gained nothing by such reproof in the presence of guests and wishing to to avoid the impending discussion of children's behavior in Jeanne's presence, I said quickly, "Jeanne, dear, there is Evelyn calling for you. You may be excused to run and play with her."

Then said young Miss Miller, "It is true, we grown ups never give children a chance. I don't blame the child."

Said Aunt Mary, "When I was a child, I not only did not speak until spoken to, but I never once felt that I was being restrained. I was glad to remain unnoticed, for I was very bashful."

Thought I to myself, "As a child, I was glad to be seen and not heard because my parents adopted such rules for me from babyhood and I did not feel it a repression at all. When a guest asked me a question, Mother promptly answered for me. I receiver no special notice. On the other hand, Jeanne has been taught to answer a question put to her, herself. I am the one responsible for her ready expression of thought. She is noticed and spoken to by every guest and consequently is not bashful. It is natural for her to feel the restraint when she can not join in conversation."

After the guests left, I called Jeanne and tried to explain that problem of hers. She was merely groping for understanding, not being impertinent.

I said to her, "You see, dear, each guest was not talking all the time; it was only because there were six guests and only one little girl that they seemed to be doing all the talking. Sometimes older folk forget that little folk like to talk, too, and if they do forget, then it is best to practice listening. You can learn to be a good listener as well as a good talker. And never is it polite to interrupt anyone else, because it is forgetting the rights of others. If all the six guests did that, you know, you could not tell what anyone was saying. If everyone rushed ahead when Daddy's car had the 'right of way,' what would happen? If all your little playmates tried to snatch the swing from the one who got it first, no one would enjoy the swing."

Gross boldness in a child is far from admirable, yet were I obliged to confess the many instances of agonizing, handicapping self-consciousness I have suffered as an adolescent, yes, even as a woman, all of which were the outgrowth of bashfulness in childhood, I should be more than abashed. Surely there must be a happy medium for my own little girl and for other little children.

TESTED RECIPE

SALADS AND SUMMER DESSERTS
By Betty Barclay

American housewives are becoming more and more enthused over French cooking, and dishes once enjoyed only at hotels or clubs in which some famous Parisian chef reigned supreme are now appearing on the tables of our thrifty but appreciating American women.

Oh, we shall always have our ice cream, our waffles, or Chicken a la Maryland, our griddle cakes and maple syrup and dozens of other typical American delicacies that cannot be surpassed—but we are now beginning to add other dishes equally tasteful, and often more easily prepared and more economical than some of our old favorites.

The French housewife is thrifty; she seldom uses out-of-season delicacies; she makes use of left-overs; and she has learned the secret of flavor. She has learned that salads should be served when the ingredients are fresh and crisp; that cold, tasteful desserts fit into summertime as snuggly as a French habit fits into a Parisian model; and that a little sugar, in the dressing or added to the vegetable ingredients of a salad while cooking, accentuates the flavors.

Try one or all of these French dishes. You will find them among the most popular dishes on your table this summer.

Frozen Tomato Salad

Peel and cut into fairly small pieces two cups of ripe tomatoes. Add two cloves, two peppercorns, two tablespoons sugar, one teaspoon salt, one-quarter teaspoon celery salt, one sliced onion, a few grains of parsley, and two tablespoons vinegar. Boil for ten minutes, then press through a sieve. Freeze to a mush. Beat a half cup of cream until stiff and add to the mush. Then complete freezing. Serve on crisp, thoroughly dried lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing.

Vegetable Salad Melange

Cook one cup of shredded string beans until tender in boiling, salted water, with one-half teaspoon of sugar. Do the same with one cup of shelled peas. Mix the peas and beans with one cup of shredded cucumber and one-half cup of thinly sliced radishes. Add French dressing and let stand a half hour. Meanwhile, hardboil six eggs, halve them, and cut off the ends so they will stand upon salad plates. Arrange crisp lettuce leaves around each egg half, and place some of the vegetable mixture on the leaves. Serve very cold with mayonnaise.

French Caramel Custard

Four eggs, six tablespoons sugar, one cup milk and a little water, make this cold, tasteful summer dessert. Separate the eggwhites and yolks, and beat the whites until they are firm. Add four tablespoons of sugar to the yolks. Combine the whites and yolks and add the milk, stirring the mixture slowly. Make a caramel, using two tablespoons sugar and one-half cup water. Pour this into a tin mold and then add the custard. Place the mold in a pan of water and bake in a slow oven for twenty-five minutes, or until a knife blade will come out clean. When the custard is cold, turn it out on a platter and serve it with or without sauce.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By Baroness Orczy

SUCH episodes as are treated in this thrilling story could have occurred nowhere else than in France and at no period other than that of the Revolution. The tale is of that famous band devoted to chivalry and adventure, who risked their lives time and again to save innocent victims of the tyrants who ruled France at that time.

LAW IN INDIANA COMPELS CUTTING OF CANADA THISTLES

Penalty for Neglect to Carry Out Provsions of Act

This is the time of the year when Canada thistls start to bloom, seed and pollute the ground. Township trustees in every county in Indiana are making an effort to have Canada thistles eradicated.

There is an act in the Indiana statute of 1929 which describes in detail what the duties of owners, tenants or occupants of any land in Indiana are in case Canada thistles are found growing on lands, the manner by which persons affected by Canada thistles may complain against any other person permitting Canada thistles to grow and the penalty for allowing thistles to grow and mature.

Canada thistles may be held in check and eradicated either by cutting or by the use of chemicals when in bud.

In case thistles are allowed to grow any landowner, occupant or tenant may complain to his township trutsee against any other landowner, occupant or tenant permitting Canada thistles to grow and the trustee is authorized to pay for such chemicals or for work and labor performed in the cutting or eradication of thistles. In the performance of this duty the person doing the work cannot be held as a trespasser.

The expense for such work is to be certified to the county auditor who shall place the amount on the tax books to be collected as taxes.

The penalty provided for neglect to carry out the provisions of the act are a fine of not more than $10 for the first offense and for a second or subsequent offense, not more than $20.

The statute is found on pages 425, 426, 427 and 428 of the Acts of 1929, chapter 122.

FIRE LOSSES FOR MAY 1929

During May, 1929, there were 337 fires in the whole state, not including our state capitol. Of these, 244 occurred in cities over 5,000 population, 43 in cities and towns under 5,000 population, and 50 in the country.

The total property loss for the whole state was $524,480. Of this the loss in cities over 5,000 population was $142,676, in cities and towns under 5,000 population $121,375, and in the country $260,429.

In cities over 5,000 population the value of the property affected was $4,516,234, thus making a 3% loss. In cities and towns under 5,000 population, the value of the property affected was $409,935, thus making a 29% loss. In the country the value of the property affected was $295,631, thus making an 88% loss.

In cities over 5,000 population, the per cent of loss at Gary was about 1%; at Terre Haute about 6%; at South Bend about 8% and at Crawfordsville about 23%.

In the country, Spencer and and White Counties had the greatest number of fires, each having 4. Wabash County had the largest loss, which was $142,000.

In the whole state sparks caused the largest number of fires, or 140. Sparks thus caused 41% of all the fires in the state. Defective wiring caused 16 or about 5%. Fires caused by defective wiring in cities of over 5,000 population were 14 in number or 6% of the total.

The greatest number of fires were in dwellings. The number was 211 or 62%. In the country there were 18 barn fires or about 31% of the total.

The large number of fires from sparks shows that we must have roofs made of some kind of non-combustible material. The figures on defective wiring fires indicate that it will pay cities to provide for better electrical inspection than what many of them have now.

IT'S THE TRUTH AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH

You need not smile, but we did when told, but Frank Akins looked us straight in the eyes and said, "Now, by gol, I can prove every word by four different people, and besides I have evidence at home." Now in order to put you next here is the whole story: Frank and John Ulm and their wives spent Monday at the state dam at Defiance as guests at the Buckingham cottage and while there they engaged in a fishing expedition. Here is the result: 22 fish averaging 3 pounds each were caught by hook and line and seven were lost by rank alone, due to a broken hook. The smallest fish caught weighed 2¾ pounds.

One can hardly imagine such success, yet it sa fact. Each of the men brought home a gallon of fish besides what the company had to eat.

REDUCING STATE TAXES

Why should nearly all the state, county and city taxes be collected from farms, homes and industries?

Why should not a larger part of these revenues to carry on local government be collected from crimes, luxuries, follies and extravagances?

In some states there is a regular system of raising part of the local revnue from occupations, sports, amusements, etc.

Is there not a suggestion in the following editorial paragraph from the Los Angeles Times?

"It is thought that the government revenue from tobacco in Poland will this year reach $150,000,000. As the total budget of the country is only about $380,000,000 it will be seen that the country will pull nearly half of its expense money out of the smoke. If governments formed the habit of levying taxes upon all vices the virtuous would presently have no assessments to pay."

SPRINGER'S MOVING TO NEBRASKA

Herman Springer and family will leave in about ten days for their new home at Bruning, Nebraska, where he will start farming. Mrs. Springer's parents reside at this place and a sister of Mr. Springer. They will reside within two miles of town. They ar now visiting old friends at Yoder, south of Fort Wayne. Since coming to St. Joe, they have made many friends and they have the best wishes of all. A farewell reception was held for them at the Lutheran Church, where they attended, Thursday evening.

WHAT WILL BE THE NEXT FAD?

Stockingless girls and women, while not so popular in St. Joe are being reported in larger cities to far out-number any reasonable per cent one could truly guess, and from all indications suggest that before long it will be a case of lack of clothes that make women, when there was a time it was claimed that "clothes make the man."

Referring to the matter of sox, we will say that there was a time when they were called and were stockings, and they extended from the foot upward indefinitely. Most women wore either cotton, lisle or pure wool. The color was invariably black. Silk stockings were only displayed by the ultra rich and the demi mondes—if you know what we mean. These stockings, ample in every way, and unending, apparently—were strictly for service, and not at all for exhibition. The lady who carelessly or accidentally displayed even an inch of stocking, peeping above her high top shoes, became a social outcast who was avoided by the other girls as if she had the leprosy.

Even when adorned for such pastime as bathing on the public beaches, milady of those halcyon days wore enough clothing to nearly sother an Esquimaux on a holiday at the north pole. And how those girls did blush and show their self-consciousness when in frightened bevies they giggled their way from dressing room to the enveloping water, clad in enough raiment to fit out a hundred girls today, with plenty to spare.

First the high heeled shoes fell

BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST

Temperance Lesson

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 5:1-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What Wine Leads To.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Drink Leads To.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Drink Leads To.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Reveling and Ruin.

I. Belshazzar's Impious Feast (vv. 1-4).

1. The attendants (vv. 1, 2). Belshazzar, his wife and concubines and a thousand of his lords.

2. Their behavior (vv. 3, 4).

(1) They drank wine; they engaged in revelry. (2) They committed sacrilege, drinking wine out of the sacred vessels taken from the temple at Jerusalem. (3) They worshiped idols, gods of gold, silver, brass, iron, wood and stone.

II. The Handwriting on the Wall (vv. 5-16).

1. The time of (v. 5). It occurred in the same hour in which they were engaged in their drunken revelry.

2. The effect upon the king (v. 6). He was seized with consternation.

3. The king's behavior (vv. 7-16).

(1) He called forth astrologers and soothsayers, offering rich rewards (vv. 7-9). Their utter inability to interpret the writing left the king even more perplexed.

(2) Daniel brought in at the suggestion of the queen (vv. 10-16). The queen reminded the king of Daniel's service to Nebuchadnezzar. He was sent for and promised great reward.

III. Daniel Interprets the Writing (vv. 17-28).

1. Daniel's address to the king (vv. 17-24).

(1) He brushes aside the promised gifts (v. 17). He would not have his speech limited by the king's gifts.

(2) He reviewed before him the history of Nebuchadnezzar and applied the lesson to the behavior of Belshazzar (vv. 18-24), showing that Belshazzar should have profited by the experience of his father.

2. The interpretation of the writing (vv. 25-28).

(1) "Mene" means "numbered" (v. 26). "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it."

(2) "Tekel" means "weighed" (v. 27). "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."

(3) "Peres" means "divided" (v. 28). "Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians."

IV. The Judgment Executed (vv. 29-31).

In that night was Belshazzar slain and Darius the Median took the kingdom.

The Chaldean dynasty ended with Belshazzar. So we may interpret this whole scene as pointing to the conditions at the close of the times of the Gentiles, and as foreshadowing the prevailing conditions. Let us note:

1. The stupidity of men.

They, like people today, would not learn by example. Nebuchadnezzar's fate should have deterred Belshazzar from such frivolity.

2. The magnificent splendor.

This great feast was characterized by pomp, display, parade. How characteristic of this age!

3. Luxury. The famous hanging gardens of Babylon were a noteworthy example. Signs of luxury today are on every hand.

4. The licentiousness of the king with his wives and concubines. Licentiousness is notoriously prevalent today.

5. Blasphemous sacrilege.

And may not the sacrilege of today be in excess of theirs, expressing itself in (1) a profession of religion for pecuniary gain, social and political preferment; (2) use of the pulpit and of the ministry for display and notoriety, even for the propagation of false doctrine; (3) union with the church, attendance on the communion, so as to cover up secret sins; (4) the use of the Word of God to give point to a joke; (5) denying that the Bible is God's Word, making it a book of errors, myths and legends; (6) sneering at the virgin birth, repudiating Christ's deity and setting aside His vicarious atonement.

6. Drunken carousals. The handwriting is on the wall. God will not endure this forever; His judgment shall fall. Conditions in the world indicate that the time is drawing near. Are you ready?

Nothing

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.—I Cor. 13:2.

Always Thankful

The thoughtful are always thankful.

The Least Resistance

A rut is the line of least resistance.

Tissue gingham in an attractive weave of soft orange-yellow and white checks was used for the cool-looking, comfortable, hot weather dress designed by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. A very simple style, suited as a rather full figure, was chosen. In fabrics having decided checks or stripes, skirts cut on the straight of the goods often look better than those cut in one piece with the upper part. So in this case the waist and skirt were cut separately and sewed together. The joint is concealed very neatly by a straight belt at the hip level.

Needled fullness in the waist is absorbed by inverted tucks at the shoulder, darts under the arms, and slight gathers at the belt line. The skirt has a few large plaits at the center front to give room for walking, and slight gathers across the back, where the belt and waist are securely attached.

Cool, Becoming and Appropriate.

The tailored effect of the collar and front opening is enhanced by the round buttons harmonizing with the dominant color of the material—orange-yellow. Three-quarter sleeves are loose and comfortable, and appropriate for a mature woman to wear on the street. The light-weight, broad-brimmed shade hat is leaf green, adding to the generally cool, summer-like effect of the costume. The light weight of the hat adds comfort.

BETTER APPETITE FOR VEGETABLES

Large Increase Seen In Use of Garden Truck.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Americans like vegetables—and they appear to like them better each year," says B. C. Boree, marketing specialist in the United States Department of Agriculture.

"The annual gain of at least 1,500,000 in population does not explain all the increases in acreage and production of truck crops. Our appetite for vegetables seems to be growing, both because of encouragement from health authorities and because it is now possible to have a wide variety of fresh vegetables the year round."

A great volume of truck is hauled to the city from near-by farms, says Mr. Boree, who also emphasizes developments in carlot movements of vegetables in the last dozen years. In 1918 the United States Department of Agriculture collected reports of the movement of about 145,000 cars of seventeen leading truck crops. Last year shipments of the same products filled 350,000 cars, or more than double the movement ten years ago. This does not include shipments of the important field-crop vegetables such as potatoes and sweet potatoes. Neither does it include much of the green products used by the large canning factories.

"In other words," says Mr. Boree, "while the population increased about 15 per cent, carlot shipments of vegetables increased 140 per cent. Lettuce, green peas, spinach, string beans, celery, and cucumbers have made especially noticeable gains. Shipments of lettuce are now seven times as great as they were ten years ago, and range from 40,000 to 50,000 cars annually. Most of this lettuce originates in the Far Southwest, and ends its journey in the markets of the northeastern coast cities.

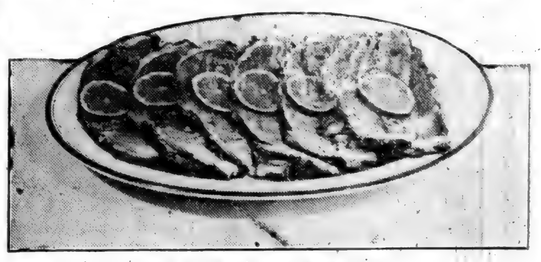
Fresh Salmon Cutlets Are Always in Season

Fresh salmon is to be had in a great many parts of the country at all seasons of the year, now that facilities for shipping iced or frozen fish enable dealers to send their wares inland and to points many miles from where the fish are caught. One of the nicest ways of preparing cutlets from fresh salmon is described below by the bureau of home economics.

2 lbs. fresh salmon, 1 inch thick
1 egg
1 tbs. water
½ tsp. salt
Soft bread crumbs finely sifted
Lard or good-flavored fat

Wipe off the salmon and remove any bones. Cut in portions large enough for serving. Dip the pieces of fish into the egg which has been well beaten and mixed with the water. Roll the crumbs and place on a pan or board to dry for a short while. Heat the fat in a heavy skillet, put in the cutlets and reduce the heat. Cook slowly for ten or fifteen minutes until the fish is done and golden brown on both sides. Drain on absorbent paper and serve garnished with lemon and parsley.

NEATLY ARRANGED SLICES OF COLD LAMB



Cold Lamb Garnished With Lemon.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the reasons foods in summer time can be made to look so appetizing and attractive is that there are then so many colorful, edible materials to garnish them with. Another reason, perhaps, is that many cold dishes are served: Cold slices of meat, fish and other salads, aspic jellies, and hors d'oeuvres of various kinds. Garnishes that would soon lose their crisp shapely appearance on hot foods can be successfully used to decorate cold ones. Only enough of any garnish should be used to give a touch of color.

What a difference there is between this platter, photographed by the bureau of home economics, containing neatly arranged slices of lamb, each topped by a thin slice of lemon, and just a plate of cold lamb! The garnish is not intended, in this case, to be solely ornamental. A few drops of lemon on lamb or veal add surprisingly to the flavor. Another way of making a plate of cold meat look attractive is to alternate slices of ham with chicken, veal, or lamb, so that the two colors contrast with each other. A sprig of parsley, cress, mint, a few celery tops, or small leaves of lettuce, would also be a good garnish for cold meat. Narrow rings of green pepper, strips of pimento, rounds of tomato, thin slices of cucumber or pickles, and olives, are other suggestions for introducing color. Among the cooked and edible garnishes often used by restaurant chefs are slices of beet or carrot cut in tiny fancy shapes, cubes from bright gelatin molds such as tomato, mint or jellied stockstock, and hard-cooked eggs, cut in slices or symmetrical pieces. Sweet jelly, too, when stiff enough to hold its form, makes a garnish which tastes as good as it looks.

Dainty slices of orange may be used like lemon to garnish either cold or hot meats, especially chicken or duck. Rings of apple, or jellied red colored apples are often served with pork. Potato salad and sliced ham are a favorite combination, each garnishing the other, as it were. Fried chicken, served on a plate with corn fritters, garnished with a bit of currant jelly, makes its appeal to the eye as well as to the palate. The broiled mushrooms or fried onions served with steak are meant to tempt the beholder through the nose as well as the eye.

Lemon, parsley, cress, and cucumber, are the garnishes commonly used on fish. As the lemon is for flavoring, it is better to cut it in quarters or sixths lengthwise than to slice it. Then each person can squeeze the juice over his own portion. Cucumber garnishes are sometimes given a saw-toothed edge with a fancy cutter.

Among the garnishes for cold drinks, especially iced tea, are sprigs of mint, or geranium, or slices of lemon, orange, or lime, with or without a few whole cloves in each slice. A grape or other large green leaf is often used as a garnish under grapefruit, cantaloupe, orange, or fruit cup when these fruits are served as appetizers for dinner.

"Could we, perhaps, detain them sufficiently long to permit us to get away?" inquired my uncle.

"With the treasure? Hardly! I say, do you realize the sheer physical job in removing that stuff? Why, there must be tons of it! It would have to be boxed and crated. And where would you take it to? How would you take it anywhere? To arrange for its removal would require—oh, I'd hate to say how long! In the meantime, we might hold Mrs. Hilyer without causing any comment, but Mahkouf is a well-known person. He isn't called the 'Grand Vizier's Jackal' for nothing."

Wasso Mikail appeared in the doorway at the foot of the stairs that led up to the large chamber on the courtyard level. His face was grim and the tone in which he addressed Nikka so savage as to attract the attention of all of us. Kara eyed him with approval, and ventured a confirmatory nod.

"He says," Nikka translated, "that the only thing for us to do is to kill Tokalji and the rest of the prisoners, stow their bodies in the drain that I have told him about, and then deny to Mahkoff that there ever was a tight or that there is any treasure here. He insists it was a great mistake for us to take any prisoners, but that we can yet remedy it in time."

"He's dead wrong," said Hugh abruptly. "I think I can use Tokalji to work out of this mess."

"How?" asked Nikka.

"By making it worth his while. He'd do anything for money, wouldn't he?"

"Yes."

"Well, we have the money in limitless quantities. I want to say a word to you lads and Professor King that has been on my chest ever since I saw that treasure vault. I never thought of this before, because I didn't take the story any too seriously. But now it's beyond cavil. My point is this: there's too much wealth down there for any one man. Professor King says there may be $125,000,000. Nobody needs that much just to lead his own life in affluence.

"I'm going to divide it equally between you, Nikka, Jack, Professor King, Watty and myself, subject to whatever disbursements Nikka thinks Wasso Mikail should have and a price necessary to attach Tokalji's allegiance to us."

"Your idea of purchasing Tokalji's aid, supposing he can aid us, is a good one," said my uncle. "But I have more money now than I can use. I must absolutely refuse your offer so far as it concerns myself, Hugh."

"Me, too, your tudship," spoke up Watkins. "What would I do with millions of pounds? All the other servants would be jealous of me, and the newspaper gentlemen would be 'aving their fun with me every day most like. No, no, sir. I'm an old man, and with all due respect, I'm sure I'd much rather stay on with you at Chesby, your tudship, and valet you properly. It ain't so easy to find a good valet nowadays, sir. Really, sir, I'd rather not."

"Well," said Hugh, "we won't fight about that Watty. If you stay with me you—Why, hang it all, you're one of the best friends I've got! You must stay. But I'm going to insist on splitting with Jack and Nikka. Then Jack can build houses to suit himself, and Nikka can play his fiddle to poor boys and girls."

"I knew you'd make an offer like that, Hugh," said Nikka simply. "It's like you. And don't you worry about Wasso Mikail. I'll take care of him and his tribe with my share. It wouldn't do them any good to make them grossly rich. They'd leave their old ways of life, contract tuberculosis or dissipate themselves to death. Let them be. They live an idyllic life, a life good enough for me, anyway. But I'm not going to protest against the corruption of Tokalji. If you believe you can make anything out of it. What is your idea?"

"Have him in," answered Hugh. "I'll show you."

Wasso Mikail brought in the brigand chief, his broken arm in a sling, a sour glint of hatred in his eye.

"Now," said Hugh, "ask him, Nikka, if he'd like to be so rich he wouldn't need to steal again, except to indulge his sportin' tastes?"

Tokalji evidently considered he was being spoofed, and he drew himself haughtily erect.

"He says any man would answer that one way," replied Nikka. "But that you seek to annoy him."

"Tell him," returned Hugh, "that I'll give him £100,000 Turkish if he'll come over to our side, and back us up against Mahkouf Pasha. Explain to him that Mahkouf Pasha."

The change in Tokalji's manner was ridiculous.

"He says," translated Nikka, "that he will kill the sultan for you for £100,000 Turkish. But he wants to see the money."

"Watty," said Hugh, "go down into the sewer-treasury and collect a sack of jewels—anything will do. Tell Tokalji I'm sending for an earnest of our good faith, Nikka."

Avarice glowed in the brigand's face. Wasso Mikail looked disgusted. He nursed some secret grudge of his own against Tokalji, and had wanted to cut his throat from the minute he discovered the scoundrel was our prisoner. But Hugh's hunch was a good one. None could doubt that, as Tokalji gradually thawed under the influence of his stimulated acquisitive instincts.

And when Watty tramped in fifteen minutes afterward and plumped a bulging sack into the old thief's lap, a miracle was wrought. Sweat beaded on his forehead; his hands clawed the lovely stones; his eyes shone; he cackled to himself and crooned like a mother over her baby.

"Tell him they are his, and that we will add gold to them, if he plays fair with us," continued Hugh when he judged he had made his effect. "But he will have to remain our prisoner until we leave."

"He awaits your orders," Nikka translated the reply, as Tokalji regretfully tore his attention from the treasure on his knees. "Wait a minute." This last as Tokalji burst into a tumult of excited speech. "He says for you not to worry about Mahkouf Pasha. He knows all about the pasha. He, the pasha, has been smuggling arms from Rumania to Kemal Pasha at Angora, and Tokalji has played a part in the business."

Hugh just grinned, and the rest of us grinned back at him.

"We are indeed fortunate," remarked King.

"Fortunate your eye!" returned Hugh with jubilant disrespect. "I knew such precious scoundrels would sell each other out. Now, Nikka, you tell Tokalji he is to inform Mahkouf Pasha that he regards us as his friends, inasmuch as we relieved him last night from the oppression of a band of thieves. And we'll have Mahkouf in here, and give him an earful. I suppose we'll have to drug in that poor Hilyer woman, too. I hate that. But she'll have to be made to understand her position."

The interview that followed was absurd and sordid. Mahkouf Pasha, after an attempt at hectoring defiance, collapsed completely and begged to be let alone. Nikka, who handled him, squelched him to putty, and told Wasso Mijail to see him to the street.

"And remember," Nikka concluded, "if you dare to breathe a word against us, you Levantine dog, we will show you up for what you are to the Allied High Commissioners, to your master the Grand Vizier and to the Nationalists at Angora. You have played all three of these, one against the others, and all three will be glad to hang you. Go, before I kick you!"

Wasso Mikail positively chuckled as he jerked the ashenfaced mongrel to his feet and steered him up the stairs.

Maude Hilyer was not so easy. She began by a wailing tirade that degenerated into a filthy harangue. I learned afterward that she had risen in life from a position which had made her engagement for the Gayety theater chorus an epochal event for her. We sent Betty from the room for a few moments, and Hugh gently quieted her.

"See here, Mrs. Hilyer," he said. "We don't enjoy this any more than you do. For what happened to your husband—perhaps anything I say will be in bad taste. But the fact remains that we had nothing against him. It was he who went after us. And I notice that although that demon Lafitte tortured and attempted to abuse several of us, including a woman, you never raised your hand to restrain him.

"But, I'm not appealing to you on grounds of decency, but of self-interest. If nothing comes out about Hilyer's end, you can go home and hold up your head. On the other hand, if you want to air what happened, I shall see to it that the whole story of my uncle's death becomes known. Do you think that then you will be received anywhere at home? I leave it to you."

The queer social vanity that was the mainspring of the woman's life responded to the argument. She dried her tears and restrained her tongue; and for a moment I felt sorry for her. But she showed her character at the last, even as she rose to go.

"It's all very well what you say, Lord Chesby," she whimpered. "But what am I going to do now? Hilyer's dead. Little Depping is loaded with mortgages. His cousin George will inherit what's left of it, anyway. And I—"

She hesitated artistically.

"I am not going to pay you blackmail," returned Hugh coldly, "but you may call on my solicitors this day two months. What we do for you will depend upon your conduct."

And that was the last any of us saw of Maude Hilyer. But I may as well say here that she did call on Mr. Bellowes in London, and that by Hugh's direction he arranged to pay her a small income conditioned on good behavior. Hugh, with his usual generosity, insisted, too, upon making substantial presents—booby prizes, he called them—to our two Russian prisoners. They were not released, however, until we left Constantinople, as their vindictive attitude assured us of their desire to wreck our fortunes, if they could discover an opportunity. What happened to the strange pair after Wasso Mikail freed them I do not know. But I should hazard a guess that while Mrs. Hilyer will be content to live respectably in a cheap Brighton hotel, eking out her means with the practice of bridge of an uncommonly sharp variety, Serge Vassilievich and Sandra Vassilievna—whether brother and sister, in truth, I never found out—will fleece their way through the smart watering places and resorts of the continent so long as the police permit them at large.

"Are we downhearted?" demanded Hugh, as the door closed behind Mrs. Hilyer.

"We are not," returned King. "It is amazing to reflect upon the apparent hopelessness of our position a couple of hours ago, while now we seem to have no reason to anticipate any insurmountable difficulties."

"We'll find a way," Nikka declared. "I feel more hopeful than I did. Hugh has given us a lesson in practical strategy. It was a master stroke to buy in Tokalji. Now we have some time to spare."

"And with submission, sir, Mister Nikka," said Watkins, gently closing the door behind him. "Miss Betty is dead asleep on some rugs upstairs. Ave you gentlemen forgot it's past eight o'clock? Come, now, a bite of supper, and you'd best sleep a while."

"He's right," assented Hugh. "We're overdoing it. A night's sleep will set us all up."

We slept royally, leaving the guard duty to Wasso Mikail's men; and the next day we awoke with confidence in our united ability to overcome all remaining obstacles. At Nikka's suggestion we called upon Wasso Mikail for his advice. He pondered for five minutes or so then spoke like a judge on the bench.

"I Am Not Going to Pay You Blackmail," Returned Hugh Coldly.

"A great treasure like this cannot be trusted in many men's hands," he said. "Otherwise I would offer to transport it by mule trains to the dwelling place of my tribe. Jakka knows how secure that is. But even if we succeeded in carrying it there, what should we do with it? To make use of it, you must carry it to the lands where you live.

"So, friends of my sister's son, I say that you must put the treasure on a boat, and you must go on that boat, yourselves, and you must be sure you can trust the captain."

"But how can we find such a boat and captain?" asked Hugh.

"Leave that to me," answered Wasso Mikail promptly. "I know certain men of my race in this city who can furnish me with information about the vessels that come to the Golden Horn. And in the meantime, you must make boxes to hold the treasure."

We heard no more from him for a week. He went and came, sometimes by day and sometimes by night; and we in the house in Sokaki Masyeri, prisoners as well as captors, labored with saw and hatchet, hammer and nails. As fast as we shaped the boxes, we carried them down to the drain and packed them, wrapping gold and gems in whatever fabrics we could find around the house, and in this way we used up all the loose lumber, cloth and bedding in Tokalji's storerooms.

Then, one night as we sat in the atrium, very sore as to hands and fingers from the unaccustomed carpentry, there was a knock on the courtyard door, and Wasso Mikail ushered in a tall, lean man in a blue sea-officer's cap. He left this man in the courtyard, and came down to us.

"I have brought you a Scot captain who does not fear to dodge the law," said the old gypsy without preface. "He loves a Circassian girl who lives in a street near the Khan of the Georgians, and I have made it plain to him that if we do business with him the girl stays in my custody for surety of his honesty. He is a Russian, and his ship is his own—or so he says."

"You did not tell him what we wanted him for?" questioned Hugh.

"Tell him only what you must," counseled Wasso Mikail. "I think I have a hold on this man, but I would not trust him more than I could help."

"Why can't we tell him that we have made a remarkable find of ancient statuary, mosaics and that sort of thing?" I suggested. "He will look us up, and the story will sound credible for King. We'll let him know that the government wouldn't like to see such a valuable collection go to foreigners, and so we have to smuggle it."

"That will do," Nikka approved. "And that will explain why we must send the boxes aboard secretly."

We made the deal with the Russian captain that night. He was not a bad chap, but a bit put to it to earn the keep of himself, his crew and his vessel by reason of the anomalous situation in which they found themselves, the Slava still running under the old imperial registry. She was a tidy tramp of 5,000 tons odd, and Captain Malakovich made no objection to turning over the necessary cabins for our use.

The transfer of the treasure occupied a week, for we could only work at night, carrying the heavy boxes down the drain and utilizing the limited stowage room of the Curlew. We set Watkins aboard the Slava to watch the boxes, and the rest of us either mounted guard on our prisoners or else made more boxes and packed. It was a hectic time. The only real excitement that marked it, however, was a visit we received from two of Tokalji's men from the camp of the tribe in the forest of Belgrade. Kara took care of them, sending them back with imaginary instructions from her father.

The last day, after the treasure boxes, now duly stenciled "Antiques, Statuary, Chgs. Pd., With Care," were stowed away in a secret compartment of the Slava's hold, we all found time to go to the British embassy to see Hugh and Betty married. Kara, strangely subdued in a costume furnished by Betty, hung to Nikka's arm and watched the ceremony with amazement.

"Do the Franks have to do all that to be married?" she commented. "I am more than ever glad I am a Tzigane."

"What are you going to do with her, Nikka?" asked Betty. "Send her to school. Or let me look after her? I'd love to."

Nikka laughed.

"You wouldn't very long. No, I'm not going to curb my wild hawk so drastically. She shall taste of civilization sip by sip, until it savors sweetly on her tongue."

"And you?" cried Hugh. "Aren't you coming with us?"

"No. I must tame her. And in taming her I shall indulge the craving that has grown in me to sample again the joys of the open road that I have not known since I was a lad. We are going to wander, Kara and I. We will go up into the Rhodopes with Wasso Mikail for a while, and then we will take the Tzigane's tribe through the Balkans and over the Danube and the Carpathians, on, on, wherever we choose."

So, when the Slava steamed out of the Golden Horn that afternoon, Hugh and Betty, Vernon King, Watkins and I waved good-by to our comrade. Nikka and Kara stood on the pier end as long as we could see them; and after they had dwindled out of sight we turned our gaze on the matchless skyline of Stamboul, with its lofty domes and slender minarets and close-packed buildings tumbling down the hillsides to the great cordon of the old Byzantine sea wall.

And on the very edge of the wall was poised the squat bulk of Tokalji's weird establishment. We could see it clearly, the fine lines of the House of the Married, the plumpy tip of a cedar waving from its mysterious hidden courtyard, and the L-shaped mass of the bachelor's quarters opposite. They bulked smaller at this distance than when seen from the bobbing cockpit of the Curlew. Already it began to seem difficult to believe that within their walls we had witnessed so much of tragedy and devotion.

[THE END.]

Widely Varying Ideas of Things of Beauty

Ways that are not our ways always seem funny. "Civilized" visitors to Papua, New Guinea, says the New Orleans Times-Picayune, are quite moved to laughter at the fact that in that "benighted land" dogs' teeth are used as money. It used to be the same when our own folks here in America found the "absurd" Indians carrying strings of shells (wampum) as a medium of exchange. In both these exotic cases the money tokens also were regarded as things of beauty and worn as such by the females of the species and sometimes by the more esthetic of the males.

But, after all, is it any more laughable to regard dogs' teeth as beautiful than it is to find charm in elephant or walrus tusks? Yet ivory, especially carved ivory, has been a civilized treasure perhaps since civilization began; not only ivory, but even plain bone. And how about our civilized admiration for turtle carapaces and the esteem in which we hold the shells of the pearl oyster and the esthetic vogue of the conch shell cut up and worked into cameos? After, all, is not "clean as a hound's tooth" one of the popular metaphors?

Bird Made Much Trouble

When telephone service suddenly stopped between Melbourne and Albury, Australia, says the Pathfinder Magazine, a long, careful search revealed that the cause of the trouble was a magpie. This busy bird had built a nest on the top of a pole—a nest 14 inches across and about 8 inches deep. The size of the nest would not have mattered, but evidently intent on making the new home durable and solid, the magpie had used several pieces of wire which had been snipped off and left on the ground by repair men. One of the pieces of wire was in contact with two wires of the line, which naturally caused a short circuit and stopped the service.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Peanut Butter Pails

PEANUT butter is now put up in such a way that when it is all eaten, a playtoy remains. To accomplish this, the manufacturer fills a little pail with the delicious spread, covers the top with special airtight paper, and then slips on the lid. A handle such as any pail should possess is there, too. So you see when the peanut butter is used it leaves a pail which is just the right size for Betty or Jim to use when playing in their sand pit.

Three Delicious Recipes

A few novel ways to use the pail's contents are:

Peanut Butter Bread: Mix and sift together two cups flour, four teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon salt and one-fourth cup sugar. Blend three-fourths cup canned peanut butter with one beaten egg and one and one-fourth cups milk, add to the dry ingredients and beat well. Bake in small loaves in an oven, at 350° F., for 45 to 50 minutes. This bread is best when a day old.

Swedish Peanut Wafers: Cream one-half cup butter and one-half cup canned peanut butter, add one-half cup sugar and cream again. Add one well-beaten egg and one and one-third cups flour sifted with a few grains of salt. Add one-fourth teaspoon lemon extract, chill and roll very thin. Cut in small rounds, press a peanut in the center of each and bake in a slow oven, 300° for 8 to 10 minutes.

Peanut Butter Penoche: Boil three cups brown sugar, one-third cup canned peanut butter, two tablespoons butter and one cup milk to the soft ball stage (236 degrees). Cool. Beat until creamy, add one-half cup salted peanuts and one-half teaspoon vanilla extract and pour out into a buttered platter. Cut in squares.

Tomato Cocktails Click

THE tomato juice cocktail has taken its place in society. In other words, "it clicks," — suits the palates of the discriminating. In proof of this, one woman recently wrote about them: "We have been serving tomato juice cocktails in our family for a number of years and consider them both delicious and valuable to our health," and went on to ask for scientific support for her conviction.

Justified Popularity

The tomato juice cocktail's popularity is approved by eminent medical opinion. Last year, William Howard Fitch of the U. S. A. Medical Research Bureau, said of tomatoes: "The popularity of the tomato, fresh and canned, is fully justified by our present knowledge of food values, for the tomato is rich in all three vitamins and retains them well when cooked and canned. Weight for weight, tomatoes raw or canned, tank with lettuce and green string beans as sources of vitamins A and B and with oranges and lemons as sources of vitamin C." He also states that one added advantage of canned tomatoes is that they are available throughout the year at prices "which are neither prohibitive nor subject to violent fluctuations."

Tomato juice for babies is mentioned thus by Dr. A. F. Hess of Columbia University: "Canned tomatoes is the most serviceable anti-scorbutic for artificially fed infants. It is well borne, inexpensive and available. From the nutritional standpoint it may be regarded as a palatable solution of the three vitamins and should be fed to such infants at the rate of 30 grains per day."

Naturally, when fed to babies the juice is simply strained. For adults, many like to chill the juice and season it with salt, lemon juice, tabasco and Worcestershire sauce. The pulp should be saved and used with meats in stews or alone.

ELECTRICITY LIGHTENS THE FOOD BILLS

By KATHERINE G. CORNELL
Director of the Kelvinator Domestic Institute

IN the old days — when pork chops might be had for ten cents a pound, and eggs were high at twenty-five cents a dozen —we didn't discuss economy to any great extent. If we found it necessary or expedient to save, we did so and said nothing about it.

Today, however, it is quite the smart thing to be thrifty; to live by a budget; to study the food needs of the family and buy prudently. We like to make the best and most intelligent use of every piece of equipment we install in our homes.

Aids Thrifty Habits

The woman who has put a modern, scientifically constructed electric refrigerator in her kitchen has countless interesting surprises awaiting her. Not only does she find that it constantly and reliably safeguards her fresh food supplies so that even though they may remain unused for a week she need give herself no concern about them, but she discovers also that in its quiet, understanding way it is aiding and abetting her in all of her thrift habits.

By marketing but once or twice a week, instead of every day, she saves time and effort, and she is able thus to effect a considerable saving in money also by buying in these larger quantities. Further, she may plan a whole week's menus in advance—another saving of time and worry, and of money as well.

But one of the most satisfactory things about this modern kitchen aid, she finds, is the way it takes care of cooked foods, left-overs and odds and ends — usually the bane of a housewife's existence.

Appearance of Food Enhanced

A little covered bowl of left-over string beans, peas or asparagus, taken plump and inviting from the cool depths of the electric refrigerator, presents an appetite-arousing appearance very different from the usual withered and dried look of foods which have been kept in a wavering, varying temperature. Served on chilled lettuce which has been carefully washed, placed in a covered pan and tucked away as soon as it arrived from the market, they will make a very refreshing salad. Top the salad, which may very nicely be a combination of left-over beans, peas and asparagus, with a spoonful of mayonnaise blended with one of chili sauce, both of which the canny housewife keeps conveniently at hand in a corner of her electric ice-box.

A spoonful of left-over fruit, fresh or canned, placed in the refrigerator in a covered bowl will come forth fresh and finely flavored to add the finishing touch to a dessert; and odds and ends of cooked meat put carefully away in a covered dish, to be added to from day to day, will blend deliciously in a ragout or a meat pie; or, finely chopped and tastily flavored, they will provide a plate of mysteriously good sandwiches for a picnic luncheon.

And the Sunday dinner left-overs may be kept in the electric refrigerator until Thursday or Friday when, every one having forgotten all about their being left-overs, they will come forth fresh and delicious and as attractive in taste and appearance as when they were originally served.

WHAT WILL BE THE NEXT FAD?

into disfavor, the sensible and neat appearing oxford taking their place. As the shoes went down in height the importance of an attractive stocking arose. Lisle and wool were reserved for every day occasions, and the properly dressed girl wore silk stockings on Sundays and other special occasions. Some, more daring than others, had ornaments on these leg coverings, an deven peek-a-boo stitching now and then.

Coincident with these shifts of scenery the skirt started skyward. Twenty years ago some daring woman of ill repute over in France appeared with a "split skirt," a devilish device that, under favorable circumstances, enableld the gaping male to glimpse vistas of the feminine leg almost half way to the knee. Believe it or not, that was the sensation 20 years ago.

Gradually the skirts ascended—th outer one still remaining for general covering, but the inside ones disappearing into the oblivon of the past. Shorter skirts brought prettier stockings and the more daring girls began to "roll 'em" above the knee and many a doubting Thomas got an "eyeful" much to his consternation and astonishment. Strange to say he survived although many nearsighted men took to wearing double-strength glasses.

The further development was natural. From stockings so sheer that they were practically invisible, the style changed to no stockings at all, and such is the present status of that interesting development.

A number of fathers who for years have been called upon to pay unheard of prices for an unheard of quantity of silk hose, now experience anything but a sigh of relief and incredulity when they learn that they no longer have to buy stockings for stylish daughters. That's the first good news they have had in what is proper in feminine apparel since they became the family providers.

The end, of course, is not yet. It may be in stockings, because you can't take "something from nothing." In other garments the tendency is in the same direction as the leg coverings. The upper part of the person still wears clothes, whose principal function is decorative merely. The movies forecast the approaching styles and those who attend such exhibitions are already prepared for street adornment of not more than two gridles, separated by pure skin.

So much for the girls—but what of the men?

Those poor boobs are still back in the 19th century. In summer's heat and winter's chill they burden themselves with enough covering to stagger a pack mule. Poor man still has to wear pants—long, enveloping two pronged affairs that extend down past his ankles and rake on the ground. He must have oodles of underwear beneath the outers. He must wear a shirt whose collar grips his neck like a hangman's noose, and a tie which adds to the torture. Those who are not too fat have a belt strapped around their middle, gripping like an old-fashioned corset, and he who dares not depend upon this uncertain and treacherous device, clamps himself together by means of gaudy suspenders—the most hideous creation known to the universe.

So far the girls have had all the best of it. Some day man will appear in pants that do not reach to the knee—a little doublet around his loins, and nothing else anywhere; but in the meantime he will continue to be a martyr to convention imposed upon him by a sex which has long since discarded the coverings it insists upon him continuing.

The day of the vanshed sox for women is here. May heaven speed the day when a similar emancipation will come for man.

You can't sharpen a man's wits by keeping his nose on the grind stone.

The Question

If Dick's father is Tom's son, what relation is Dick to Tom?
(Answer at bottom of column)

BRING BACK MY BABY TO ME

Backward, turn backward, oh time in your flight.
Make me a girl again, just for tonight.
Give me the long golden curls that were worn
Back in the days before tresses were shorn.
Give me the skirts that brought many a laugh
When boisterous winds flapped 'em over the calf.
Give me the roses our cheeks sported then
Without touchings up from the old Five and Ten.
Give me the petticoats; give me the lace;
Give me the modesty; give me the grace;
Give me the power to blush when I'm kissed;
Give me things that I lately have missed.
I have the gimme. Oh time in your flight,
Give me my girlhood, please—just for tonight.

"PIRATE" SUIT FOR BEACH; STRIKING KNITTED COSTUMES

"NOTHING new under the sun." Nothing new? But have you seen the latest pajama suits, which are injecting such an amusing likewise novel note into beach fashions? Comparing the now and the then of women's fashions the pajama outfits which the mode is parading before the eyes of those who would see and be seen on the beach are amazingly original or new if the word pleases you best.

It would seem that the chief aim of the designers of pajama costumes is to capture ideas from any and every source, re-creating them to tune in with fashion's demand for unique if not eccentric beach attire.

There's overalls, for instance. Who would dream of overalls becoming a style theme for the smart set. Visit leading specialty shops where smart pajama collections abound and what do we behold? Overalls, yes, cunningest overalls ever, of sateen, cretonne and even gingham. Clever for garden wear as well as beach wear.

If, perchance, overalls flavor too much of the domestic and mundane, well then, here's something more thrilling, more fraught with romance—the pirate beach suit. The picture shows it, feminized to suit the purposes of the present-day stylists. Here we see milady in full pirate regimentals—trousers developed in colorful striped pique making a designful play on bias effects, the large picture-brim hat, of course. The wool jersey blouse has a sun-tan back.

For her next inspiration Dame Fashion flits to the Far East, where harem trousers suggest a means of expressing the pajama mode in a different way. The baggy trousers banded about the ankles are topped with a princess fitted blouse which flares at the knees above the knees.

To climax the mode next wings its flight seeking "ideas," which brought back to us take form in mandarin coats, gorgeous in color and design, some of formal satin mostly for boudoir wear, others of equally as fascinating motif, done in inexpensive cotton crepes. Then there's the "gob" pajama suit of white cotton gabardine, with laced fastenings, a "gob" hat and everything nautical down to the slightest detail. Oh! It's the ends of the earth our stylists are scouring, in behalf of pajama fashions with which to intrigue milady fair.

UNIQUE OUTFIT FOR THE BEACH

To knit or not to knit is not the question, for one does not have to knit these days in order to be appareled in stunning knitted togs. Women of this day and age take knitted things for granted. Whatever the style trends, Twentieth century genius does not hesitate to interpret them in knitted stitch.

Just now seekers of the latest are elated over the intriguing scarf and sweater sets which are shown in knitted collections. The sweater may be or may not be with sleeves. The item which "turns the trick" is the triangle or oblong knitted scarf which companions with the sweater, showing relationship by carrying the same patterning and coloring. The three-cornered knitted scarfs tie about the neck—the knot at one shoulder, the point falling low over the other. Tres chic!

Speaking of colorings and patternings for fall in their bold contrasts and design they fairly hit the eye—attractive to the point of fascination. Of just such modernistic appeal is the blouse and scarf of knitted jersey in lower picture. The three-tone motif which consists of V-shape strappings is repeated both in the blouse and in the wide shawl-like scarf which the knit-clad young woman is carrying in her hand.

Very unusual knitted frocks now appearing in the sports realm take on entirely new lines from such as have been associated with the past. In these an effect of sweater and skirt is achieved in one-piece models, a knitted, plaited skirt being attached to the hemline of the sweater. A knitted belt adds a swagger detail. The ensemble note is further accented in that the costume is topped with a shapely crocheted beret which fits the head as modishly as any felt or straw shape.

And there's the sun-tan vogue! What novelty it is carrying into the knitted frock program. Interesting versions include lightweight tweed like sleeveless dresses, the low sun tan cut emphasized in the back of the blouse. If one changes her mind about wanting the rays of the sun to mercilessly tan shoulders and arms, a matching sleeved cardigan goes along with the frock, ready to be slipped on with ease.

HAVE MODERNISTIC APPEAL.

BOTH WORE STARS OF GOLD

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

TRENTON had always stood more or less in awe of Mrs. Mortimer. She had lived for thirty years in the big brick house set back in the velvety green lawn on South Main street; she had driven regularly through the town first in her carriage, and later in her closed car. She had attended the Episcopal church and had contributed freely to all worthy benefits. Trenton had helped bury her husband with all the pomp and respect due the "town's richest man" when Andrew Jr. was two years of age, and yet Trenton did not know Mrs. Mortimer.

It watched with interest when she closed her house each summer and left for the seashore; the mountains; sometimes Europe. It watched with equal interest the preparations for her return. It had watched Andrew Jr. grow up and go away to college. Andrew was much more democratic than his stately mother. He had attended the Trenton schools and had got into as much mischief as the rest of the Trenton boys; his first automobile had been a source of much worry to the townspeople. He returned from college at regular intervals and Trenton was always glad to welcome him home.

He was just twenty-four when he came home that spring of 1917 from training camp, resplendent in his tailored khaki and Sam Browne belt, two bars on his shoulders, and his mother had been brave when he waved goodby to her and to Trenton from the rear platform of a troop-filled train. It was then that Trenton came to know Mrs. Mortimer better. She opened her big house and the women daily spent hours there rolling bandages, cutting, sewing, knitting, packing. Mrs. Mortimer moved about the rooms quietly, regally. She talked about Andy. A blue star on a white background hung in her window.

And then in September, 1918, that blue star turned to gold! Trenton was stricken. The young Andrew Mortimer had fallen in the Argonne. They tried to convey their love and sympathy to his mother, but grief-seared, she shut them out of her life. She would not talk; she would not listen.

The following summer she went to New York and brought Andy's body home, draped with the stars and stripes. Trenton turned out to do him honor. The business houses were closed; the flag at half-mast, and every lad who had gone across acted as military escort as they bore Andy from the railroad station to the cemetery to place him beside his father. Trenton wept unashamed when that salute was fired across the open grave.

Mrs. Mortimer again went into seclusion. The war had brought her out—it had taken her back—she was bitter.

She regularly left for her summers at seashore and mountains. She never went to Europe again. She spent two months each winter in Florida. And then back to the lovely, lonely big house on Trenton's main street.

It was three years after the war that the minister came to her.

"Mrs. Mortimer, there is a woman in town who needs work. She came here a month ago. A splendid untiring worker, earnest and faithful. I have come to know and like her. She needs money—seems to be all alone in the world. Wonder if you wouldn't help her by giving her something to do?"

Mrs. Mortimer toyed with the string of black beads about her neck.

"I will be glad to help her, of course, Doctor Dykeman. Send her to me tomorrow. Of course, all my housework is efficiently cared for by my servants, but—"

"Margaret Murphy is not asking for money, Mrs. Mortimer. She wants work. Unless you have work for her—"

"I can arrange for some, Doctor Dykeman. I will expect her tomorrow."

Margaret Murphy came into the great living room of the Mortimer house almost on tiptoes the next morning. She eyed the rich-toned rugs in genuine admiration. She looked about her with shining eyes, a smile on her broad Irish face. Evidently Margaret Murphy knew and loved beauty. Then—over the mantel she saw the white flag with the gold star in the center, and below the picture of young Andrew Mortimer, Jr.

"Oh!" she whispered. "It's her boy. God bless 'im."

Mrs. Mortimer came in and Maggie turned, her round rosy face framed with graying hair, radiant in health and good nature. She met the cold gray eyes of Mrs. Mortimer and the smile faded.

"I have arranged with Mrs. Black, my housekeeper, to turn the washings over to you, Mrs. Murphy. And once a week—on Fridays—I want you to come and help clean while Elfreda—my second maid—is visiting her mother. Will that be of help to you?"

"It will indeed, Mrs. Mortimer, and I thank you kindly. I'll try to please you—and I thank you."

She turned to the picture on the mantel.

"Your boy, Mrs. Mortimer—I heard—I'm sorry."

Mrs. Mortimer nodded shortly. "Yes, my son—Andrew."

Margaret Murphy wiped her eyes. "You give something big, Mrs. Mortimer—you gave something wonderful to America."

Mrs. Mortimer cut her short. "Mrs. Black will have the laundry ready for you. Good morning, Mrs. Murphy."

For three years Margaret Murphy gave two days a week to Mrs. Mortimer and at the end of that time she did not know her any better than she did the morning they had stood together before the gold-starred flag over the mantel, but Margaret Murphy continued to smile and sing over her work.

Then the company's homecoming day, when Trenton was gay with flags and bunting. Margaret Murphy went to the cemetery with her arms full of flowers. She wended her way among the graves until she stood in the shadow of the granite shaft that bore the name of Andrew Mortimer, Jr.; the date of his birth and death, the company with which he served. She knelt and carefully arranged the colorful blossoms about the little flag that waved in the morning breeze. She was about to rise to her feet when some one came and stood near her. It was Mrs. Mortimer.

"This is kind of you, Mrs. Murphy; very kind. I have noticed fresh flowers here regularly. Have you brought them?"

Margaret Murphy nodded.

"But why, Mrs. Murphy, why do you do this when I—"

"I—I can't go to my own boy's grave, Mrs. Mortimer, and I want to show my love and my pride by placing flowers on another's grave—perhaps one of his—what did they call them, buddies? Anyway, another who gave his life for the same cause—America!"

Mrs. Mortimer's gloved hand fell on Margaret Murphy's sleeve.

"Your boy! Did you say your boy?" she faltered.

Margaret Murphy nodded and turned back the lapel of her coat. A tiny gold star shone there.

"Timmie died in the Argonne, too."

"O-h-h," breathed Andrew Mortimer's mother. "And you never told me!"

"You never let me—but I understood," and Margaret Murphy smiled winsomely through the tears. "I'm saving my money and I'm going to his grave on Armistice day, ma'am."

"Where is Timmie buried?"

"In Arlington, ma'am."

Mrs. Andrew Mortimer's arms went about Margaret Murphy and she held her close as the strains of "Onward, Christian soldiers," in the distance announced the approach of the annual parade—coming to honor Trenton's survivors of the great war.

"You are going to Arlington tomorrow, Margaret Murphy, and I'm going with you," whispered Mrs. Mortimer. "We are going to Timmie's grave tomorrow."

Brought Psychology to Bear on Boy Problem

An understanding of boy psychology, and the application of a few simple principles growing out of such understanding, have been factors in the success of the Detroit Boys' club.

At one time articles were disappearing with distressing regularity from one of the coat rooms used by the younger boys. Suspicion centered on one who had a reputation for "lifting" things. He was promoted to chairmanship of an anti-theft committee—and there were no more complaints of stolen goods.

"Jim" used to be a gang leader. His profane vocabulary was picturesque and complete. When asked to take the chairmanship of the anti-swearing committee he was flattered, and said: "Say—ll, yes! I'll make those blankety-blank bozos cut out their swearing." And he did—along with marked improvement in the leader himself.—A. P. Pilides in the American Review of Reviews.

Korean Father's Word Law

Picture a modern American boy who chances to meet his father on the street dropping suddenly to his knees in profound obeisance, yet this is quite the thing in Korea. A young son must never play, nor an older one smoke in his father's presence. For a son to assume a free and easy posture before his father is very ill-mannered and no matter what his age, a room is provided for his recreation much like our nursery. There are four things that an old proverb tells the son to fear greatly; they are "earthquake, wind, fire and father." Should a prison term be meted out to a Korean father his son takes up his residence in the neighborhood to supply him with food and clothing.—Detroit News.

D.D. and LL.D.

The two degrees, D.D. and LL.D., are quite different. The first is Doctor of Divinity, that is a person learned in those subjects that form the education of a divine or theologian. The second, LL.D., is Doctor of Laws, the two L's being the plural form where initials are used. This degree is, or should be conferred upon those deeply learned, in the subjects that make up higher education and culture—in languages, literature, science and philosophy. The former degree is only conferred upon ministers of religion, the latter upon both ministers and laymen.

Geographical Term

Oceania, or Oceanica, was a designation which embraced the land surface which remained after apportioning the continents of Eurasia, Africa and the Americas. The term covered Australia, the Indian archipelago and the Pacific islands. After Australia was set apart as a continent Oceanica was restricted to the Malay archipelago and the islands of the Pacific.

Dreams of Disaster, Killed on Same Day

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mrs. Estelle Schooeover, fifty, told her husband at the breakfast table that a dream she had during the night was a premonition that disaster would overtake one of them before 24 hours had passed.

Arriving home after work, Schooeover failed to find his wife. Deciding to go to a corner store he walked past a group of persons standing over a prostrate body lying on the trolley tracks. It proved to be that of his wife. She had been killed by a traction car.

YOUTHS CONFESS TO MANY MURDERS

Seek Revenge for Loss of Relatives in Russia.

Moscow.—Having murdered a few "Whites" in their village from motives of political revenge, four young Communists in the Chita district of Siberia, now under arrest, acquired a taste for the game and blossomed into ordinary bandits, according to their confession to the police.

The boys were arrested last August but the details of their strange career of crime, over a period of four years, have just been made public. The Chita region was devastated by years of civil warfare after the 1917 revolution, especially through the activities of Ataman Semionoff, and this is one of innumerable tragedies that can be traced back to that chaotic period.

The four boys—Britzin, Filonoff, Perilomoff and Pritupoff—had been mere children when the waves of civil strife rolled over their native village of Aksha. All of them had lost relatives at the hands of the White invaders.

In 1924 they joined the Communist youth organization in a group and became among the most fervid propagandists against the rich peasants and White sympathizers. But words did not satisfy them. Finding that the Communists were opposed to acts of individual terror, they decided to take the law into their own hands.

One night a hand grenade was thrown into the house of a villager who had served under General Seminoff. Several persons were injured and the perpetrator of the crime remained a mystery to Aksha inhabitants. Then a rich peasant known to be anti-Soviet was mysteriously murdered. Others followed, the victims being always Whites. The whole series of murders, it now appears, was carried out by the four friends.

Fighter Fined, Then Chooses Not to Appeal

Portland, Ore.—William McConnell and L. B. Thompson, neighbors, fought to a draw here recently.

They carried their fight into court and both lost.

"It is the judgment of the court that both of you are equally guilty of assault and battery. The fine will be $10 in each case," said Judge Mears.

Thompson agreed to pay the fine, but there was some doubt as to whether McConnell would until the judge spoke up again.

McConnell wanted to appeal his case. He was informed that no appeal could be taken when the fine is less than $20.

"I'll be good to you and make the fine $50, so you can appeal," Judge Mears said.

No appeal was filed.

5-Day Sentence Worries Man Serving 5 Years

San Quentin Prison, Calif.—Louis Righetti, twenty-six, serving five years to life for conviction in San Francisco on three counts of highway robbery, is one of those persons who believes in crossing bridges before he gets to them.

Louis confessed to prison officials that it wasn't the five years to life that caused him to be worried.

No, Louis is worried because when he eventually is freed from state's prison he must serve a five-day sentence in the Alameda county jail for reckless driving. He was convicted in San Francisco on the more serious charge before he could start serving the sentence for an automobile law infraction.

Ownership of Goose Decided by Barnyard

Lackawanna, N. Y.—Two women appeared in court here to claim possession of a goose, and it was only by a unique decision that the claim was properly settled.

The goose was taken first to one home and allowed to walk in the yard. Here the goose seemed at a loss. Shortly after it was carried to the second home and left alone. It strayed in a coop in the yard and honked away merrily. The court decided to award the fowl to the second woman.

Fined Them Both

Taunton, Mass.—Can two men drive the same automobile at the same time? An affirmative answer to this question cost Edward Collins and William Gorman $100 each in court here. Unable to determine which was operating the automobile, the judge fined both on charges of drunken driving.

Improve Peanut Ration for Hogs

Value of Tankage Studied in Series of Tests Made at Beltsville.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Peanuts are used to a considerable extent in hog feeding in the peanut-growing areas of the United States, says the United States Department of Agriculture, and are usually fed alone or with mineral supplements only. The efficiency of peanuts for growing pigs is very materially increased, however, according to the department, when tankage is included in the ration as a protein supplement.

Tests at Beltsville.

This conclusion is the result of a series of feeding tests recently completed at Beltsville, Md., by O. G. Hankins and J. H. Zeller, of the animal husbandry division of the bureau of animal industry, and conducted in connection with the study of peanuts in the soft-pork problem.

Because many young pigs are commonly fed peanuts without protein supplements, the question arose as to whether the prevailing method of feeding was producing the best possible results. Three experiments were undertaken in which different rations were compared. In the first experiment, the investigators fed two lots of pigs shelled peanuts and minerals, one lot with tankage and the other without. In the second experiment the rations were the same as in the first except that the peanuts were unshelled. The third experiment was similar to the second except for a change in minerals.

The results are noteworthy in showing the value of tankage as a supplement to peanuts and minerals in the ration for young pigs, and are discussed in Technical Bulletin 110-T, entitled "Correcting the Inefficiency of Peanuts for Growth in Pigs," just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Results Summarized.

As an average of all the experiments, say the authors in summarizing the results, the feed cost of 100 pounds of gain, not including minerals, was $9.92 for the tankage-fed pigs and $17.86 when no tankage was fed. The cost of the minerals did not exceed 35 cents per 100 pounds gain for either group.

The results also show that peanuts with only mineral supplements are not efficient for pigs in the early stages of growth. The addition of tankage more than doubled the daily gain of the pigs in the experiments.

The amount of each nutrient consumed per unit of gain was also much less for the tankage-fed pigs than for those not receiving tankage.

A copy of the bulletin may be obtained free as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the office of information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Early Cutting of Soy Beans Most Profitable

When soy bean hay is cut too early the yield is reduced but when cut too late it is hard to cure. The best time to cut soy bean hay is after the beans have become well formed, but before the beans have reached the stage known as half-grown.

With most forage crops the later you cut them the easier they are to cure. It is not so with soy beans because as soy beans mature the proportion of beans in the hay increases. Early cut soy bean hay is much more palatable to the stock than the late cut hay. Early cutting means reduced yield. The greatest yield is obtained at maturity when the leaves have begun to turn yellow.

Mechanical Corn Picker Reduces Number of Men

Under ordinary conditions, farmers can profitably own a mechanical corn picker if they plant and harvest 100 acres or more, yielding 50 bushels of corn per acre, according to Prof. F. C. Fenton, Kansas State Agricultural college.

The mechanical picker reduces the number of men required to harvest and reduces the cost of harvesting in some instances to about half, Professor Fenton says. It also relieves the farmer of one of the most disagreeable and monotonous farm tasks.

Nests for Hens

Poultry specialists recommend one nest for every five birds. If there are sufficient nests, all hens are insured of a laying place and the eggs are more likely to be clean and of high quality. In the well-planned house, nests can be removed easily and conveniently for cleaning. Metal nests have an advantage in this respect because they are easier to keep sanitary and they harbor fewer mites and bed bugs.

Success With Hogs

The successful hog raiser has come to appreciate sunshine more and more. Modern hog house plans provide for admission of plenty of sunlight to the pens. Hogs require an abundance of fresh, pure air, which should be furnished without subjecting them to injurious drafts. They suffer much in a close, confining, poorly ventilated place. Sunlight should sweep all parts of the floor each day, to destroy disease breeding organisms which may be present.

Keep Poultry Yards Clean and Sanitary

Parasites Undermine Health and Sap Vigor of Birds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Care exercised in keeping poultry yards clean and in sanitary condition has a double function in keeping the flock clear of parasites that undermine the health and sap the vigor of the birds. The injury by mites, lice, fleas, and other parasitic organisms is sometimes obvious, but it also happens that some insects and other small creatures are carriers or intermediate hosts of some of the internal parasites of poultry.

For example, according to specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture, one variety of roundworm must develop for one stage of its life outside the poultry it affects. The roundworm lays its eggs within the chicken and they are eliminated in the droppings. They will not mature if picked up by a fowl. They do mature if a water flea picks up the eggs. Then if a hen takes in the water flea with her drinking water the round-worm parasite of the flea develops into a poultry parasite.

Many similar examples are known, and others are suspected. The grasshopper, for instance, has recently been shown to transmit at least one important parasite of domestic poultry.

Sanitation and cleanliness which prevents such insects from having access to the droppings may thus break a cycle through which infestation reaches the flock. The insects in themselves may not be harmful to poultry, but if they have had an opportunity to feed on contaminated droppings they may be the means of spreading these particular parasites.

Factor in Increasing Production of Crops

Last year farmers bought more fertilizers than in many years. This increased use of fertilizer was a large factor in increasing crop production. The American farmer is learning gradually the lesson offered by the European farmer who spends more for fertilizer per acre than any other farmer in the world. Holland is continually enriching its soil, which makes possible the intensive methods of the country and puts it at the head of the list of nations in the crop yield per acre. Where the American farmer was inclined formerly to plant over a wide area of land of questionable fertility, he is coming to realize that with more intensive methods, proper fertilization, and greater attention to the culture of his fields, he can make more money with less labor and acreage and undergo less anxiety from plant diseases and frosts.

Soy Beans Are Popular as Protein Supplement

Soy beans are proving a popular protein supplement in Indiana. Twenty-one of the twenty-four members of the Howard-Miami Dairy Herd Improvement association are feeding soy beans to their herds, according to I O. Holliday.

The demand for linseed oil meal and cottonseed meal is increasing each year. As the need for such protein-rich feeds as a supplement to home-grown feeds for dairy cattle becomes more fully realized the demand for such by-products in dairy districts will continue to increase. Some other source of protein must be secured. Present indications are that the soy bean may play an important part in the solution of this important problem.

Disk Before Plowing Is Advantageous Practice

It has been pretty definitely proved that pulverizing the top layer of the soil with disk harrow before plowing is done is a very advantageous practice. When the furrow is turned over the pulverized soil breaks away from the furrow and helps fill up the furrow bottom much more effectively than when the solid furrow is turned over. In the latter case large openings are often left which cause the soil to dry out rapidly and become too hard to work down well.

When using a disk for this purpose, do not angle it too much. Let it run rather straight and it will do satisfactory work.

Agricultural Hints

Give the hens plenty of water.

Hog lots and pastures used year after year are one of the causes of runty pigs.

There is no such thing as too much sweet corn. Don't be stingy with your planting.

In recent years the soy bean has entered into the regular cropping system on a very large number of farms.

The manure pile is a fertile source of danger through providing a breeding place for flies, but it is also the most valuable single adjunct a mixed farmer can have.

Sweet clover hay should be cut before the stalks get too large to be good for hay. It is also important to cut sweet clover before the stalks get very coarse in order to prevent killing it.

H. H. Fish, Esq., President of the Company, summarizes from his letter to us as follows:

BUSINESS

Western Newspaper Union, successor to a company of the same name and a business founded in 1865, serves more than 10,000 daily and weekly country newspapers, maintaining fully equipped plants in 36 key cities of the United States from California to Massachusetts.

The Company supplies these newspapers with ready printed inside pages or with columns of prepared plate, containing various feature stories, serials and special articles selected by the newspaper publishers; places national advertising in their papers and prepares cuts and copy for local advertising campaigns.

The Company also does a large volume of commercial printing, prints in their entirety various magazines and trade journals and is responsible for the mechanical production of many of the feature services of The Associated Press.

FINANCIAL

During the past 20 years net profits of Western Newspaper Union, after all charges including depreciation, but before Federal taxes, averaged more than $680,000 annually, and in no single year were such net profits less than $450,000.

Net profits after depreciation, but before Federal taxes, for the past 4 years, as certified by Messrs. Arthur Andersen & Co., after eliminating operations of the paper mill, which is being sold coincident with this financing and after other adjustments arising from the reorganization as stated in their certificate, were as follows:

1926	955,383
1927	571,249
1928	765,825

Such net profits as above have averaged about $758,448 annually, and for the year ended December 31, 1928, amounted to $765,825, equivalent to more than 3 times the annual Debenture interest requirement.

After deducting from such net profits in 1928 Debenture interest requirements, Federal Taxes (parent company) at 12% and Preferred Stock dividends, the balance amounted to over $352,000, or about $2.35 per share on the 150,000 shares of Common Stock to be presently outstanding.

The net assets of the Company, available for these Debentures, based on the balance sheet, as at April 30, 1929, adjusted to give effect to the present financing, including the sale of the paper mill, were in excess of $8,500,000.

MANAGEMENT

Since the death in 1916 of the former owner, George A. Joslyn, his widow and other heirs have owned the majority of the Common Stock of Western Newspaper Union, control of which is now being acquired by the executives who have been responsible for its successful operation during the past 13 years.

All legal details will be passed upon by Messrs. Tenney, Harding, Sherman & Rogers of Chicago and by Messrs. White & Case of New York.

Mounted on an ass, M. Henri Castagne triumphantly rode to the mairie of Pessac, near Bordeaux, France, recently, to take his seat as the newly elected councillor. He wore the traditional gray top hat decorated with ribbons, and carried the picador's lance with which he paraded the village streets during the election campaign. Castagne styled himself "the laughing candidate," and one of his election pledges was that within three months all drinks would be free in the local cafes. Castagne won his seat by 60 votes, and so far has been the most popular candidate ever in the village.

TELLING IMPROBABLE TALES

Mrs. W. B. Bailey

As Mrs. Blackford talked with two of her neighbors, Mrs. Elliot and Mrs. Conner, she went on with her preparations for the luncheon which she must soon serve to hungry school boys and girls.

The two friends had just stepped into the bright, sunny kitchen for a few minutes' chat. Somehow, they always felt much more cheerful and happy after a little visit with this busy, happy neighbor. She seemed to them just full of all sorts of helpful ideas.

Bobby, aged five, just home from Miss DuVal's Kindergarten, skipped gleefully into the room. "Mother," he eagerly began, "there's a great big old freight train down there on the track and it runned right over a little freight train. It sure did. Right down there on the crossing." Out he skipped again.

"Now if that isn't just like a child of that age! Maudie Marie is always making up the most awful stories you ever heard, and she sticks to them as the truth," said Mrs. Conner.

"Don't you correct Bobby for telling such falsehoods, Mrs. Blackford?" asked Mrs. Elliot.

"No-o," said Mrs. Blackford slowly and thoughtfully, "I don't scold him if that is what you mean. Anyway, he hasn't told a falsehood."

"Hasn't told a falsehood? Didn't he just tell you that one train ran over another one?" demanded Mrs. Elliott.

"Yes, he did, but to him that is truth. It really happened. He just hasn't entirely learned in which place it happened.

"Will you please explain?" asked Mrs. Conner sensing a good idea back of all this.

"Children of his age are often confused when their imaginations begin to develope; they are sometimes really uncertain which events are purely imaginative and which physically true. They have two complete and different worlds, in both of which they live actually and actively. One is just as real and vital to them as the other—" But at that moment she heard Bobby returning and stopped in her explanation.

Her neighbors were anxious to hear what was to come this time. The mother calmly continued her work about the kitchen.

"Mother, there was the nicest little freight train down there on the track a while ago—puffing along like this — chuff — chuff" Hands and feet assisted him in being a train—feet scuffing, arms working like drivers on the drive wheels. "And directly, along came a great big old freight and runned right over the little one and mashed it flat. It's right down there on the track yet." Out he hurried as though to look at the fearful remains again.

I am gradually showing Bobby which world is which, and he will come out of it all right," continued Mrs. Blackford as soon as her son was out of the ktchen. He'll be back and explain that he understands the train episode was imaginary—a story. I have watched and helped too many safely thru the same thing to be at all alarmed about it. I was so embarrassed and worried about my oldest son, though, when he had this experience. Sometimes dogs were bears; horses, elephants; and once crows were negro angels."

"Here he comes again," whispered Mrs. Conner.

This time Bobby came more slowly, riding a horse.

"Mother, there's just one train down on the track. It's just the same old freight that's down there every day, but that was a good story wasn't it— the one I told about the big train and the little train?"

"Now the trouble with us," said Mrs. Elliott, "is that we should have told the boy he falsified at once and made him so stubborn he could never have seen the straigth of the thing."

"You have suggested the only danger about the whole situation," responded Mrs. Blackford. "Continually tell an imaginative child that he lies and he will very likely begin to practice real deceit. We need to try to understand the little mind, and to help from the child's viewpoint, not our."

WHEN DAYS ARE HOT

(By Betty Barclay)

Ice cream is always appreciated as a dessert, but when the weather is hot is particularly desirable. A light fruit souffle, a fluff, a Bavarian cream or some other light dessert is also fitting in hot weather — when heavy foods should be reduced and the lighter, quickly-digested foods featured. Here are two delicious junket dishes—economical too:

Velvety Banana Ice Cream

2 junket tablets
2 tablesoons cold water
3 cups milk
1 cup sugar
1 cup mashed banana
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ pint cream

Crush junket tablets and dissolve in cold water. Mix sugar and milk and warm in lukewarm—not hot, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Add dissolved junket tablets; pour at once into freezer can. Let stand in a warm place until firm; add mashed banana, lemon juice and cream, whipped until stiff. Pack in ice and salt and freeze.

Fruit Souffle

1 package vanilla junket
1 pint milk
White of 1 egg
1 cup powdered sugar
1 cup fresh berries

Make junket according to directions on packages. Place the berries in a bowl and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Add the unbeaten egg white and beat with a wooden spoon or silver fork, slowly, until the berries are broken, then rapidly, until stiff—about 30 minutes—then place in ice box. Pile lightly on junket when serving.

Man a man's phenomenal success is a surprise to him.

When some people are unable to do a thing they boast of it.

Man's capacity for suffering increases as he becomes civilized.

It is easier for a dentist to fill an aching void than a long felt want.

For Beauty TESTING RESULTS For Pleasure

In checking up the annual report of the Allen-DeKalb Dairy Herd Improvement records for the year 1928-1929 which ended May 31st, we are pleased to find that the Merriwold Farms herd stood in fourth place, with an average of 14.16 cows in the herd for the year—producing an average of 6323 pounds milk, and 367.0 pounds butter fat.

For each dollar spent for feed, we received a return of $2.70; produced butter fat for twenty-one cents per pound and milk at $1.21 per hundred. Considering that fifty percent of this herd was heifers in first milk, we believe this to be a rather satisfactory accomplishment.

SUCH episodes as are treated in this thrilling story could have occurred nowhere else than in France and at no period other than that of the Revolution. In the morning there was a Sunday School hour in charge of Clyde Hart of Spencerville followed by a song service dedicated in memory of Waldo Hamman of Waterloo, a prominent young people's worker who was drowned recently. The basket dinner preceded the recreation hour which was conducted by Miss Roth and Mr. Sparrow of Fort Wayne, a program of stunts by Concord, Jackson and Union townships and a treasure hunt which concluded the program.

Community Development Campaign for St. Joe and Spencerville Sponsored by Business Men and Leaders to be Given Publicity Through Columns of St. Joe News.

A number of business men cooperating with the St. Joe News have made it possible through their willingness to defray the cost of a community development campaign to make available to every man, woman and child of St. Joe and Spencerville a thorough knowledge of the fundamental factors necessary to make this a better community.

This community campaign based upon actual facts and figures is derived from a scientific analysis made in hundreds of towns throughout the United States similarly located geographically and of approximately the size of St. Joe and Spencerville. This survey was made by economists who are recognized as leaders in their specialized field.

Communities like individuals, do not stand still, they either go forward or backwards, and the reason for their prosperity or lack of it will be the basis of this campaign.

Every citizen of St. Joe and Spencerville wants to know what St. Joe and Spencerville possesses, what they lack, how they compare with other towns of the same size, and what opportunities they have to offer.

The answers to those and other vital questions will be answered in these campaign pages — not by criticism, but by giving a thorough knowledge of the fundamental factors underlyng community growth and success.

Every phase of town development will be thoroughly analyzed and progressive citizens will welcome the knowledge they impart.

It is only in late years that a unified effort has been made to analyze community growth and their possibilites.

Somewhat similar methods to those followed by great industrial organizations in their plans for development are applied in this campaign.

It is today a recognized science which hundreds of towns have adapted for their own betterment and development. The benefits derived by those aggressive towns can be applied to St. Joe and Spencerville, however the ultimate success depends upon the cooperation of all their inhabitants.

It is your duty as a home loving citizen to interest your family, friends and neighbors in this community movement started solely for the welfare of St. Joe and Spencerville so that all will benefit by it.

That is the sole aim of the public-spirited citizens who are sponsorng this campaign.

Once a month throughout the next twelve months, the St. Joe News will publish a full page illustrated article covering one phase of the community development program. Every important phase of community life will be analyzed. The first of these pages will appear in our next issue. Read every word of this message and think of what it can mean to you if you will do your share in supporting ths program.

The entire campaign will be completely underwritten and is offered to the citizens of St. Joe and Spencerville through the generosity of the following public-spirited individuals:

ELECTRIC RATES GO DOWN

Despite appreciable increases in all phases of operating cost, electric rates now average 25 per cent below pre-war level.

The average commodity prices are now 50 per cent higher; construction costs are 70 per cent higher; skilled labor wages more than double, union wage standards are the highest in history; per capita state and local taxes have increased 300 per cent. Yet the cost of electric service has steadily declined since 1913.

The utilities strive to give the best possible service at the least possble cost. Last year the average profit of electric companies was a little over seven per cent, a half or a third the income enjoyed by many lines of industry.

The reason for low electric costs is found in increased efficiency and economy in utility management and the trend toward consolidating small units into great systems. Mass production and distribution not only cut costs, but provide a standard of service not thought of a few years ago.

More and more utilities are giving voluntary rate reductions as improved conditions make them possible. Such was the case in this section of Indiana now served by the Indiana and Michigan Electric Co. The rates were fixed at 11 cents per K wh. and last year the rates were cut to 8 cents per K wh. voluntarily. Electricity is not only one of the most necessary of present-day agencies, but one of the cheapest.

ONLY GIRL HE WANTED

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

DELIA WATKINS beat away at the carpet on the clothesline. It was an old fashioned brussels carpet, thick and hard as a board and the faded roses were dusty. Delia's mother cherished the carpet for she had bought it herself with butter-and-egg money during the first years of her marriage. But Delia hated the carpet just as she hated many like things in her young life. Now in thrashing the brussels roses she was trying to get rid of a rebellious energy so terrific that it fairly obsessed her.

Delia was eighteen, a slim thing with smooth black hair—long, of course—gray eyes full of light, red lips and a stubborn white chin. She was not pretty, but she had enough charm to make Alec Bruce pick her out of all the girls of his acquaintance.

It was Alec who now came whistling round the corner of the house, his arms full of groceries. Alec owned the grocery store and sometimes drove the red delivery car himself. He was tall, with sandy hair, white teeth and humorous crinkles at the corners of his blue eyes. Scotch, with a tang of Irish, his ancestors had settled on the north coast of Erin, drifting thither from the more rugged country. Alec's father had been born beside a peat fire, but Alec was first, last and always American.

"Hey, there!" he accosted Delia. "What you think you're doing, anyway—tanning the hides of all the hoodlums in the Guideboard district?"

Delia's only reply was to thump away harder.

Alec took the groceries into the house, where Mrs. Watkins received them. Then he returned to Delia.

"Quit punishing that poor old rag a minute, can't you?" he laughed. "Here, let me have the club." He tried to take the carpet-beater from her hand, but Delia clung to it. Their eyes clashed. "Come, Delia! This is a man-sized job," he said earnestly. "I'll finish cleaning the carpet for you."

"I wish you'd go on about your business and let me alone," Delia said, exasperated. She was keenly conscious of her looks, a tear in her old blue gingham, a smudge on her nose and patched shoes. Besides, she had a broken finger-nail that hurt cruelly. And she had just got a speck of dust in one eye that was making it red and watery.

"Too nice a morning to be whipping a carpet," Alec said, taking his hand from the beater. "Better hop into the car and go with me, Delia. I've got to take a couple sacks of flour out to Mrs. Peterson's."

"I tell you I'm busy. And—you're bothering me."

"Sorry! Guess I'll ask Helen Morse, then." Alec was nettled. He did not whistle as he went away.

Delia gave the old carpet two or three more hard thumps, then she collapsed against it in a fit of passionate weeping. She had been horrid. She had driven him to Helen Morse, which was just what Helen had taunted her into doing. She peeped out around the edge of the carpet at the next house, the big, handsome house where big handsome Helen Morse lived. But Alec hadn't stopped there for all his threat. Hope soared again; maybe he'd forgive her. She'd had her lesson; next time she'd behave.

Delia finished beating the carpet, dragged it off the line, got it into the house and tacked it fast to the parlor floor. Mrs. Watkins bossed the job without lifting a finger. Thin, pale, anemic, she was obsessed with the idea that she had heart trouble; she saved herself at the expense of her daughter.

After dinner mother lay down and Delia, having bathed and put on a clean frock, sat down at the desk in the living room to puzzle out the family accounts. Some bills must be paid. With Delia it was a constant struggle to get bills paid. Besides, she had to earn the money herself, teaching forty weeks a year in the Guideboard district. That was a job, believe me. Twenty-three kids of assorted sizes and unruly dispositions, to say nothing of dirty noses and "things in their hair." She sighed heavily as she opened her crumpled little account book.

Voices, laughter coming in through the open window. She pulled aside the stiff Nottingham lace curtain and peeped out. Helen Morse stood on the steps and Alec was just putting a package into her lovely white hands. Helen looked into Alec's eyes—and dropped the package. White sugar flew in every direction. Helen gave a little scream of dismay. "That's all right," Alec said. "I'll bring you another five pounds."

"Mother's waiting for it," Helen said.

"I'll be right back with it."

Delia's gray eyes grew cold and hard. She knew Helen Morse through and through. Helen had dropped that five pounds of sugar on purpose just so Alec would have to come back with more.

With another sigh she returned to her accounts. She rummaged in the drawer where her mother kept a few private memoranda, old letters and the like. There was a bill missing and she just wanted to check up on it. She found the bill, quite a sheaf of bills, in fact, all from Alec's grocery and all unpaid.

White, tight-lipped, with the tell-tale bills in her hand, Delia marched into her mother's presence. Mrs. Watkins raised her head from the pillow, vexation clouding her brow. She was just dropping off into a comfortable snooze, and likely being thus aroused, she'd lose her afternoon nap.

"I found these unpaid grocery bills," Delia said. "I didn't know we owed Alec a cent. What did you do with all the money I've given you to pay him? Be perfectly honest and tell me. I must know."

"I sent it to your brother Harry," Mrs. Watkins said defiantly. "He wrote asking for help. I knew just how hard you've always been with him, never giving him a bit of aid when he got into a tight corner. Alec said he'd wait for his money. He's in love with you. If you had any sense you'd marry him. That would settle the account."

Delia only turned and left the room.

Next morning Delia walked into the store. Alec sat at his desk, tapping out lists of numbers on the adding machine. She laid down a check. The check represented every cent she had had in the savings department of the local bank.

"Why, what's this, Delia?" He looked from the check to the girl.

"I'm sorry you had to wait for your pay," Delia said stiffly. "Alec, please—please don't trust me—us again. Don't stop today to take orders. Please."

"What's the idea? Don't you like me or my groceries, either."

"They're both all right," Delia smiled with quivering lips. "But I've made a rule. That's all. Please help me to keep it unbroken, Alec."

"Certainly," said Alec coldly.

It was a bad week. Groceries gave out and were not replaced, for Mrs. Watkins put her foot down. She wouldn't buy of old Peter Perry, and there was nobody else.

Saturday morning Delia was alone in the kitchen at work. The door opened. In came Alec. He dumped down upon the kitchen table a great armful of groceries.

"I didn't order them! I don't want them. Take them away," gasped Delia.

Alec leaned against the table. He looked at the girl with a smile in his clear eyes.

"I won't eat anybody's groceries but my own. I'm coming here to board," he said.

Delia stared at him in astonishment.

"I've left over to Borden's. That last fly I found in the warmed-over potato did me," Alec said firmly. "And the hotel is too expensive. I just met your mother down the street and she said she'd take me in. I'm a poor homeless orphan, Delia. You haven't got the heart to turn me off, have you now?"

"It's—it's a frameup between you and mother," Delia said with a sob. "I don't want you here. I—"

Alec took her in his arms, held her powerfully, laid his clean cheek to hers, let her hear how his heart beat for her.

"The only way you'll ever get rid of me is to marry me, Delia," he said.

"You can have any girl in this town—" Delia murmured.

"Sure. But you're the only one I want," returned Alec tenderly.

"Talkies" of Weddings Might Have Drawbacks

We are extremely dubious about this plan, proposed by an Omaha judge, to make talkies of weddings, so that in event of subsequent domestic trouble they can be run off before the unhappy couple and thus avert a separation.

That might work if all parties to weddings were ladies. They; so far as one can judge, get a real thrill out of their weddings; indeed, for many of them their wedding day seems to be the big day of their lives.

But did any man ever get a thrill out of his wedding? He did not. It was the day, to begin with, when he was a complete sap; when he looked like a sap, felt like a sap and was treated like a sap. For once in his life he played a miserable second fiddle to a magnificent creature called the Bride; it was for her that the music was composed, that the presents were sent, that the ring was provided. Nobody ever heard of a wedding march dedicated to the bridegroom.

It was the day again, which was fixed in his mind in connection with appalling expenditures that swept out all his savings since his graduation from college. Furniture for the apartment, flowers, presents, railroad tickets for two, gray pants, cutaway coat—all these things blended into a horrible nightmare with a dollar sign in front of it, and focused on that one terrible day.

Thus the proposed talkies might have an effect exactly opposite from what is intended. A talkie of the night they became engaged might help, though.—New York World.

CHARMS of BRITTANY

Some of the Great Stones Near Carnac.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

EVEN in a continent rich to repletion with interest, Brittany, the "spout" of the French "teapot," is remarkable for the multiplicity of its appeal. One traveler may be engrossed in its ethnology; another is delighted by its architecture; a third is charmed with its medieval picturesqueness and quaint costumes; a fourth shuts himself up to dream over its history and romance, while a fifth satisfies his soul to the full with its eminent paintability.

In any of these seductions, of course, the province may be matched or outmatched by other countries; but it stands unrivaled as the land of those strange megaliths—the grandes pierres or monuments celtiques—in which a prehistoric race, a people apparently of considerable civilization and intense religious feeling, seem to have striven titanically toward self-expression and to have left, after all, a great but almost unintelligible cry.

That, perhaps, is the enduring emotion left with the visitor to the giant dolmens and the vast alignments of Morbihan. These were the work of men agonizing to the end that they and their dead should never be forgotten. And yet, who were they, and what is it they have tried so hard to say?

Assyria, chronologically still more remote from our era, is as an open book through the almost miraculous recovery of the key to the cuneiform inscriptions; but these herculean toilers of western Europe, transporting and raising their huge boulder monuments on the wild Breton moors, seem mere shadows in the mist, unable, because they left no written language, to speak to us across the centuries.

And yet, through patience in investigation and skill in interpretation amounting to genius, a few eager workers, especially the little group connected with the Musee Miln, at Carnac (50 miles west of Redon), have begun to explain these monument-builders to us.

Nowhere in the world could a specialist have found greater wealth of this peculiar archeologic material than lay around M. Zacharie Le Rouzic and the man to whom he affectionately refers as his "regretted master, Mr. J. Miln," in Morbihan and Finistere.

Many Monuments About Carnac.

Almost every commune in Brittany has one or two Celtic monuments—indeed, they are found, sometimes in very fine examples, throughout western France. But grouped about Carnac, within a radius of seven miles, there are nearly 300, even counting the hundreds of menhirs in each of the great alignments as a single unit.

Miln's results, gathered in the museum bearing his name, have been and are still being continuously extended and enriched by his successor, and the following summary is based largely on their deductions.

This region, it appears, was a sort of Mecca, or peculiarly holy ground, to which the remains of heroes and leaders were brought for entombment, to which the faithful flocked in pilgrimages, and in which the great religious ceremonies were held.

Carnac was probably to the western continent of Europe what Stonehenge was to the British isles. There is at that place, in fact, a focus and concentration of the megalithic works left by the Celtic forerunners in their prehistoric migration which, starting in Asia, moved across northern Africa, over Mediterranean waters into Spain, and along the shores of the Atlantic, constantly striving westward to find the resting place of their god, the sun, but ever baffled by the impassable ocean, and so forced northward until the effort died out in Scandinavia.

In their long sojourn near these shores, covering at least 2,000 years, they became increasingly an agricultural people. The weapons and implements placed in the sepulchers lose their rough but serviceable character and appear in polished but merely votive forms, often in soft or valuable stone. A few attempts at carving (as in the dolmen of the Table of the Merchants and the tumulus of Mane-er-H'roeck, at Locmariaquer) have satisfied the most careful investigators that some use, at least, of iron—or, at all events of metal—had begun.

Most Important Types.

Nine types and several subtypes of these monuments have been defined, of which the most important are: the menhir, or "long stones" set on end; the dolmen, or houselike structures, with stone slabs or boulders for walls and roof; and the tumulus, or mound. Alignments are groups of menhirs arranged in line or in several parallel lines. Cromlechs are groups of menhirs standing in a circle or an arc of a circle, more rarely a square, usually terminating an alignment or surrounding a tumulus. The dimensions are sometimes incredible.

The Great Menhir near Locmariaquer, now thrown down and broken (probably by an earthquake), was nearly 70 feet high and weighed some 375 tons.

Some of the dolmens have a height of 18 to 20 feet, with roof slabs 20 by 35 feet in area and several feet thick. Baring-Gould indeed mentions one near Nevez (Finistere) "whose capstone measures 45 feet in length and 27 feet in breadth and 6 feet thick."

The alignments of Carnac, in 10 to 13 parallel rows, stretch across the country for nearly five miles. The tumulus of Mont St. Michel looks like a natural knoll, dwarfing the modern chapel which crowns it. It is hard to realize that it was heaped by human hands.

All menhirs, cromlechs, and alignments were from their beginning open to the sky. Dolmens and similar constructions were all originally covered by tumuli, since removed. In many cases, in the course of farming or building operations.

The tumuli were indeed simply tombs, of which the dolmens and "covered alleys" were the crypts. In some the great quantity of skeletal remains, earth-buried or incinerated, would indicate collective sepulture. In other cases, the greater or central dolmen has been found surrounded by smaller dolmens or stone coffers containing the bones of animals and human beings, the latter probably slaves or servitors, all slain to accompany their master into another world, indicating a definite belief in a future life. With these have been found stone implements (celts or hatchets), arrow points and tools of various kinds, fragments of pottery, pendants and beads of turquoise and other semi-precious stones, and amulets of baked clay.

Isolated menhirs have yielded little or nothing indicative of use as monuments for individual tombs. They seem to have been generally commemorative, indicators of roads and territorial boundaries, and "symbolic of an immortal god."

Scheme of Orientation.

The alignments, on the other hand, appear to have been designed as open-air temples, each group (with its cromlech, placed always at the western end of the lines) having been erected on a single comprehensive plan and at one time. They are the remains of huge religious monuments, the alleys between the parallel files of stones being the aisles in which the devotees gathered and moved, and the cromlech the holy of holies in which the priests performed their rites.

They have a curious general characteristic in that the tallest menhirs are always placed nearest the cromlech, the lines diminishing in height from west to east.

Most interesting of all, however, is an apparently definite scheme of orientation, which tends to prove that, in addition to their ritual use, or perhaps as part of it, these impressive files of monoliths served a peculiar purpose. MM. Henri de Cleuzion and F. Gaillard have pointed out that in each group of alignments will be found a single very large menhir—the "giant" of the group—so placed in one of the outer files that if one stands at a given point in the cromlech he will see the sun rise over the giant at a specific date in the astronomical year.

The orientation, be it understood, is not exact at the present date. Calculations made independently by two astronomers reach the same result—that it was correct at a period about 1,000 years before the beginning of the Christian era. This curious testimony to the age of the monuments agrees with conclusions reached on other grounds by M. Le Rouzic, placing only the earliest of the megalithic structures prior to 200 B. C.; the greatest development of dolmen building and the erection of the alignments and cromlechs between 2000 B. C. and 400 B. C., and the latest work, expressed by small galleries and stone coffers, in the First century before the Christian Era.

CYNIC'S JIBE AT ROYAL FLUSH IS ONE FATAL ERROR

Skeptic Rails Against Honesty of Holder and Is Shot to Death.

New York.—To the long list of poker skeptics who died with their boots on was added the name of Frank Concession.

Frank Harris, hitherto a peaceable Brooklynite, listed his name on the scroll of those whose outraged emotions have catapulted the cynical into the poker players' valhalla.

Some of the boys—ten of them to be exact—were passing the evening in a store at 101 Prince street. It was their custom on certain evenings to hire this store. Shortly after midnight most of them had had enough and only Concession, Harris and three others were sitting tight.

Sometimes They Frame 'Em.

Many Americans have dawdled at draw poker to a ripe old age without seeing a royal flush. It is a custom in some parts to frame them, tear up the rest of the pack, and write or wire to the local congressman.

When the eventful hand was dealt Harris saw that he had four hearts—ten, jack, queen and king.

Harris began to perspire slightly and looked cautiously at the others. They all seemed to have fairly good hands. None drew more than two cards. Concession stood pat.

Harris asked for one card. He inserted it carefully into the middle of his hand and then spread them. Up jumped the ace of hearts.

Harris swallowed his Adams' apple twice and glanced around to see if anybody had noticed his swallowing it. The betting was brisk. Harris was a monument of caution. When finally it was evident that no more money would ever be wheedled into that pot the cards were shown.

Up Jumped the Ace of Hearts.

With a whoop of joy, Harris spread out his royal flush and implored the others to imprint indelibly on their eyeballs. With a roar of disgust Concession flung his own hand on the table, arose, and made a speech.

A Speech of Bitterness.

The substance of Concession's speech was that the chances are 23½ to 1 against filling a straight flush that is open at both ends, that they are boundlessly greater against obtaining the one card needed to make it a perfect royal flush. Concession concluded his remarks with an apothegm.

"No honest man," he said firmly, "ever holds a royal flush."

Concession then grabbed approximately his share of the pot and ran out.

Harris ran after him shouting. Several blocks away Harris overtook Concession and shot him through the heart.

Corn Smut Will Decrease Yields

Disease Is Caused by Certain Type of Germ Belonging to Molds.

"The enlarged outgrowths or galls which may now be seen on the corn is smut," according to W. E. Brentzel, botanist and plant pathologist at the North Dakota Agricultural College. "This trouble," he says, "is somewhat similar to wheat smut although different in many important respects. Corn smut never goes to wheat and wheat smut never goes to corn. Seed treatment will control covered smut of wheat but has no value in the control of corn smut.

"This disease is caused by a certain type of germ belonging to the class known as molds. These germs may now be seen as a black powder falling from the corn smut galls. They pass from one season into the next by wintering over in old diseased stalks, sometimes in the soil and may also live in manure for several months. During the summer while the corn is growing the smut germs move about as dust in the winds and find lodging on the corn. The funnel-shaped pockets in the tops of corn and the pockets at the base of the leaves collect dust and water. When the germs or spores lodge in pockets containing moisture they begin to grow and in a short while form the smut ball which we now see in the corn fields.

Will Grow on Any Part.

"Corn smut is not particular about which part of the plant to grow on. When the parasite attacks the ears the grain usually is a total loss. When other parts of the plants are smutted, such as the leaves, tassels, silks and nodes, the amount of loss is hard to estimate. Often the plants are broken over, sometimes by the excessive weight of the smut galls and sometimes by the weakening of parts where the smut growth comes out. In one way or another smut is causing heavy losses in some fields.

"Growers have asked whether silage made from these smutted ears and stalks will injure cattle. It is very true that these smut galls have an ugly appearance and some may hesitate to feed them to a fine lot of cattle. However, so far as is known corn smut has never caused any disease or ill effects when fed to cattle. In experiments conducted by the experiment stations of South Dakota Kansas, Michigan and the United States Department of Agriculture cattle were fed corn smut in heavy amounts. In no case was any injury done to the cattle resulting from the smut.

Only Known Remedy.

"The only remedy known to avoid losses to the crop is to destroy the nearby source of the disease for the next year. In fields where this means of control is impractical it is necessary to rotate crops. Smut resistant corns have not been developed yet but plant breeders are having some success in this direction. It is hoped that in the near future we may have developed a variety of corn which will resist smut."

Big Quantity of Humus in Soil Most Desirable

One of the important explanations of the desirability of having a quantity of humus or decomposing organic matter in the soil is found in the capacity of humus for soaking up and storing water which is thus made available later for use by growing plants. Experiments have revealed that 100 pounds of sand can hold only 25 pounds of water, and 100 pounds of clay soil can hold only half its weight in water. In contrast, 100 pounds of decaying organic matter may hold as much as 190 pounds, or nearly twice its weight of water. Most soils are mixtures in varying proportions of sand, clay, silt, and organic material. As a rule the greater the proportion of organic matter contained in the soil the greater its water-absorptive capacity, and the greater reserves of moisture it will retain for resistance to drouthy and hot weather.

Eradicate Barn Flies With Creosote Spray

Fleas grow in filth and the first step in cleaning up a place is to remove all the dust, straw, manure, etc., from the barns and haul it out to the fields. Spray the floors and walls with a very strong solution of creosote. It is better to use this dip in its original strength if you can do it. After the dip has soaked in for a day or two spray again with kerosene, following that with an application of napthalene crystals. Be very careful of fire.

Keep the hogs away from these breeding places and it is likely you will have no further trouble.

Improved Roads Needed for Operation of Farm

For economical operation of spray rigs, farm roads should be kept in good condition. An occasional dragging is not alone necessary for this. In addition to dragging it is necessary to have the road well drained.

Many growers find that it pays to own a ditcher. They use this for their peach orchards to keep the drainage in good shape and then use it in keeping their roads well ditched.

Spray rigs are heavy and dragging them around through the mud is hard on teams and expensive in time.

Housekeepers Asked to Watch for Pest

Mediterranean Fly Threatens All Fruit in Country.

Housekeepers throughout a large section of the United States are being enlisted by the United States government as inspectors and scouts in the effort to repel a thoroughly dangerous foreign enemy—the Mediterranean fruit fly—which has already invaded the country.

Fruit from Florida, where the infestation of the fruit fly was first discovered, has been placed under an embargo, but only after much fruit which may have been harboring the pest, had been shipped to distant states. Federal authorities urge the utmost care in inspecting any fruit imported from Florida.

Except for the watermelon and the pineapple, all fruits grown in the United States are vulnerable to the attacks of the Mediterranean fruit fly. The fly is to be found in the form of small maggots or worms, inside the pulp of the fruit. When these maggots have reached full size or when they have been working for some time, the infestation is easily discovered, since they will destroy most of the pulp. Before that time, any fruit which is conspicuously soft, or in which any sort of worms or maggots are found, is open to suspicion.

Destruction of such fruit is urged by the government. To make sure of killing the maggots, the fruit should be boiled or baked for a long period. Throwing it into the garbage is the surest method of giving the maggots an opportunity to grow and spread.

Fertilizing Value of Manure Is Overlooked

Many farmers who pride themselves on their farming technique, their fine barns, and their good-looking homes and gardens, neglect their barnyards. Too often the manure pile blocks one or more of the doors into the cow barn, and the cattle going in and out cover themselves and the barn floors with filth. Too often the litter carrier is broken or absent and the pile starts at the door and grows in all directions, uncontrolled. Every farmer realizes the fertilizing value of his manure, but not so many know that the most valuable part of it is the liquid which more often than not is allowed to drain or leach away. An ideal setting for the manure pile would consist of a high shed with a cement floor which would conserve all the liquid manure, placed at least 40 feet away from the barn. But few farmers can afford such a building. The next best plan is to level the barnyard so that the drainage can be controlled and led off to benefit some part of a nearby field or garden. Keep the manure at least 20 feet away from the cow barn and surround the pile with a tight fence to keep the animals from tramping over it.

Date of Seeding Wheat and When to Harvest

That the date of seeding wheat has little or no effect on the time of harvesting is the conclusion which may be drawn after looking over the seeding and harvesting dates kept for the past 36 years on plots at the North Dakota experiment station.

In the years of 1896, 1901, 1908, 1920 and 1924 the date of harvest was August 10, but the dates for seeding in those years respectively were May 6, May 4, April 18, April 26 and April 22. In some instances there was a variation of a month in the date of seeding while in every instance the date of harvest came on the same date.

Late seeding of wheat is not advocated by the station, however, as it is usually followed by a short straw and a lighter crop, taking the weather conditions into consideration.

Turkey Is Roamer

Many poultry men consider that turkeys are naturally a roaming bird and that they can pick up their feed from all over the farm. It has been found, however, that much better success with turkeys can be enjoyed by keeping them confined and by following out the definite up-to-date practices that have been found economical and efficient. Another practice which should be kept in mind in handling the turkey flock is that of feeding sprouted oats or fresh well-cured alfalfa meal.

Feeding Steers

The Ohio experiment station recently conducted a test showing that where silage was used in large rations for fattening steers, $16 more per acre for corn could be realized. There are many experiments carried on by many of our experiment stations which have demonstrated conclusively that silage will lower the cost of beef production. With this evidence, certainly agricultural advisers would do well to urge a greater use of the silo.

Feeding Sweet Clover

So far sweet clover hay has not been observed to in any way injure sheep or horses. Its bad effects seem to be confined to cattle. Then, too, sweet clover pasture has never been known to produce this trouble. Thousands of farmers have used sweet clover pasture for years without any bad results. The North Dakota experiment station has conducted a sweet clover pasture test with calves without discovering bad effects.

BEYOND HIM

The cyclist had lost his way and had inadvertently got on a private road. Suddenly he was confronted by a very stout and irate bailiff.

"Look here, young man," shouted the bailiff, "you go back! You'll not proceed except over my dead body!"

"Very good," replied the cyclist. "If it's like that I'll go back. I've done quite enough hill climbing for one day!"—London Tit-Bits.

NEARBY AND YONDER

By T. T. MAXEY

Churchill Downs

CHURCHILL DOWNS, that celebrated mile-and-a-quarter-long race track near Louisville, founded in 1874, annually has been the scene of a famous horse race. It is the home of the Kentucky derby which, to the United States, is what the Epsom derby is to England and is laid out on ground formerly owned by the Churchill family. Downs is an English term often applied to a race track—hence the somewhat peculiar name.

The Kentucky derby is more than a horse race. It has become an institution, where the horse is king for a day, the crowds gay and the experience thrilling. This outstanding annual sport event is the culmination of the love of horsedom by an aggregation of humanity which has come from practically every nook and corner of this country—as many as a hundred thousand on one occasion, to witness a single contest between aristocratic thoroughbreds of the horse world.

Horse racing and the fondness therefor is an English pastime which gained a foothold in America some 300 years ago. It broke out in Virginia, worked its way over the mountains and lodged in the Bluegrass state when interest in horses and racing ran high about 150 years ago.

The history of the Kentucky derby and that of the turf in America are largely one and the same thing. Obviously, the derby is the goal of horse and horseman alike, because to win it is an honor extraordinary.

Strange as it may seem, it seldom has been won by a favorite. The number of nominations for a single derby have varied from 3 to 196. Odds as high as $184 to $2 have been won.

The American Obelisk

ABOUT forty years ago the then khedive of Egypt, Ismail Pasha, presented one of the forty-two known obelisks in the world to the city of New York. The city of New York caused it to be erected upon a prominent spot in its great Central park and, just as the pasha probably surmised, it since has proved to be an object of marked curiosity to the millions of Americans who have seen it.

This is the only Egyptian obelisk in America. Only five of the other forty-one are larger. It is composed of syenite—a stone which greatly resembles granite, 69 feet high, 7 feet 9 inches square at the base, tapering to 5 feet 3 inches at the top, is mounted on a 2-foot base and weighs 214 tons.

Its surface is covered with historic inscriptions cut in Egyptian hieroglyphics, which are somewhat obliterated on one side, due 'tis said, to exposure to the sand storms of the desert. Experts declare that it has aged and been injured more since it has been in America than in all the centuries of its previous existence, owing to the changeableness of our climate compared to that of Egypt. Accordingly, it has been coated with a preservative material to stop further damage by the weather.

History records that this obelisk was originally erected at Heliopolis, but was moved to Alexandria about the Twelfth century by Augustus Caesar—presumably as a spoil of war, and dates back fifteen centuries before the coming of Christ or to the reign of Thotmes III.

The Hall of Fame

THE Hall of Fame was founded by a gift of $250,000 by Mrs. F. J. Shepard (the former Miss Helen Gould) and the acceptance thereof by the New York university, for a building on Washington Heights in New York city to be called "The Hall of Fame for Great Americans."

A structure in the shape of a terrace with a colonade effect was built—the first floor to house a museum, the 600-foot-long colonnade above containing 150 panels, each of which is to hold a tablet carrying the name of a great American who is represented by a bust on a pedestal.

Fifty names were to be chosen in 1900 and additional names added at intervals until the year 2,000, when the full quota shall have been chosen.

A college of electors, consisting of approximately 100 distinguished men and women of America, was set up to determine who were the 150 greatest Americans. Nominations by the public were invited—only those great Americans who had been dead 25 or more years being eligible. A two-thirds vote was necessary for a name to gain admission to the hall.

Twenty-nine names received the required vote in 1900, and a number have been added at each five-year period since that time—a total of 65 to date, 59 of men and 7 of women, and 57 busts have been placed in position.

Fire Can Not Smolder

Long on Ocean Liners

The captain on a modern liner can look into a cabinet and tell at a glance whether fire has broken out, and also in what part of the vessel. Go into the hold of any properly equipped ship and light a cigar; in less than five minutes the captain on the bridge can tell where you are smoking. In the captain's cabinet is a series of glass-fronted tubes, one for each hold, through which air is constantly flowing. Ordinarily you can see nothing—all is black; but with the faintest trace of smoke from the hold there suddenly appears against this black background a thin, quivering thread of blue. For within the tube is a shielded bulb of brilliant light. As long as the air current is pure there is nothing to illuminate; but the moment a wisp of smoke flows through, the light rays make it show up against the black background like a meteor.

The war has made table linen very valuable. The use of Russ Bleaching Blue will add to its wearing qualities. Use it and see. All grocers.—Adv.

Carrot in Disrepute

Popularity of the carrot had not dawned in 1838 when William A. Alcott wrote a cook book, for he warns against use of this vegetable except in very small quantities. The tomato, he gives a very bad bill of health, and he deplores the fact that "at the present time, especially among the fashionable, there is an increasing tendency to regard the potato as somewhat vulgar." Bread, he declares, is sharing the same fate and is tolerated only as a sort of penance.—Detroit News.

Baths Excite Controversy

A school district in Hottbridge, England is divided into two bitter factions over a move to place a shower bath in the school house. The opposition is led by a member of the school board who declares he has not had a bath in ten years and dares the pro-bathers to produce a healthier specimen than he is. The antis also use as an argument an old man of ninety who vows he has not had a bath since his mother quit washing him at ten.

TOOK ADVICE OF HER MOTHER

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wetmore, Colo.—"When I was married 14 years ago I was in bad health for a couple of years and when I tried to do anything I would get tired and worn-out. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound off and on all these years and have recommended it to hundreds of women. I have given birth to six children and have taken the Vegetable Compound as a tonic before child birth. It has done me worlds of good. My mother had taken it several times and she recommended it to me."—Mrs. JOHN BRASSEA, Wetmore, Colorado.

THE GROWING CORN

How swift a field of corn can grow
'Tis only past July,
So short a time since, row by row
The workmen laid it by;
And now the corn is waving high;
Like sabers gleam the blades,
And toss themselves as winds go by
On summer escapades

The corn plow cannot straddler o'er
The tall caressing corn
Although it did some weeks before
This field of corn was born.
So timidly we saw it come
With glowing greenery;
The sun came down to warm it some,
And plowed we carefully.

The glowing green did we defend
From greedy growing weeds,
But, kindly soon the sun did spend
Itself in golden deeds;
And just enough of rain there was
And from the south and west
Came only winds of warmth, because
The corn was thinly dressed.

The horses marched the sturdy field
With open mouths to eat
A little of th massive wield,
To them so clean and sweet.
The farmer plowed and stirred the soil
To hem the moisture in.
O friend of mine, if this be toil,
'Tis all to joy akin.

Believing in Signs

A story is told of the railroad conductor who was pestered by a fussy woman who kept asking him foolish questions. He answered her politely, but after the train had stopped at a station, he waved his hand to the engineer to start the train. When he came through the train the lady asked:

"Why did you wave your hand to the engineer?"

"Oh, that meant 'Get the hell out of here,'" and he walked away.

One of the passengers called him to one side and said: "Say, conductor, you should not have said that to that lady. Her husband is a director on this road."

The conductor immediately found the woman and apologized and as he caame through the train again the man said:

"Well, conductor, when you apologized to that lady, what did she say?"

"She didn't say anything," said th conductor, "she just waved her hand."

DANIEL AMONG THE LIONS

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 6:1-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Daniel Is True to God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Daniel Is True to God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Meaning of True Courage.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Courage of Faith.

I. Daniel the Prime Minister of the Medo-Persian Empire (vv. 1-3).

Sterling worth brought him to the front and kept him there. The new king was keen to discern his worth and to give it recognition.

II. An Occasion Sought Against Daniel (vv. 4-9).

1. The reason for (v. 4). No doubt that which prompted this effort was envy and jealousy.

2. Failure of (v. 4).

Daniel's official record was blameless. They could not even find an error. Envy is still in the world. Those who excel in any line are sure to suffer in some way for their excellencies. The successful business man in relation to his competitors, the ranking pupil in school, the child of superior merit in the home, will be envied by the others. In politics many times those who honestly strive to do their duty are persecuted. Even in the church we find ministers are sometimes envious of their superiors.

3. The wicked plot (vv. 5-9).

They trumped up a charge on the ground of his foreign religion. They were not careful about their method, so their end was attained. In spite of Daniel's loyalty, the decree was signed by the king which would put him into the den of lions.

III. Daniel's Noble Confession (vv. 10-18).

Though Daniel knew that the wicked decree was signed, he knelt before God as usual. Note the silence of heroism. Weak men bluster; strong men have little to say.

1. He continued his usual habit (v. 10).

He knew that the civil law had absolutely nothing to do with his religion. God's law is first. Laws forbidding reading the Bible, praying, or meeting to worship God, have no authority over men.

2. Daniel reported to the king (vv. 11-13).

These wicked men watched to find out whether Daniel would pray before his God, and when they found that he continued his worship, they went to the king and reported that Daniel disregarded his decree.

IV. The Foolish Decree Executed (vv. 14-17).

1. The king displeased with himself (v. 14).

He labored till the going down of the sun to deliver Daniel, conscious that he had been entrapped.

2. The king helpless (v. 15).

The proud ruler found that he was a slave. To enact laws which change not is the height of folly.

3. Daniel cast into the den of lions (v. 16).

The king's parting word to Daniel was a poor, feeble excuse for his guilty conscience.

4. The double seal (v. 17).

This double sealing shows the king's purpose to abide by the unfortunate law.

V. Daniel Delivered (vv. 18-23).

1. Note the contrast between the night in the lion's den and the one in the palace. In the palace there was no sleep, no mirth. Daniel's quiet is as a picture of the safety and peace which are the portion of those who trust God and do His will.

2. The king's question in the morning (v. 20).

3. Daniel's answer (v. 22).

God's angel has done many wonderful works. The early Christians despised bonds, stripes and death.

4. Daniel delivered (v. 23).

No manner of hurt was found because he believed in his God.

VI. The Doom of His Accusers (v. 24).

They were cast into the den of lions and "or ever they came at the bottom of the den" their bones were broken in pieces. Daniel's enemies go into the same trap which they prepared for him.

VII. Darius' Decree (vv. 25-27).

Men were to tremble and fear before Daniel's God. As to whether Darius had a change of heart we do not know.

VIII. Daniel's Prosperity (v. 28).

Daniel goes higher into the kingdom and continues in his place of honor even though dynasties change.

CEDAR CHESTS PROTECT WOOLEN CLOTHING

Red Cedar Chests Are Excellent for Protecting Wool Clothing from Moth Damage.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The unusual tightness of a well-constructed red-cedar chest, when not cracked or warped, makes it of even greater advantage than an ordinary trunk or other household receptacle for storing clothing and preventing moths from getting in to lay their eggs. In addition chests made of the heartwood or red cedar have definite insecticidal value. The aroma of the wood kills any newly hatched or young larvae of the clothes moth, should there chance to be any unobserved moth eggs on the articles when put in the chest.

The bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture recommends, however, that all winter clothing subject to attack by moths should be thoroughly cleaned, brushed, beaten, and if possible, sunned, before being stored during the warm weather. This treatment, if carefully done with special attention to brushing out pockets, seams, and other places of concealment, will minimize the likelihood of damage, since it will remove those stages of the moths that the chests will not kill. Cedar chests cannot be depended upon to kill the moths or millers, their eggs, or the worms after they are half to full grown, or after they are three or four months old. Neither will the chests kill the pupae or chrysalids. As none of these stages except the larvae are capable of injuring the garments, it is a matter of no practical importance whether or not the cedar chests kill the moths, eggs or pupae. But too much cannot be said about the necessity of making sure that the clothing going into the chests is free from the older larvae or worms; otherwise losses may be sustained due to carelessness, not to the failure of the chest.

MODERN OVERALLS FOR SMALL BOYS

Youngster Needs Practical Playsuit for Warm Days.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The small boy should come in for his share of attention in the summer sewing. He will have need for just as many sun suits, rompers, and other washable garments as his sister and many of these can easily be made at home at moderate cost. Here is a sun suit which might be called a "modern overall." The old type of overall used to be made of coarse thick drilling with trousers reaching to the ankles. It not only made a child's legs hot, but made them dirty by fanning dust and grit up from the ground. It was clumsy and difficult to launder and unattractive when worn. The modern version of the overall serves the same purpose—a comfortable, practical play suit for warm days—but it is cool and light and planned for the greatest possible freedom of movement and exposure of skin surface to the healthgiving rays of the sun. It is gay and bright in color, appealing to any child, especially to a boy, and easily washed and ironed.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has designed a number of sun suits for children, including this one of cretonne, which is particularly intended to meet youthfully masculine ideas. It has straight short trousers, bound with plain material matching one of the colors in the cretonne, and a very comfortable one-piece back, which buttons onto the trousers, with ample allowance for letting out as the boy grows. The side buttonholes on this sun suit have been placed on the front section so they will be easier for small fingers to reach. Shoulder straps crossing in the back might be used to carry out the overall effect still further, but they should be cut wide at the shoulder and fit close to the neck so that they will not pull down the middle of the shoulder, nor cause poor posture. As much as possible of the child's skin surface—beneath the arms, at the neck, and legs, is left exposed to the sun's rays. If the small boy has a tendency to batter his knees the legs of the trousers can be lengthened to protect them.

The bureau of home economics has no patterns to distribute. This little suit can be easily adapted from a romper pattern.

COTTON FABRICS FOR MANY USES

Favored Because of So Many Patterns and Colors.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cotton dress fabrics are now considered suitable on a great many kinds of occasions where they were not formerly worn. The great variety of finishes, patterns, and colors have also made cotton more popular than ever.

Cotton is favored for sports wear because it stands frequent rubbing, the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture points out. Piques, broadcloths, suitings, and other closely woven, substantial fabrics are made up into sleeveless tennis or boating dresses for "active sports wear." Dressy coats and ensembles in plain colors or gay prints, or interesting combinations of both, are designed for those who look on at the tennis meet or golf tournament—"spectator sports wear." Cretonnes and cotton sponges are used for "water sports wear"—beach pajamas and coats.

Both decorative lounging pajamas and practical sleeping pajamas are made by preference of cotton fabrics—cotton broadcloth, gingham, soft cambric and muslins, often printed in delightful geometric and flowered patterns. Informal evening dresses and formal afternoon frocks are made of plain and flowered organdy and lawn, dimity, voile, dotted swiss, and other dainty materials.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

BY THE BARONESS ORCZY

WNU Service
Copyright Baroness Orczy

CHAPTER I

—1—

Sir Andrew's Story

"You really are impossible, Sir Percy! Here are we ladies, raving, simply raving, about this latest exploit of the gallant Scarlet Pimpernel, and you do naught but belittle his prowess. Lady Blakeney, I entreat, will you not add your voice to our chorus of praise, and drown Sir Percy's scoffing in an ocean of eulogy?"

Lady Alicia Nugget was very arch. She tapped Sir Percy's arm with her fan. She put up a jeweled finger and shook it at him with a great air of severity in her fine dark eyes. She turned an entreating glance on Marguerite Blakeney, and as that lady appeared engrossed in conversation with his grace of Flint, Lady Alicia turned the battery of her glances on his royal highness.

"Your highness," she said, appealingly.

The prince laughed good humoredly.

"Oh!" he said, "do not ask me to inculcate hero worship into this mauvais-sujet. If you ladies cannot convert him to your views, how can I—a mere man?"

And his highness shrugged his shoulders. There were few entertainments he enjoyed more than seeing his friend, Sir Percy Blakeney, badgered by the ladies on the subject of their popular and mysterious hero, the Scarlet Pimpernel.

"Your highness," Lady Alicia retorted, with the pertness of a spoiled child of society, "your highness can command Sir Percy to give us a true—a true—account of how that wonderful Scarlet Pimpernel snatched M. le Comte de Tournon d'Agenay with Madam la Comtesse and their three children out of the clutches of those abominable murderers in Paris, and drove them triumphantly to Boulogne, where they embarked on board an English ship and were ultimately safely landed in Dover. Sir Percy vows that he knows all the facts."

"And so I do, dear lady," Sir Percy now put in, with just a soupcon of impatience in his pleasant voice, "but, as I've already had the privilege to tell you, the facts are hardly worth retailing."

"The facts, Sir Percy," commanded the imperious beauty, "or we'll all think you are jealous."

"As usual, you would be right, dear lady," Sir Percy rejoined, blandly; "are not ladies always right in their estimate of us poor men? I am jealous of that demmed elusive personage who monopolizes the thoughts and the conversation of these galaxies of beauty who would otherwise devote themselves exclusively to us. What says your highness? Will you deign to ban for this one night at least every reference to that begad shadow?"

"Not till we've had the facts," Lady Alicia protested.

"The facts! The facts!" the ladies cried in an insistent chorus.

"You'll have to do it, Blakeney," his highness declared.

"Unless Sir Andrew Ffoulkes would oblige us with the tale," Marguerite Blakeney said, turning suddenly from his grace of Flint in order to give her lord an enigmatic smile; "he, too, knows the facts, I believe, and is an excellent reconteur."

"God forbid!" Sir Percy Blakeney exclaimed, with mock concern. "Once you start Ffoulkes on one of his interminable stories . . . Moreover," he added, seriously, "Ffoulkes always gets his facts wrong. He would tell you, for instance, that the demmed Pimpernel rescued those unfortunate Tournon-d'Agenays single handed; now I happen to know for a fact that three of the bravest English gentlemen the world has ever known did all the work whilst he merely . . ."

"Well?" Lady Alicia queried, eagerly. "What did that noble and gallant Scarlet Pimpernel merely do?"

"He merely climbed to the box seat of the chaise which was conveying the Comte de Tournon-d'Agenay and his family under escort to Paris. And the chaise had been held up by three of the bravest . . ."

"Never mind about three of the bravest English gentlemen, at the moment," Lady Alicia broke in, impatiently; "you shall sing their praises to us again. But if you do not tell us the whole story at once we'll call on Sir Andrew Ffoulkes without further hesitation. Your highness!" she pleaded once more.

"My fair one," his highness rejoined, with a laugh, "I think that we shall probably get a truer account of this latest prowess of the Scarlet Pimpernel from Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. It was a happy thought of Lady Blakeney's," he added, with a knowing smile directed at Marguerite, "and I for one do command our friend Ffoulkes forthwith to satisfy our curiosity."

In a moment Sir Andrew Ffoulkes found himself the center of attraction. He was in his element; a worshiper of his beloved chief, he was called upon to sing the praises of the man whom he admired and loved best in all the world. Had the bevy of beauties around him known that he was recounting his own prowess as well as that of his leader and friend they could not have hung more eagerly on his lips.

In the hubbub attendant on settling down so as to hear Sir Andrew's narrative even the popular Sir Percy Blakeney was momentarily forgotten. The idol of London society, he nevertheless had to be set aside for the moment in favor of the mysterious hero who, as elusive as a shadow, was still the chief topic of conversation in the salons of two continents.

The ladies would have it that Sir Percy was jealous of the popularity of the Scarlet Pimpernel. Certain it is that as soon as Sir Andrew Ffoulkes had started to obey his highness' commands by embarking on his narrative, Sir Percy retired to the farther end of the room, and stretched out his long limbs upon a downy sofa, and promptly went to sleep.

"Is it a fact, my dear Ffoulkes," his highness had asked, "that the gallant Scarlet Pimpernel and his lieutenants actually held up the chaise in which the Comte de Tournon-d'Agenay and his family were being conveyed to Paris?"

"An absolute fact, your highness," Sir Andrew Ffoulkes replied, while a long-drawn-out "Ah!" of excitement went the round of the brilliant company. "I have the story from madame la comtesse herself. The Scarlet Pimpernel, in the company of three of his followers, all of them disguised as footpads, did, at the pistol point, hold up the chaise which was conveying the prisoners, under heavy escort, from their chateau of Agenay, where they had been summarily arrested, to Paris.

"Inside the vehicle M. de Tournon-d'Agenay, with his wife, his young son, and two daughters, sat huddled up, half numbed with terror. They had no idea who had denounced them and on what charge they had been arrested, but they knew well enough what fate awaited them in Paris. The revolutionary wolves are fairly on the warpath just now. To prove their love for France, lovely France, whose white robes are stained with the blood of her innocent children; and to show their zeal in her cause, they commit the most dastardly crimes.

"Madam la comtesse assured me that her husband, and, in fact, all the family had kept clear of politics during these the worst times of the revolution. Though all of them are devoted royalists, they kept all show of loyalty hidden in their hearts. Only one thing had they forgotten to do, and that was to take down from the wall in madam's boudoir a small miniature of their unfortunate queen."

"And for this they were arrested?"

"They were innocent of everything else. In the early dawn after their summary arrest they were dragged out of their home and were being conveyed for trial to Paris, where their chances of coming out alive were about equal to those of a rabbit when chased by a terrier."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

People Must Reform

The people have revolted many times throughout their history, but have never yet revolted against their own worthlessness.

We can never have real reform until the people are somehow made to realize that there is but one reform; for the people themselves to reform; not to glorify their race or pastors, but to make themselves more comfortable.

The one great thing to strive for is to render life as easy, comfortable and successful as possible; to modify savage nature. This can best be done by people behaving better; to help rather than fight each other.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

First Armored Ships

The first real armored vessels were the floating batteries used at the siege of Gibraltar in 1787. France was the first to produce a seagoing armored ship. Four were commenced in 1858. The first to be completed was the Gloire. In 1861 the United States congress passed an act providing for armored vessels. Under the provisions of this act the Galena, the New Ironsides and the Monitor were built.

NEW ENSEMBLES FOR FALL; LONGER SKIRTS THE EDICT

MAY as well begin to talk of things knitted now, for their importance on the fall and winter program is assured.

If advance models are a criterion, then the coming months will witness a showing of knitted apparel which in point of novelty, chic and finesse, will eclipse all that has gone before in the style parade.

In the new showings one is impressed with the miracle workings of Twentieth century knitted art. Time was when a knitted dress meant a crudely shaped garment, ungainly in "lines" and weighty to the point of discomfort—utterly utilitarian. Today a frock of knitted construction is indeed "a thing of beauty and a joy"—well, if not "forever," at least until fickle fashion grants it "leave of absence."

The three-piece beige sports suit in the picture is endowed with just such "finishing touches" as bespeak style-aristocracy. The braided trimming which you see up and down each side of the front opening of the jacket is a very new note. Three knitted cords are braided together for this decoration.

Seen in the original the costume pictured is a fascinating color study. While the basic color is beige, a medley of attractive contrasting tones are interknit to a nicety for border treatments about the hemline of the jacket and for the belt effect.

An interesting development in knitted attire is the four-piece ensemble. A skirt, a blouse (usually sleeveless), a jacket or cardigan, a full-length or at least three-quarter coat, are included in the combination. An entire sports wardrobe, if you please, tuned to cool days, hot days, to tennis court and golf field, to shopping tours, to motor trips, in fact, a perfect outfit for general town and country wear.

If fancy runs to lacy effects, then the new sweaters will make dreams come true, for some of them are that lacelike, they are like silken cobwebs. In addition to the colorful spun silk types, are heavier sorts in which wool or rayon has been interworked, often achieving arresting patternings. There's quite a flair at the present moment for these lacy effects done in delectable pastel colorings.

Yes, indeed, necessity certainly is "the mother of invention." When the "powers that be" sent forth the command from the throne of fashion that skirts must be longer, something had to be done about it. Of course when arbiters of the mode say "longer skirts," then longer skirts are milady's choice. But how to carry out the letter of the law and not sacrifice the spirit of the flattering short skirt, aye, that was the question.

Well, there's an answer, and here it is—the sheer transparent hemline.

Three-Piece Sports Suit.

Works like a charm, too! If skeptical, may this lovely frock of taffeta and tulle in the picture below prove to you the subtle charm of a see-through hemline. The skirt is long, just as Dame Fashion insists it must be, but really one is not unhappily conscious of the fact, because of its alluring transparency.

The net of mallne, tulle or chiffon used for these hemlines to "look right" must be, if not an accurate match to the heavier material it borders, then at least a closely related tone or tint. The gown illustrated is styled of coral-colored taffeta, its tulle hem being a slightly darker shade as is also the alluring thin hair hat which is so smartly turned off the face. Among the elite a large transparent hat is a necessary luxury this summer. It may be black, natural white, or an exact match to the summery frock it tops, and its brim eloquently bespeaks the master touch of the milliner's hand, who turns and folds and plaits it in most ingenious ways, with a view to becomingly framing the face.

Note, please, the circular cut of the skirt which graces the superb gown in the picture. The bow of self-taffeta also interprets a smart and important style theme.

This costume, so charming for bridesmaid or for garden-party wear, eloquently bespeaks the trend toward greater formality and elegance in the current mode. The line between sports and dress-up modes is being drawn more definitely each day. Smart afternoon clothes have become, therefore, a favorite theme with creators of styles, and the future promises an increasing elaboration of modes for afternoon and evening wear.

FARM POULTRY

EARLY MOLT NOT RIGHT FOR EGGS

Careful Feeding Will Encourage Hens to Lay More.

Poultry keepers who fed a wet mash in addition to the regular grain and dry mash kept their hens laying heavily last year, says L. M. Hurd of the New York state college of agriculture. Hens should be kept in production through careful feeding during the summer and early fall so that they will molt rapidly and soon return to producing.

Records of the Missouri College of Agriculture show that early molting hens lay fewer eggs during the following winter than those hens which molt late.

In the summer and fall, hens should have an abundance of tender, leafy green food, shade, and fresh clean water at all times. Hens that do not respond to good treatment should be removed so as to give the others a better chance. Skim milk or semi-solid buttermilk, at the rate of one or two pounds to a hundred birds should be used. A good plan for feeding this, is to mix it and enough water with the regular dry mash. This mash should be fed in the afternoon, just before the night feeding of grain. The hens should have only what they can eat up in twenty minutes.

If milk is not available, fill a pail half-full of dry oats, fill it up with water, and let it stand from one afternoon until the next. Then add enough of the regular dry mash to take up the remaining moisture, and feed as described above.

After September 1, poultrymen have had good results from using lights to prolong the laying season. Late in the fall this should be discontinued to give the hens an opportunity to molt before cold weather, and rest for the breeding season.

Avoid Changes in Feed for the Pullet Flock

It is surprising how important some poultrykeepers are when endeavoring to secure eggs from the pullet flocks. Unless the yield goes up by leaps and bounds, they imagine that there must be something wrong with the feeding, and forthwith begin to change the rations.

This happens at irregular intervals, and in consequence the birds never have an opportunity of getting accustomed to any particular ration. There is nothing more detrimental to egg production than these frequent changes. Of course, it would be unwise to persist in feeding a ration which had proved to be unsuitable, but until such unsuitability has been definitely established changes should be avoided.

Duck and Goose Eggs Require Much Moisture

It depends pretty much on the operator whether duck and goose eggs hatch as well in an incubator as under hens. They require more moisture than hens' eggs and usually need to be "fairly drowned" the last two weeks. It would not be practical to try to hatch hens' eggs with goose eggs in the ordinary small incubator, owing to the difference in size which would give a slightly different degree of heat on the small and large eggs.

Poultry Facts

Spade up the yard frequently.

Fowls stand cold better than dampness.

Provide a nest for each four or five hens.

Make the house dry and free from drafts, but allow for ventilation.

Get the hens out in the sunshine and feed plenty of oyster shell to get good strong eggshells.

Market eggs at least twice a week in summer.

Build the self-feeder so that it protects feed from rain.

Select the best growing and most vigorous cockerels for breeders.

Old hens are the most common spreaders of poultry tuberculosis.

Send your big fluffy boarder hens to market. This is one way to relieve your farm of loss.

A flock of 50 ducks can be kept on many farms without materially increasing the labor needed in caring for the poultry.

Ducks do not require a large investment for houses or equipment. A tight shelter that will protect them from the weather is satisfactory.

Planer shavings give very satisfactory results when used for litter in poultry houses. Cut alfalfa, cut clover, or cut straw also give good results when used as litter.

"Bulldog" Poor Guard

While it was a good trick, it did not work. A Houston (Texas) man bought a ferocious-looking bulldog modeled out of plaster of paris. With his purchase under his arm, he hastened to his car outside, attached the "bulldog" by the end of the chain to the rear axle of the machine. He left his automobile in the custody of the "dog," departing triumphantly. Several hours later he returned. The police are now searching for "one plaster of paris bulldog—very realistic, attached, to one automobile."

Waited Long for Diploma

"Dr. John Guilford Earnest, class of '61." These words were lately uttered at Emory and Henry college. Thereupon Doctor Earnest, eighty-seven years old, the oldest alumnus of Emory and Henry and now its oldest graduate walked forward to be presented with a diploma which would have been his in June, 1861, but for the fact that he had left school the previous April to join the forces of the Confederacy.

New Dye From Dead Cactus

That a certain species of cactus can be made to produce a natural plant dye is the claim of Prof. H. Molisch, a German chemist. He has named it "cactorubin," because of its reddish color, and says that it is produced when the cells of the plant die.

PRESIDENT LINEBERRY AT ST. JOE SUNDAY

F. W. Lineberry President of the Indiana Conference of the M. P. Church, was in St. Joe Saturday evening and conducted the last quarterly meeting of the conference year and on Sunday morning he preached in the absence of the local pastor at the St. Joe church. Annual conference will convene August 19 to 26. With Sunday morning, August 18, Rev. J. F. McKnight will have completed four years work for the local church and the evening service will have likewise completed the same service at Concord. Some weeks ago the pastor gave notice to the congregation that his services would be completed on the local charge at conference time. E. R. Kinsey has been chosen as the local delegate to the conference this year.

Some weeks ago a delegation from the Harlan church came to St. Joe and asked admission to the St. Joe Charge offering to pay her one third in every item of expense in support of the pastor and parsonage upkeep. An agreement was reached by the officials subject to the ratification of Annual Conference.

No choice of pastor has been voiced by the local churches for next year.

THE HARVEST MOON

Yes folks, it's harvest time again, when nature showers her countless gifts upon us mortals here below. It's the time of year when the purple and the orange haze that surrounds the setting sun, far as the eye can see, that makes rich fields of ripening grain greet the vision—a scene that can be likened unto a mantle of gold rippling in the soft, warm breezes of the good old summer time. And in the orchards, tree, vine and bush barely sway in the wind—so heavily laden are they with glorious fruits. Ah, yes, a generous Providence has again filled our Horn of Plenty to overflowing! And as Tusser suggested in his poem, 'tis a time for rejoicing: "In harvest time...harvest folks, servants and all, should make good cheer...in the hall"

And so we welcome August—the month named for the poppy, and whose birthstone is sardonyx.

Important past events happening in the month of August include:

August 1, 1914, beginning of the European war; Ex-president Harding's death, August 2, 1923; battle of Mobile Bay, August 5, 1864; first locomotive run in the United States, August 8, 1829; Herbert Hoover born August 10, 1874; Fulton's first steamboat voyage in America, August 11, 1807; August 15, 1914, Panama Canal opened to navigation; battle of Bennington, August 16, 1777; Benjamin Harrison born August 20, 1833; first steam ship to cross the Atlantic launched August 23, 1818; first practical typewriter patented August 26, 1843; Oliver Wendell Holmes born, August 29, 1809; Charleston, South Carolina earthquake, August 31, 1886.

The moon's activities for August are thus: New moon on the 4th, first suarter on the 12th, full moon on the 20th and last quarter on the 27th.

And with the harvest month here again, let us offer the following as a perfect ending:

August brings the sheaves of corn,
Then the harvest home is borne.

A Cooler Kitchen ~ with Electric Cookery

THE ordinary oven raises the kitchen temperature from ten to fifteen degrees. In summer especially the heat seems almost unbearable. With an Electric Range the increase in the heat of the kitchen when the oven is in use is hardly noticeable.

Electric ovens are completely insulated—the current can be turned off long before the food is done. The heat is kept inside where it is needed. Because the heat developed is nearly all usable—and is not wasted through escape into the kitchen—you can readily see that a minimum of electrical current is consumed. A cooler kitchen is but one of the advantages of Electric Cookery. It actually gives you better meals, with less time in the kitchen. There is complete freedom from smoke and soot! No fumes! And absolute safety for yourself and children is assured.

VOL. XLIII — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1929 — NUMBER 32

OLD SCHOOL CHUM WRITES THE NEWS

We are reproducing a personal letter from an old school chum, E. B. Barney, that will be appreciated by many. It was received some weeks ago:

Big Spring, Texas.

Dear Friend Fred:

Your recent letter, which I was glad to receive, and would like very much to attend home coming, and would especially like to see all members of our high school class, I do not remember if you finished or not, I did not, for I was too anxious to get out at something. Old Joe Colborn used to give me "fits" about going out looking after my sheep, but now days they are sending thir boys to A. & M. schools. I would like to see Foraker, for it has been over twenty years since I have seen him. If I must say it, we had a nice bunch of boys in our class, and all have turned out to be good as average, at least, if not better.

The west suits me very much, as you will notice that I have come further west, arriving here last September, where I expect to stay. Being rate clerk now, we have about 15,000 population here, division point, employ about 700 railroad men. I was in ticket office as ticket seller and delivered pay checks until March, and this job was open with considerable more money.

I have been at considerable expense moving out here and have been planning to write you when I would get to work every morning, but if I did get down early there would be some waybills to be revised, and in a booming town, it is just like a mad house in freight office.

Your friend,
E. B. Barney.

P. S.—Herewith check for $5.00.

SECHLER FAMILY HOLDS ITS REUNION IN AUBURN

The thirty-eighth annual reunion of the Sechler family was held Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Mavis in Auburn, with fifty-two relatives present. After the usual basket dinner a short program was presented including vocal solos and duets.

Mrs. Amelia Sechler Benninghoff, of St. Joe, who recently returned from eastern Pennsylvania, the original home of the family, spoke of the early history of the family tracing the descent from Abraham Sechler, a Swiss-German, who came to America about 1750. It was interesting to note that at one time a Mrs. Sechler and baby were among a group of people who were scalped and massacred by the Indians near New Tripoli, Pa., according to a government correspondence of that time.

The following were elected as officers for the ensuing year: President, Henry Sechler of Butler; vice president, Frank Baltz of Spencerville; secretary, Miss Grace Curie of St Joe and treasurer, Samuel Mumaw of St. Joe.

The thirty-ninth reunion will be held at the home of Henry Sechler at Butler.

ASK PAVING IN CONCORD AND SPENCER TOWNSHIPS

A petition for an improved highway to be paved with brick, concrete, bitumen or tarvia has been filed in the office of County Auditor, Estell Dawson, by Richard Sharpless, of Auburn, attorney. The proposed route of the highway extends from a point on what is known as the H .M. Widney et. al. improved gravel road in Concord township and runs through St. Joe and Spencerville and continues on the Spencerville-Leo road, ending at the Allen-DeKalb county line. The petition, signed by more than 250 voters and freeholders, has been set for a hearing at 1 o'clock on September 3.

Travel on the proposed route has become very heavy, necessitating a considerable expenditure in upkeep. This was the first gravel road in DeKalb County.

Hallocks Writes of Women in China

Taking a Hand in the "Goings-On" A Great Change Noted

C. P. O. Box, No. 1234,
Shanghai, China, June 27, 1929.

Dear Editor:

Here comes a letter from this land of intrigue, graft, warfare, famine, suffering, chaos, to tell you and the readers of your excellent paper about China's new woman who has a share in the "goings-on."

If a woman in China, twenty years ago, had been given a Rip Van Winkle sleep, she would be more surprised than he was, should she awake today. Then women had to stay indoors and work something like domestic animals. Or, if of a better family, be cooped up at home and stay there. She was allowed to be seen only by her husband or brothers.

Now what a change! The modern Chinese young women skip around the streets with a spring, grace and freedom that's quite refreshing when one remembers the women formerly hobbling along on bound feet supported by amahs. Now girls bob, shingle, or permanent wave their hair. That's a sign of freedom! They ride bicycles, play tennis, basket ball and engage in other athletics. Formerly the parents arranged their marriage. Now one often sees the young ladies walking very affectionately arm in arm with their "best boys," and the young people often do the arranging. The dress used to be the most modest of any nationality. Now women are often seen with short sleeves and very low-necked frocks even at midday. Sometimes they're seen with the most up-to-date up-beyond-the-knee short frocks and flimsy silk hose and very high-heeled shoes. Indeed the Chinese girls are quite amusing flappers sometimes — shocking sometimes—so much so that the officials have felt it necessary to issue proclamations commanding them to dress modestly. The girls have even learned to flirt in the most-up-to-date way. That's freedom! They dance in the latest style. They ride horses, astride, with boots and riding breeches. "That's English, you know."

Once the ideal for girls was that they be able to do beautiful needle work at home. Now they are doing other things. They are clerks in stores. Some are typists and stenographers. Some are bankers. They play the organ or piano or other musical instrument. Some are becoming movie artists or actresses. Some are lawyers and judges and doctors, are teachers and kindergarteners. They even become soldiers and sometimes they become Generals' secretaries! Women also become street-corner politicians and scream the Revolutionary platitudes such as, "Down with imperialism," "Give the people freedom," to beat the most zealous men Revolutonaries. Rarely do you see meetings for propaganda or riots without seeing girls or women taking active part in them, urging on the riots. I am glad to say that some few of them are taking part in the Red Cross work in relieving the suffering of those wounded in battle. Women, too, occupy places of influence in the government in Nanking. Once women's faces lacked all hope and ambition, and there are still great hosts of women who are the same drudges at home or —worse— in great factories. But among the younger generation they have ambition that carries them to extremes.

I'm glad to say that there are many modest, motherly women who have gone thro our mission schools who are making nice, clean, beautiful Christian homes where the children are brought up well and taught to be good useful members of society, children of whom they and missions can be proud and thankful. One can not expect great things from a nation in which the people have been brought up for ages in filth, physical and moral; but a new generation is coming on, born anew in the church of Christ and in these clean Christian homes. We are expecting much for China from such.

Things are out of joint in China: but we hope and pray that the common sense of better Chinese and the deeply planted power of the Gospel will gradually overcome the criminal influences and that China will find peace, proserity and a place among the great nations of the world.

Yours in Christ's glad service,
(Rev.) H. G. C. Hallock.

For Beauty TESTING RESULTS For Pleasure

In checking up the annual report of the Allen-DeKalb Dairy Herd Improvement records for the year 1928-1929 which ended May 31st, we are pleased to find that the Merriwold Farms herd stood in fourth place, with an average of 14.16 cows in the herd for the year—producing an average of 6323 pounds milk, and 367.0 pounds butter fat.

For each dollar spent for feed, we received a return of $2.70; produced butter fat for twenty-one cents per pound and milk at $1.21 per hundred. Considering that fifty percent of this herd was heifers in first milk, we believe this to be a rather satisfactory accomplishment.

Cornstalk Can Now Be Harvested

Mechanical engineers of Iowa State Agricultural college have perfected a machine which is expected to revolutionize the harvesting of cornstalks for making paper. Hauled by a tractor, the machine cuts the stalks and carries them by a conveyor to a receptacle at the rear where they are baled ready to haul to the factory.

HEROIC PARK RANGER

Moon Myths

The Dakota Indians think that the moon at its waning is eaten by mice. The Polynesians believe it is devoured by the spirits of the dead. The Kaffirs say that it wanes when, suffering from a headache, it puts its hand to its forehead and hides the latter from our view. The Eskimos imagine that the moon, harassed by fatigue, retires for a moment to take rest and food.

THE RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-6; Ps. 126:1-6.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Happy Home Coming.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Second Chance.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Fresh Start.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Historic Significance of the Return.

I. The Return Predicted (Jer. 29:10-14).

False prophets were flourishing in Babylon telling the people that they would speedily be restored to their own land. To counteract this the Lord moved Jeremiah to send a letter to the captives in Babylon (vv. 8, 9). In this letter he advised them to settle down and quietly pursue their regular callings of life, and not to be led astray by the false prophets (vv. 6, 7).

1. The length of the captivity (v. 10).

Their coming back was to be "after seventy years." From Daniel 9:2 it is clear that seventy years means a definite time. It dates from the time when the first company, among which Daniel was found, was taken captive.

2. Recovered by God (vv.10-14).

God's purpose in the Captivity was to cure them of their idolatrous practices. He assured them that when His purpose was accomplished He would visit them and convince them of His good purpose toward them.

II. The Predicted Captivity Fulfilled (Ezra 1:1-6).

1. The Proclamation of Cyrus (vv. 1-4).

(1) This was not by accident, but that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled (v. 1). What God has promised He will do.

(2) By divine initiation (v. 1).

"The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." How this was done we do not know. Possibly Daniel brought to his attention the prophecy of Isaiah and Jeremiah (Isa. 44:28; Jer. 25:12).

(3) The content of the king's proclamation (vv. 2-4).

(a) "The Lord God of heaven hath charged me to build Him a house in Jerusalem" (v. 2). This makes clear that he had some impression of God's hand upon him.

(b) Appeal to Jewish patriotism (v. 3). He invokes upon such as possess the national religious feeling the blessing of God, and commands them to go and build the house of the Lord God.

(c) To lend assistance (v. 4).

Many of the Jews were established in business and therefore were not free to go. Many, no doubt, had lost their national spirit and were not anxious to go. All such were to lend friendly assistance with silver, gold and beasts.

2. The response to Cyrus' proclamation (vv. 5, 6).

The chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin and the priests and Levites presented themselves as willing to go. The company which returned was largely made up of representatives of Judah and Benjamin.

3. The royal favor (vv. 7-11).

Cyrus returned 5,400 vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem and put into the house of his gods. This was a great encouragement to every loyal Jew whose heart had been grieved over the profanation of these sacred vessels.

III. The Gladness and Rejoicing of the Returning Exiles (Ps. 126:1-6).

1. The proclaimation of Cyrus as a dream (v. 1).

They recognized that their going back was through the favor of the Lord.

2. Their laughter and singing (vv. 2, 3).

They not only recognized the favor of the Lord upon them, but testified thereof in the hearing of the heathen round about them.

3. Their prayer for prosperity in the land (v. 4).

They were not only going back with the consciousness of the good hand of the Lord upon them, but were trusting Him for the fruitfulness of the land.

4. Sowing in tears (vv. 5, 6).

The seeds which they were to sow on the land were so precious that they seemed to have hesitated as to sowing, and yet they recognized that joy would follow their sorrow when they should bring in the sheaves of the harvest.

Gaining Fragrance

We never miss an opportunity of giving innocent pleasure, or of helping another soul on the path to God, but we are taking away from ourselves forever what might have been a happy memory, and leaving in its place a remorse.—Frances Power Cobbe.

COOKING OMELETS IN VARIOUS WAYS

Secret of Success Is in Using Moderate, Even Heat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The secret of making a good omelet of any kind is the same secret that applies to all successful cooking of eggs and dishes in which eggs predominate: Cook slowly at moderate, even heat, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The basic ingredients for any kind of omelet are the same: One egg for each person, one tablespoonful of milk for each egg, and salt to taste. Beat the egg yolks and whites separately for a fluffy omelet; beat them together for a flat omelet.

To make a fluffy omelet for an average family use from four to six eggs. Add as many tablespoonfuls of milk as you have eggs. If preferred, the milk may be heated. It will cook the yolks slightly when it is added hot and give the mixture a smoother consistency. Or, one-half cup of hot white sauce of medium thickness added to four egg yolks will make a larger omelet with more body. Fold the yolk mixture gradually and carefully into the stiffly beaten whites containing the salt—one fourth teaspoonful of salt for each four eggs. Have ready and hot a smooth heavy omelet pan containing one tablespoonful or a little more of butter, and pour the egg mixture into the pan.

The omelet can be cooked in three different ways, but in any case start it on top of the stove at moderate heat. If a small-sized gas or oil burner is used, move the pan about so that the omelet will cook around the edge at the same rate as in the center. As soon as the omelet has browned slightly on the bottom, place it in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake for ten minutes. Or, continue the cooking on top of the stove until the mixture sets, and place under a low broiler flame for two or three minutes. Or, if preferred, cover the pan during the whole period and so cook the top of the omelet with steam. When the omelet is done crease it through the center, fold it over with a spatula, and roll it onto a hot platter without attempting to lift it from the pan. Pour over the omelet melted butter containing finely cut parsley and serve at once.

For a flat omelet beat the eggs with one tablespoonful of milk for each egg and salt to taste. Pour a thin layer of the mixture into a hot buttered omelet pan and cook slowly and evenly. When brown on the bottom roll the omelet in the pan and turn it out onto a hot platter.

Omelets with different names are simply variations of plain omelets, made by adding chopped ingredients to the egg mixture before it is cooked or spread over half of the cooked omelet before it is folded and turned onto the platter. Chopped fried ham or bacon, grated cheese, or a cooked vegetable such as peas, mushrooms or asparagus, or a combination of chopped onion, green pepper, celery, and parsley delicately fried in butter, are some suggestions for variations of plain omelet. Sweet omelets spread with jelly and containing sugar in the egg mixture, are sometimes served for dessert.

SUMMER SQUASH OF DELICATE FLAVOR

Especially Delicious When Seasoned With Butter.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Young, tender, summer squash, be it yellow or white and called crookneck or cymling, is of delicate flavor, especially when seasoned liberally with butter before serving. It need not be watery if properly cooked. Below are two recipes from the bureau of home economics for preparing summer squash. Summer squash may also be sliced, dipped in flour or egg and bread crumbs, and fried as eggplant is fried, or baked, or steamed in a regular steamer or a colander over hot water. When cooked in any of these ways without added water the full flavor of the squash is retained and the texture is more satisfactory to many people than when the squash is boiled, drained, and served mashed.

Casserole Squash.

2 quarts diced summer squash
3 tbs. melted butter
1 cup buttered crumbs
2 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper

Select young, tender, summer squash, wash, cut into small cubes, put into a greased baking dish, season with salt and pepper and sprinkle the buttered crumbs on top. Put on the cover of the dish and cook in a moderate oven for about one hour. When the squash is tender remove the lid and let the crumbs become golden brown before serving.

Panned Squash.

1½ quarts diced summer squash
2 tbs. butter
1½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper

Select young, tender squash, wash well, and remove the tips from each end. Dice the squash in ¾ inch pieces, leaving the skin on unless it is very tough. Melt the butter in a skillet until slightly brown, put in the squash, sprinkle with salt and pepper, cover and cook for ten or fifteen minutes at medium heat. Remove the cover and cook a little longer for the liquid to evaporate. Serve hot.

Joy of Feeling Fit

The joy of feeling fit physically is reflected in a clearer and more useful mind.

You may read and study forever, but you come to no more important truthful conclusions than these two:

1. Take care of your body (eat and exercise properly), and your mind will improve.

2. Work hard, and be polite and fair, and your condition in the world will improve.

No pills, tablets, lotions, philosophies, will do as much for you as the simple formula I have outlined.

FRUIT AND OTHER NICE SUNDAES AT HOME

Ice Cream Makes Fine Foundation for Sundae.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The children enjoy pretending they are having something at home that has first been sampled elsewhere. The idea of a "sundae" at home suggests all the joys of the soda fountain with none of the distraction of nearby trays of candy and chewing gum.

French vanilla or custard ice cream is particularly good as a foundation for any sort of fruit "sundae," with sweetened crushed fresh fruit served over it, such as strawberries, raspberries or fresh peaches, according to the season. Chocolate or butterscotch sauce, maple sirup or honey may also be used with french vanilla ice cream or sundaes. This is a good ice cream, too, to serve with pies "a la mode," which means simply pie with a dip of vanilla ice cream on top. It can be used with sponge cake to make an "ice cream sandwich." The eggs in a custard ice cream are excellent for the children, supplementing the other nutritious ingredients of the ice cream by adding to the day's supply of vitamines and minerals.

The bureau of home economics gives the following directions for making it:

French Vanilla Ice Cream.

1 quart milk
½ pint double cream
4 eggs
¾ cup sugar
¼ tsp. salt
1½ tsp. vanilla

Prepare as for custard by pouring some of the heated milk into the lightly beaten eggs and then cooking the milk and eggs with the sugar and salt in a double boiler until the custard coats the spoon. Cool, add the double cream, mix well and freeze.

For the freezing mixture use one part of salt to 4 to 6 parts of ice. Turn the crank slowly during freezing.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By the BARONESS ORCZY

Copyright Baroness Orczy
WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes.

"And that was when the gallant Scarlet Pimpernel interposed?" Lady Alicia put in with a sigh. "He knew M. le Tournon d'Agenay and his family were being taken to Paris."

"I believe he had had an inkling of what was in the wind some time before the arrest. It is wonderful how closely he is always in touch with those who one day may need his help. But I believe that at the last moment plans had to be formulated in a hurry. Fortunately, chance on this occasion chose to favor those plans. Day had broken without a gleam of sunshine; a thin drizzle was falling, and there was a sharp head wind on, which fretted the horses and forced the driver to keep his head down, with his broad-brimmed hat pulled well over his eyes. Nature, as you see, was helping all she could. One can imagine the surprise attack. Vague forms looming suddenly out of the mist and the sharp report of a pistol, twice in quick succession. The horses, sweating and panting, fell into a foot-pace, dragging the heavy coach up the steep incline, through the squelching mud of the road, and came to a violent and sudden halt on the crest of the hill at the first report. At the second they reared and plunged wildly.

"The whole thing was, I am assured, a matter of a couple of minutes. It was surprise and swiftness that won the upper hand, for the rescue party was outnumbered three to one. Had there been the slightest hesitation, the slightest slackening of quick action, the attack would of a certainty have failed. But during those few minutes of confusion, and under cover of the mist and the vague grayness of the morning the Scarlet Pimpernel and his followers, down on their knees in the squelching mud were not merely fighting, you understand? No! They were chiefly engaged in cutting the saddle girths under the bellies of eight fidgety and plunging horses, and cracking their pistols in order to keep up the confusion. Not an easy task, you will admit, though 'tis a form of attack well known in the East, so I understand.

"At any rate, those had been the chief's orders, and they had to be carried out. For my part, I imagine that superstitious terror had upset the nerves of that small squad of revolutionary guard. Hemmed in by the thicket on either side of the road, the men had not sufficient elbow room for a good fight. No man likes being attacked by a foe whom he cannot well see, and in the melee that ensued the men were hindered from using their somewhat clumsy sabers too freely for fear of injuring their comrades' mounts, if not their own; and all they could do was to strive to calm their horses and through the din, to hear the words of command uttered by their lieutenant.

"And all the while," Sir Andrew went on, amidst breathless silence on the part of his hearers, "I pray you picture to yourselves the confusion; the cracking of pistols, the horses snorting, the lieutenant shouting, the prisoners screaming. Then, at a given moment, the Scarlet Pimpernel scrambled up the box seat of the chaise. As no doubt all of you ladies know by now, he has the most wonderful hand with horses. In one instant he had snatched the reins out of the bewildered Jehu's hands, and, with word of mouth and click of tongue, had soothed the poor beasts' nerves. And sudden he gave the order, 'Ca va!' which was the signal agreed on between himself and his followers. For them it meant a scramble for cover under the veil of mist and rain, whilst he, the gallant chief, whipped up the team, which plunged down the road now at breakneck speed.

"Of course, the guard, and, above all, the lieutenant, grasped the situation soon enough, and immediately gave chase. But they were not trick riders, any of them, and with severed saddle girths could not go far. Be that as it may, the Scarlet Pimpernel drove his team without a halt as far as Molay, where he had arranged for relays. Once well away from the immediate influence of Paris, with all its terrors and tyrannical measures, the means of escape for the prisoners became comparatively easy, thanks primarily to the indomitable pluck of their rescuer and also to a long purse.

"The story is exactly as I had it from Madam la Comtesse de Tournon-d'Agenay, whose only sorrow, now that she and those she loves are safe at last in England, is that she never once caught a glimpse of her rescuer. He proved as elusive to her as to all of us, and we find ourselves repeating the delightful doggerel invented on that evasive personage by our prince of dandies, Sir Percy Blakeney."

"Marvelous!" "Enchanting!" "Palpitating!" "I nearly fainted with excitement, my dear!" These were some of the ejaculations uttered by dainty, well-rouged lips, while the men, more or less, were silent, pondering, vaguely longing to shake the enigmatical hero once, at least, by the hand.

His highness was questioning Sir Andrew Ffoulkes more closely about certain details connected with the story. It was softly whispered, and not for the first time, either, that his highness could, if he would, solve the riddle of the identity of that mysterious Scarlet Pimpernel.

And the whisperers were correct, since his highness was one of the few who knew that Sir Percy Blakeney was the Scarlet Pimpernel, who, with his little band of romantic adventurers—of whom Sir Andrew Ffoulkes was one—was devoting himself to saving from undeserved death victims of the Reign of Terror in France.

Dainty, sweet, and generous, as usual, Lady Ffoulkes had edged up to Lady Blakeney, and the two young wives of such gallant men held one another for one instant closely by the hand, a token of mutual understanding, of pride and of happiness.

Then Lady Ffoulkes looked in dainty puzzlement about her. "Sir Percy!" she exclaimed. "Where is Sir Percy?"

And the call was like the chirruping of birds on a sunny spring morning. It stilled all further chattering for the moment.

"Where is Sir Percy?" And silence alone echoed, "Where?"

Until a real material sound came in response. A long-drawn out sound that caused the ladies to snigger and the men to laugh. It was the sound of a loud and prolonged snore. The groups of gay society butterflies, men and women, parted, disclosing the alcove at the further end of the room, where, on the sofa, with handsome head resting against rose-colored cushions, Sir Percy Blakeney was fast asleep.

CHAPTER II

Citoyen Lauzet

But in Paris the news of the evasion of the ci-devant Comte et Comtesse de Tournon-d'Agenay with their son and two daughters was received in a different spirit. Members of the committees of public safety and of general security, both official and unofficial, professional and amateur, were more irate than they cared to admit.

Citoyen Lauzet, chief of section in the rural division of the department Seine et Oise, was most particularly worried by the incident, which, it must be remembered, occurred in his district. The hand of the well-known English spy, known throughout France as the League of the Scarlet Pimpernel, could obviously be traced in the daring and impudent attack on an armed escort, and the subsequent driving of the chaise through three hundred kilometers of country where only shameless bribery and unparalleled audacity could have saved them from being traced, followed, and brought to justice.

Citoyen Lauzet, a faithful servant of the state, felt that the situation was altogether beyond his capacity for dealing with; those English spies were so different to the ordinary traitors and aristos whom one suspected arrested, and sent to the guillotine all in the turn of a hand. But now was one to deal with men whom one had never seen and was never likely to see, if rumor spoke correctly? Citoyen Lauzet scratched his bald pate and perspired freely in his endeavor to find a solution to his difficulty, but he found none.

It was in the midst of his perturbations that he bethought him of his friend, Armand Chauvelin. Now, Lauzet was quite aware of the fact that that same friend of his was under a cloud just now; that he had lost that high position he once held on the committee of public safety, for reasons which had never been made public. Nevertheless, Lauzet had reasons for knowing that in the matter of tracking down spies Armand Chauvelin had few, if any, equals; and he also knew that for some unexplained cause Chauvelin would give several years of his life, and everything he possessed in the world, to get his long, thin fingers round the throat of that enigmatical personage known as the Scarlet Pimpernel

No Sound-Proof Room Has Been Developed

Henry Bernstein, French playwright, hired a builder to build him a sound-proof room in his apartment. The room cost 175,000 francs and failed to be sound-proof, so Bernstein sued the builder and recovered 37,000 francs damages.

Publisher Horace Stokes, discussing the case, said:

"Writers are always looking in vain for sound-proof rooms. You remember the sound-proof room that Carlyle built on top of his little house in Chelsea. It wasn't sound-proof at all.

"Carlyle couldn't sleep in his Chelsea home on account of a rooster in a neighbor's garden. At last, worn out, a nervous wreck, he went to the neighbor and said:

"'For the love of heaven kill that rooster of yours, or it will kill me. Look at my bloodshot eyes and shaking hands. The bird crows all night and I never get a wink of sleep any more.'

"'No, no, Mr. Carlyle,' said the neighbor, 'it don't—it can't crow all night.'

"'Perhaps not,' said Carlyle, 'but when it isn't crowing I lie there, breathless and tense, waiting for it to begin again.'"

FEATURE SLEEVES AND SKIRTS; PAJAMA COSTUMES IN FAVOR

WOMEN not in a tailored mood will find that the midseason and autumn style program includes any number of charming frocks which abound in beguiling "dressmaker" touches.

Sometimes it is a touch of embroidery or a series of fine plaitings or a skirt of complex design or novelty sleeves, or in some instances all of these details combined, which give a prettily feminine aspect to the frock.

Watch especially for novelty sleeves

Two Beguiling Costumes.

in the new styles. It is said that they are to be much featured in coats as well as dresses. The gown to the right in the picture is stylized with sleeves which bespeak unique and elaborated design. Not only are these sleeves of an entirely new cut, but they are accented the more because of the hand embroidery lavished upon them. The neckline, too, is fancifully treated. Likewise the skirt departs from lines of simplicity, suggesting as it does, through adroit plaitings, an apronlike overdrape.

That same spirit of the ornate is manifested in the winsome afternoon frock to the left. It too, has a skirt of unusual silhouette, the full rippling flare, richly patterned with embroidery done in multicolors.

As to fall fabric prospects, it may be interesting to know that jersey has recaptured the favor of fashionists. Tweed-printed silks are promised and many silk novelties which stress plaids and stripes. The new woolens are fascinating, some of them of dainty lacy weave. It is said that woolens in violet shades will be featured. Special prominence is given to tweed in these colorings. Covert novelties such as checks, stripes or zigzag effects are shown and there are various dressweight basket weaves included in the new displays.

Flat crepe, either silk, woolen or rayon, comes in for considerable attention among fall fabrics. In regard to velvet interest is divided between transparent and panne types. In either event velvet will be very much in evidence.

Not only will fabric combinations be exploited, but color alliances will be made much of. Such colors will be harmonized in the working out of ensembles as brown, gray and yellow, brown with rose, blue-gray with pale rose and brown. It seems that rich soft effects are preferred, especially in the development of smart sports ensembles.

Speaking of embroidery which is coming into decided favor, it seems that yarn motifs worked in modernistic colorings are gaining in favor right along. This yarn work is done on silk, jersey and even such sheer weaves as chiffon and organdie.

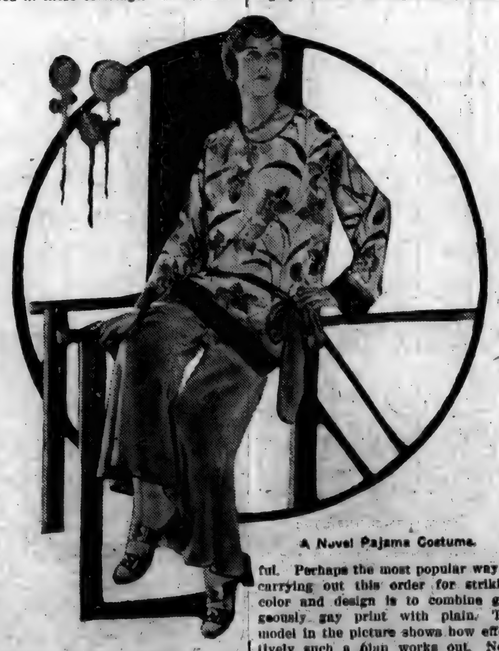
A very pretty thought is that of filling in large designs solid with tiny applied flower petals.

The pajama-wearing sorority is increasing its membership at a rapid rate. No longer is the pajama costume exclusive with a select few. On the contrary it has become part of every well-equipped wardrobe.

Then, too, the sphere of the pajama is no longer limited to the boudoir or to home environment. As to the correct when and where of the pajama suit, women have settled the question for themselves by donning it whenever and wherever it suits their convenience and their fancy.

Wherefore the theme of the pajama resolves itself into many classifications—sleeping pajamas, lounging pajamas, elaborate pajamas as hostess' apparel, pajamas for the beach, which is not so simple as it sounds when one realizes that nowadays one entertains at bridge, at luncheon under canopied umbrellas and gay striped tents. Nor does this complete the list, but it is sufficient to prove the fact that fashion has mapped out an important program for the pajama costume.

There's this about the majority of pajama sets—they are supposed to be highly colorful and ingeniously designful. Perhaps the most popular way of carrying out this order for striking color and design is to combine gorgeously gay print with plain. The model in the picture shows how effectively such a plan works out. Note the circular flare to the pajamas, this being a featured detail this season.



A Novel Pajama Costume.

A late idea is to employ twin prints for the making of pajama outfits—the crepe de chine print being used for the trousers, which are worn with a white or monotone tinted blouse, over which is posed a coat of the sheer chiffon patterned to match the design of the crepe.

Clever for the bridge party is the pajama which instead of having "buttons all over it" has cards scattered over blouse and coat, these cards being made of white satin hand-painted with clubs, spades, diamonds and the like.

POULTRY

VITAMINE NEEDED IN CHICK RATION

Liberal Use of Milk Quite Essential for Chickens.

A vitamine required by poultry and hitherto unrecognized, has been discovered by L. C. Norris, G. F. Heuser and H. S. Wilgus, jr., of the Cornell university agricultural experiment station. This vitamine, which is contained in milk is essential for the growth of chicks and for the prevention of a peculiar type of paralysis which may result in incurable deformities.

The discovery was in part accidental and resulted from an attempt to get a chick ration low in calcium and phosphorous, which would be suitable to study the requirements of chicks for these minerals. Casein, a purified milk protein, was used as the main source of protein in the experimental ration. When it was used in place of milk the chick ration was found lacking in this vitamine which prevents paralysis.

The experiment demonstrates that the use of liberal quantities of milk is essential where chicks or mature birds are confined indoors and are not provided with succulent green feed. To conclude from this experiment that milk should invariably be used in all poultry rations would be unwise, they say, as good chicks have been reared in the past with little or no milk and good winter egg production has also often been obtained with rations which contained no milk. It is probable, therefore, that this unknown factor is present in slight amounts in meat products, cereals and cereal by-products, and in large amounts in succulent leafy green feeds.

Barred Plymouth Rock Favored to Caponize

One of the best breeds of poultry for caponizing is the Barred Rock as the sex can be determined at an early age. The cockerels will be light and the pullets dark and when the chicks are about six weeks old and weigh close to one and a half pounds each, the poultryman can go into his colony houses with a spotlight and collect cockerels as fast as he can pick them up.

In caponizing such breeds as Rhode Island Reds or White Wyandottes, it is more difficult to pick out the male birds at an early age, says a writer in the Michigan Farmer. Considerable accuracy is possible by studying the heads. The male birds soon appear more coarse and have a harsher voice than the pullets. Pullets of any color soon develop what might be called the feminine type of head. It is smaller and more refined than the head of the male bird. The combs, beaks, and even the undeveloped combs on male chicks have a different appearance from pullets.

Some breeders caponize White Leghorn cockerels and make them weigh as much as six pounds but in general the caponizing is confined to the heavier meat breeds like the Barred Plymouth Rock, Jersey Black Giant or Light Brahma.

Various Good Points of the African Goose

The African goose has had at different times several names, among which were China goose, swan goose, Chinese swan, Guinea goose, Spanish goose and others. Its origin is unknown, but it is quite probable that it originated in a cross between the goose we now call the China goose and the Toulouse, and from this cross was perfected until it is now an enlarged kind of a Brown China goose.

The African goose lays better than any of the other larger breeds and it grows to be as large as any other. Specimens that were given the best care have grown to weigh 25 pounds, but the standard weight for a full-grown African goose is 20 pounds. They are very hardy and easy to raise. They are very watchful and know strangers from those whom they see every day. When a stranger comes among them they set up a clamor that notifies every one within hearing that something out of the ordinary has happened.

Plenty Good Features

Poultry houses that are built today are sensible; though they have plenty of fresh air, they have no draughts, though they contain more hens to the square foot, there is no dampness which is so fatal.

Two essentials that can be had for the taking are provided—sunlight and fresh air—and with these there is no reason why we should not have the healthiest race of fowl found on the face of the globe, and as a result an increased production of eggs.

Ventilation Essential

Ventilation is another essential of modern poultry housing. A good ventilation system supplies fresh air in the poultry house without making it subject to sudden temperature changes. Ventilation removes dampness and eliminates foul odors, making the flock healthier and more comfortable. Automatic ventilation systems are now on the market which consist of intake flues in the back of the house and a cupola on the roof to carry out foul air.

NEARBY AND YONDER

By T. T. MAXEY

Lafayette National Park

LAFAYETTE National park is the first of all those broadly-varying and matchless areas of outstanding scenic attractiveness, which Uncle Sam has selected, set aside and maintains as national rest-and-play grounds for the benefit and enjoyment of his people, that lies east of the Mississippi.

It is unique among these national domains, in that it is the first having contact with the sea. It is, in fact, surrounded by the sea and its arms, on territory near which a daring French explorer planted his feet long before the Mayflower pulled up at Plymouth. If, as has been said, the coast of Maine is "An eloquent chapter in the continent's ancient history," then, Lafayette National park is "One of the most dramatic paragraphs in the chapter."

The park is located on Mount Desert island, which is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, the largest island in the archipelago east of Penobscott bay and the largest rock-built island on our Atlantic seaboard. It is indeed a superb grouping of natural topographic elements and features—mountains, cradling half-hidden lakes, hills and plains, cliffs and crags, bold and rocky coast line, majestic woodlands made up of various members of the tree tribe, underbrush of strange varieties, beautifully carpeted with a confusion of many-hued wild flowers, mottled by sunshine and shadow, all encompassed by blue-green salt water and overhung by a sky of shifting colors. "Of its own and in its own way," says the guide book, Lafayette National park is "an American masterpiece."

The American Parthenon

THE Parthenon was "The crown of the glory that was Greece." This temple which bordered on the Acropolis at Athens, was dedicated to Pallas Athena, the goddess of wisdom, more than 400 years B. C., and was used throughout the centuries of its existence as a temple of worship. The pagans occupied it for about one thousand years and the Christians for about another ten centuries. The Christians were routed by the Turks and the ancient structure became a mosque. In 1087 the Turks were overthrown by the Venetians and the building was ruined.

In Centennial park at Nashville, Tenn., on the banks of the Cumberland, stands a faithful reproduction, both as to form as well as to size, of that masterpiece of Greek architecture. First constructed as an attraction of the Tennessee centennial exposition in 1897, it was later rebuilt as an unusual and permanent attraction of the Tennessee capital.

The charm of this beautiful building springs from the refinement of its outline and the well-balanced effect of its proportions, these characteristics blending in a dignity and grace, which have made it famous as the most perfectly proportioned structure the Greeks ever built. It is 101 feet wide, 228 feet long, 65 feet high and is encircled by a row of 50 giant, fluted columns, each 34 feet high and 6½ feet through at the base, which are easily the most attention-attracting feature of the entire ensemble. A frieze containing 92 panels in sculptured relief depicts some of the leading mythological tales which are connected with ancient Greek history.

The Mount of the Holy Cross

THE Mount of the Holy Cross is one of the sky-piercing peaks which constitute the Rocky mountain range. It is located in Eagle county, Colorado, near the town of Minturn. Its hoary head rises to an elevation of 13,978 feet or considerably more than two and one-half miles above the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific.

On this mountain nature carved a deep ravine some 2,000 feet long running up and down its side, fashioned a transverse ridge some 800 feet long across and above the center of this ravine and thus produced a mighty and holy cross from which the mountain takes its name.

By virtue of its altitude this ridge is almost always covered with snow, high winds cause the snow to drift into the ravine and thus a great, white cross appears on the mountain side and looks out and down upon the world. This inspiring marvel has been referred to as "A Nation's Guiding Emblem of Faith."

Uncle Sam, through his forest service, now has set aside a tract of land of some 350 acres which includes this mountain and is known as Holy Cross National forest, as a shrine for the use of his people for devotional, educational and recreational purposes, and it has come to pass that an annual, non-denominational pilgrimage can be made to the top of Notch mountain, directly opposite this great nature-made cross, by all who desire to "lift up mine eyes" in this unusual and glorious spot.

386,000 Fingerling Game Fish Delivered to Applicants from the State Hatcheries in June

386,000 fingerling game fish were delivered to applicants from the State hatcheries in June. They included the following species: Black bass, 344,100; yellow perch, 26,000; rock bass, 8,000; bluegills, 5,500 and 2,400 crappies. Deliveries made in July will be recorded in next month's bulletin. July plants included red-eared sunfish and channel catfish, species not quite large enough to send out in June.

6,556 Gar and Dogfish Removed from the Lakes

Since May 4th, when work was started, until July 21st, the four 2-men crews employed to remove gar and dogfish from the lakes, have succeeded in destroying 6,556 of these obnoxious fish. 5,215 were gar and 1,341 were dogfish. They also removed 272 large carp. The work will continue until fall. It is done with gill nets and by spearing at night. The lakes being worked by the men at present are: Lake James, Maxinkuckee, Tippecanoe and Lake Wawasee. The largest gar so far removed this season measured 52½ inches and weighed 19 pounds. Quite a few gar and dogfish weighing 10 pounds or over have been taken out. On the basis that a 10-pound gar or dogfish will devour or destroy at least 400 pounds of other fish in a year, one can see the benefit derived from removing these worthless marauders. The weight of the fish so far removed averaged about 5 pounds. On the basis that one of that size consumes or destroys 200 pounds of fish in a year, then 1,311,200 pounds of other fish have been conserved for better purposes in the next 12 months. Notwithstanding the fact that 99 out of every 100 fisherman favor the methods employed by the Department in removing these fish, yet some persons are complaining that more damage is done than good by game fish getting in the nets. Those so caught are returned to the water, the men being instructed to cut the nets rather than injure the fish. The number of game fish killed by the men is so small that it amounts to almost nothing. It does not equal the number an average fisherman catches in a day. One big gar in a lake will eat more fish than all the game fish the men kill or injure in their work with nets.

Complaints Filed Relative to Length Limit on Yellow (ring) Perch

The Division has received a number of complaints relative to the 7-inch length limit on yellow perch. Wardens report seeing a considerable number of undersized fish of this species dead about the lakes. They were no doubt perch caught and returned to the water by fishermen who observe the law. Some persons advocate that the length limit be done away with, and a bag limit be established instead. Others favor a 6-inch length limit with no restrictions as to daily catch. Whatever merit such contentions may have, it would seem to be most important whether yellow perch or any protected game fish is large enough to spawn at least once before allowing it to be caught. Yellow perch might spawn in some lakes when 6 inches in length or even when smaller, depending on whether they are two years old or not. They will not spawn until that old. To prevent this valuable fish from being used for live bait, it would seem unwise not to have a size limit on them, whether it be 6 or 7 inches. The law in Michigan is 7 inches with 30 the limit per day. Very likely the legislature in 1931 will have the matter brought to its attention.

Squirrel Season Opens August First

On August 1st the season opened on squirrels and will remain open until November 1st, on which date the season closes. The daily bag limit is 5 per day. Squirrels are reported by game wardens to be quite numerous in most sections of the state.

Arrests and Convictions in June

Arrests for violations of the fish and game laws in June numbered 259. Convictions were made in 243 cases; 14 were untried; only 2 dismissed. Fines and costs amounted to $5,686.25, a large part of which went as usual into the county school funds. The leading offenses were: Fishing or hunting without license, 67; taking game fish in close season, 67; taking undersize fish, 41; taking fish with illegal seines and nets, 23; killing squirrels in close season, 11; taking mussels illegally, 8; taking fur animals out of season, 8 and hunting with dogs on game reservation, 5.

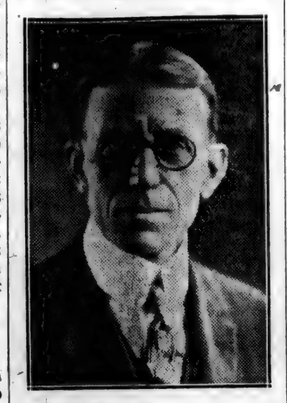
Secretary Of Indiana State Fair Says Prospects Look Brighter Than Ever



E. J. Barker, Secretary-Treasurer of the Indiana Board of Agriculture, is very optimistic regarding the 1929 State Fair, which will be held from August 31 to September 7. He says:

"Prospects are very encouraging for the 1929 Indiana State Fair. More exhibit space has been assigned in the mechanical department and in the manufacturers building than in previous years, more concession space has been sold than ever before.

"The interest in the live stock and poultry departments far exceeds other years.

"Cattle are coming from New York and Massachusetts, on the east, to California on the west and from North Dakota to Texas from north to south.

"The National swine show is being held in connection with the state fair, which has never been done before. This will bring together the greatest swine show ever held in all history, barring possibly the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904.

"Our race program is the best offered at any state fair and as good as is offered at any Grand Circuit meeting anywhere. Practically all the good Grand Circuit horses are entered here.

"Our night entertainment in front of the grandstand is the Gus Hornbrook rodeo, which is one of the best to be found anywhere. In connection with this entertainment, there will be Roman standing races and steeple chases.

"The Indiana University band will furnish music throughout the week.

"In the manufacturers building will be seen the greatest auto and radio shows ever seen at any fair or exposition.

"The Indiana State Fair of 1929 is offering a total of $171,745.00 in premiums and purses which is more than $20,000.00 in excess of any other fair."

President Of The Indiana State Fair Says That 1929 Fair Will Be Greatest Ever Held

E. D. Logsdon, of Indianapolis, President of the Indiana Board of Agriculture, which manages the Indiana State Fair, advises that he believes, with the National Swine Show here this year, this will be the largest fair that has ever been held. Mr. Logsdon says:

"Having been interested in the Indiana State Fair for the past several years, I know that we have had some very successful fairs, but this year there will be held in connection with the fair the National Swine Show which should draw a large crowd, especially since the state of Indiana is putting up $34,000 in prizes for this show. This should bring large entries in cattle, horses, poultry and sheep, also, as most of those interested in hogs are also interested in some other kind of livestock.

"I believe that the people of Indiana realize that the Indiana State Fair is the largest event of the year and it is only a short drive on these good roads from every corner of the state. A few days spent with $10,000,000.00 worth of livestock, where probably twenty or twenty-five states are represented, will be a long, pleasant remembrance as both an educational feature and a recreation.

"There will be plenty of amusement, Grand Circuit Racing, Horse Breaking demonstration, Horse Pulling Contest, the Night Horse Show in the Coliseum, the rodeo in front of the grandstand each night, and many other features that should be interesting to any person. It will pay all of you people of Indiana to take the time to come to the Indiana State Fairgrounds for a few days from August 31 to September 7, inclusive."

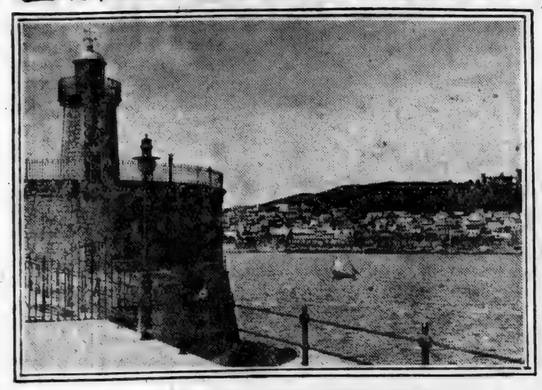
Balearic Isles



Lighthouse and Port, Palma, Balearic Islands.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE Balearic islands, in the Mediterranean off the coast of Spain, are off the beaten path today, but once when that inland sea was the center of world culture these isles throbbed with life and activity.

There are five main islands in this Spanish group, and several islets. They are ruled as a military district, but the mother country has been wise enough to recruit the soldiers needed for discipline from among the islanders themselves, thus insuring a sympathetic rule.

Majorca is the main island. It is a delightful spot, not very well known even to Spaniards and almost wholly missed by the stream of outside tourists that courses through other parts of the Mediterranean. The island is almost square, about forty miles along each side, and lies as though hanging by a cord from the eastern end of the Pyrenees by one corner. Thus a corner points in each of the cardinal directions, while the sides are exposed to the northeast, the northwest, the southwest and the southeast.

Along the northwest side, which faces Spain, is a high mountain range whose loftiest peaks, nearly a mile high, bear patches of snow in winter. But even in the summer their tops are gleaming white, for they are of marble and the crests of many are devoid of vegetation. The lesser peaks and shoulders are clad in a mantle of dark green pines while lower are groves of ilex and flowering shrubs. On the gentler slopes of this northern coast and in its valleys man has placed vineyards and orange and olive groves. The whole panorama, sweeping from the blue sea through varying greens to the shining white peaks, makes a picture of incomparable loveliness.

It is south of the mountains that Majorca's garden spot is found, and the fertile plain that sweeps off from the foot of the range to the hills that rim the southeastern side of the island is called just that, the "Huerta." This level region supports many thousands of acres of almond and apricot trees, and in the spring is a vast sea of blossoms. Among the trees gardens are cultivated and grass is grown for pasturage. The hills that rim the plain have been terraced for centuries and on them rise tier after tier of grape vines and olive trees.

Palma Has an Ancient Site.

Palma, the capital of Majorca, lies in a broad bay that indents the southwestern side of the island just south of the high mountains. A city has existed there probably since the days of Carthage when colonists from that African empire occupied Majorca; but there is little evidence now of anything but Spanish influence. Scattered about the city are numerous interesting old palaces of the leading island families—one at least for almost every street. The population is about equal to that of Mobile, Ala., or Portland, Maine.

Majorca, like the Spanish mainland, was overrun by the Moors. For 500 years they held the island with Palma (then Mallorca) a flourishing Moorish city. It was a thorn in the side of the Spanish Christian kingdoms, however, for the Majorcan Moors became piratical in the Twelfth century and no Christian ship was safe. King Jayme I of Aragon organized a strong expedition which sailed from near Barcelona in 1229, and, after a siege, captured Palma. Soon the whole island was subdued and divided among Jayme's knights and soldiers. It has remained Spanish ever since and there is no trace of Moorish blood among its inhabitants.

The Spanish Majorcans followed in the footsteps of their Moorish predecessors in so far as developing nautical ability was concerned. As traders they rivaled the Genoese for a time and once dominated the entire western Mediterranean, controlling Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Malta and the Balearics. Palma had a great dockyard for galleys: in the middle of the Fourteenth century more than 30,000 sailors and 400 vessels were in the Majorcan service. The Majorcan navy constituted one of Christendom's chief bulwarks against the ravages of the Barbary pirates.

Minorca Looks Very English.

During their prime as merchant shippers, the Majorcans were famous as the leading geographers of Europe. They invented crude but effective instruments of navigation and drew the most reliable charts then known.

Minorca is the easternmost and second largest of the Balearic islands. No one visiting Majorca or Iviza, sister islands, would doubt their Spanish ownership once he mingled with the inhabitants or studied the architecture of their buildings.

But Minorca, although ruled by the Spanish king and but 27 miles east of Majorca, differs from its neighbor islands. Except in a few spots, its people and its buildings would fit an English village outside of London. Owing to early British occupation, Miss Minorca stays at home, while her Spanish sisters work side by side in the fields with their husbands; and instead of the soft oxhide Spanish sandal the Minorca maid wears shoes. And proudly she tells how Lord Nelson, during the war with France, came to Mahon, Minorca's capital, seized and lived in a mansion house overlooking Mahon's fine harbor.

In the protected inlets around the island are small fishing villages, made spotless by frequent coats of whitewash. Back of these villages the natives raise sufficient wheat for home consumption. Wine, olive oil, pomtoes, hemp and flax are produced in moderate quantities; melons, pomegranates, figs and almonds are abundant; some cattle, sheep and goats are reared; and were it not for the scarcity of fuel, the lead, copper, and iron deposits could be profitably worked. Near Mercadal there are fine marble, limestone and slate quarries. Incidentally Mercadal is the ancestral home of Admiral Farragut.

In the Eighteenth century the British built a road from Ciudadela on the northwest coast to Mahon on the southeast coast. Travelers enjoy beautiful panoramas where some energetic Minorcan has taken pride in his estate, but unkempt spots are numerous. Stone monuments, caves, and historic relics have been discovered, but one has to penetrate deep into the fields and byways to find them. Ancient, windowless stone structures are found in the interior. Pottery and other antiquities are frequently unearthed by the natives. Scientists could, perhaps, trace their origin to prehistoric times or to the time when the Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans or Arabs occupied the island. Many of the stone monuments are falling to pieces and some of the pottery and historic implements now adorn stone walls where they were carelessly thrown by their finders.

Mahon Lacks Spanish Color.

Minorca could be expanded four times its natural size and then not match the area of Rhode Island. Its population could be housed in a small American city. More than half of the Majorcans live in Mahon, the capital, the most English spot on the island. From the steamship, the city has a Spanish aspect, with church belfries dominating the panorama. But in the streets, which rise terrace above terrace up the cliff side, English influence prevails. There is little Spanish color. Shining brass fixtures, square-paned windows with white frames, and unshuttered windows during the day time are decidedly un-Spanish.

At the other end of the British-made road, Ciudadela, while not as Spanish as Palma, Majorca, is not as English as Mahon. Like Mahon, it occupies the side of a cliff overlooking a fine harbor. Many of its buildings are whitewashed and even the nearby rocks are frequently given white coats along with the houses; but here and there a daub of color—pink, blue, green or yellow—and an occasional iron grill balcony lend a Spanish touch. The easy-going life of the Latin prevails in Ciudadela more than in Mahon. One of the most exciting events at Ciudadela is the arrival of boats from the other Balearic islands or from Barcelona.

Minorca's authentic history begins with the arrival of Mago, brother of Hannibal, in 210 B. C. He founded Mahon. The island was the cause of frequent conflicts between European sovereigns and the scene of pirate raids for centuries. Under British rule, Minorca prospered from the early part of the Eighteenth century until the Seven Years' war. The ownership of the little island also was involved in the American Revolution when the French and Spanish captured it while England was busy overseas. Sixteen years later, at the beginning of the long struggle with Napoleon, the British again captured Minorca and it remained British until 1802 when, under the Peace of Amiens, it passed to Spain.

Wildcat Swap Brings Hunter Heavy Fine

Harrisburg, Pa.—The difference between three wildcats killed in Pennsylvania and three killed in Louisiana is $145 in U. S. money, at least so far as the bounty division of the board of game commissioners is concerned.

Despite the similarity in size and color of three pelts offered recently to the bounty board for payment, members of the board easily detected the difference between a Pennsylvania cat and one from the brakes of a southern state.

Investigations disclosed the cats had been killed in Louisiana. Instead of collecting $45 in bounties, the hunter paid $100 in fines.

BECOMES COUNTESS; FLEECED BY CROOK

Kansas Woman Comes to Grief in France.

Paris.—Things have happened quickly since the day Mrs. Pearl Hussey Flanagan, a music teacher and wife of an undertaker in Wichita, Kan., walked up the steps of the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart, in Paris, France. Events have followed each other almost too quickly, for when Mrs. Flanagan walked down the steps she was Countess de Taurine and owned the Chateau de Taurine, a massive old structure of rough hewn stone.

Now Mrs. Flanagan owns nothing. She plans again to take up the teaching of music where she left off, and she must begin soon, for the law took away from her her fur coat, dresses, stockings, and even underwear. Besides, her husband is suing her for divorce.

When she entered the cathedral in Paris, Mrs. Flanagan met the Abbe Loubiere. She told him of her ambition to establish a school of music in France, and her seriousness so impressed him that he asked her to accept the chateau as a nucleus about which to build the school. The abbe had served in the World war, among American troops, and was not averse to paying some tribute to America. Mrs. Flanagan then learned she had become Countess de Taurine under French civil law.

Seeking to obtain a manager, Mrs. Flanagan in Kansas City hired Charles F. Faye to conduct the business end of her music school abroad. Faye, given a free hand, began the floating of stock, stairstepping the prices. He had been arrested before for raising a check, but Mrs. Flanagan did not know that. When the crash came Faye went to jail and the countess was in debt $5,000. Besides, there was a tax of 60 per cent on the chateau in France. Constables left the "countess"—or Mrs. Flanagan now—with the house dress she was wearing when they departed from the music school.

Scientist Would Study Sun at Close Range

Brussels.—Working closer to the sun than has any human being before him, so far as is known, Prof. Andre Piccard of Brussels university and an assistant hope to study the cosmic rays at a height of nearly 50,000 feet. The professor plans to reach this dizzy height in an especially made balloon with a closed cabin.

Professor Piccard says the cosmic rays are the key to the atmospheric conditions of the earth, and that his initiative may lead to all commercial airplanes using the upper layers for travel rather than the stormy regions close to the earth.

King Albert's $12,800,000 fund for scientific research will finance the venture, which will cost about $15,000.

MEAN NEIGHBORS GET PUNISHMENT

Find Accusing Sign Placed on Nearby Lawn.

Jamaica, L. I.—A new wrinkle in signs for front lawns has been introduced by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Azzevedo. If neighbors are inclined to be independent, why not put up a sign about it so that the public knows it? Mr. and Mrs. Azzevedo did so recently.

The sign in question, which may or may not start a vogue in suburban communities, reads: "The reason why the west side of our house is not painted is because our neighbors on that side refuse to allow our painter to place his ladder on their property in order to do the work."

The west side of the house is garbed in its original coat of white, while the remainder is brightly painted in deep cream. The sign is about a foot and a half square and generally similar to an ordinary real estate placard. It has been specially painted, with extreme regard for legibility.

The houses on Ninetieth avenue are unusually close together making it impossible for painters to raise ladders or erect scaffoldings without stepping on a neighbor's property. When a neighbor objects to this intrusion, as in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Azzevedo, progress on a paint job is seriously impeded.

Auto Accident Leads to Arrest of 2 Criminals

Paris.—An auto accident had a curious sequel here. A limousine was being driven along one of the boulevards by Felix Moncorger, twenty-eight, when he knocked down a pedestrian, who was rushed off to a hospital.

The police took the driver to jail and when they made inquiries found that his auto was one which had been reported stolen only a few hours previously, and the police allege it was Moncorger who stole it. Then a police officer was sent to take a statement from the victim of the accident. The doctors declared the man's condition was grave, but he himself claimed he was not hurt at all. This made the policemar suspicious and when he inquired into the man's past found he was actually sought as an escaped criminal.

When the man in the hospital recovers, he will be taken along to join in jail the driver who knocked him down.

Much Obliged, Says Old Sailor Saved From Sea

Bridgeport, Conn.—Some sort of an award for nonchalance ought to go to an ancient mariner rescued from his leaking rowboat in a driving rainstorm near here recently, Capt. David S. Conrad of the tug Owen J. McWilliams believes.

The gray-haired old man was standing in his water-filled boat, waving his shirt on the end of an oar when he was sighted through the rain.

The tug picked him up and carried him to shore. He did not discuss his name nor reveal his identity.

At the dock the aged boatman turned and said:

"Much obliged, captain."

"Don't mention it," replied Captain Conrad.

Burial Alive All Right, but He Forgot Details

Camas, Wash.—The trouble was that Romo, Man of Mystery at carnivals and county fairs, forgot one of his handy aids to mystery.

Emulating Houdini, Romo attempted to show he could survive one hour in a coffin buried six feet in a grave. Curiously enough, he took along a telephone. Down he went, duly nailed up in a box of one-inch boards, and on into the earth. Only three feet of it, however.

There came frantic calls for help, and when he was exhumed it was discovered the lid of the box had caved in under the weight. Romo having forgotten to put in iron braces.

Sheep Herder With Foot Burned Waits for Help

Enterprise, Ore.—With his right foot badly burned, Phil Hollis, sheep herder, tended his flocks for three days until aid reached him. Hollis had built a campfire to warm himself. He retired while the embers were still warm. A breeze sprang up and fanned the sparks onto his canvas shelter, igniting it. He was awakened when the tent filled with smoke. He dressed the burn and waited three days until a camp tender came before leaving the flock.

Dog Comes Home After Being Gone Five Years

Bolivar, Mo.—Spud, an English shepherd dog belonging to J. P. Lane, had been missing for five years. Several days ago the Lane family was startled to be met at the front door by Spud, joyfully wagging his tail and emitting short yelps of supreme happiness at the reunion. The prodigal was identified by a missing tooth which had been kicked out by a mule.

Sodium Arsenate Quite Efficient

Poison Has Proved to Be Satisfactory for Grasshopper Bait.

Paris green and white arsenic have long been used as the standard poisoning agents in grasshopper baits. As a consequence most farmers have become familiar with these materials. They know that desirable results can usually be obtained. That being the case, most farmers are not prone to make a change to other meterials. They always ask the question, "Why change to sodium arsenic when I can get results with paris green or white arsenic?"

Paris Green Costly.

Paris green, besides being hard to mix, is entirely too expensive for economical poisoning, therefore should be eliminated. White arsenic is cheap enough, but due to the care required to get the poison evenly distributed in the bait, it is often difficult for the field worker to obtain a perfect mixture. When the mixture is imperfect, erratic results are sure to be had. The possibilities of arsenical poisoning are also greater when one works with white arsenic extensively.

Its Advantages.

Sodium arsenate is free from the above criticisms, and has proved to be a most satisfactory and efficient poison. It has the following advantages:

1. It is cheap, reducing the cost of poisoning to a minimum.

2. It is easy to mix. The chances of an imperfect mixture are reduced.

3. It is soluble. Therefore every flake of bran moistened is poisoned, doing away with possible erratic results.

4. This material is poison and must not be taken internally, but due to its liquid state, there is less possibility of being poisoned with it than with white arsenic where large quantities of dust can be breathed.

5. It is easy to measure and handle.

6. It is efficient. Experiments show it to be entirely effective when properly applied.—George S. Langford, office of Colorado State Entomologist.

Grind With Electricity Is Cheapest Operation

Experiments at Iowa State college lead to the conclusions that the farmer who needs only 100 or 200 bushels ground annually should have it done at a custom mill if within reasonable hauling distance. Where more than 400 bushels are needed per year, the farmer can well afford to own his own equipment and do the grinding work on his farm. Home grinding costs about one-half that of custom grinding when more than 700 bushels are ground per year. A small electric grinder will operate from 25 to 35 per cent cheaper than large equipment, especially when arranged for automatic or semi-automatic operation. It is cheaper to operate, a smaller transformer can be used with much decreased core loss, and it gives an improved load factor and better diversified load.

Cattle Grub Expensive to Many Cattle Owners

It costs in the neighborhood of $50,000,000 a year for cattle owners, dairymen, feeders, butchers, and tanners to support the cattle grub, yet this pest can be destroyed. Either the old method of hand extraction may be used, or the newer methods developed by the United States Department of Agriculture. The department advises the application of Derris as a wash, ointment, or powder, pyrethrum ointment, fine tobacco powder or nicotine dust, or the injection of benzol or carbon tetrachloride. A concentrated drive on the cattle grub is necessary to eradicate it from a locality. The pest is becoming more serious, says the department, owing to the spread of a second species of grub, known as the northern, or European grub.

Staking and Pruning Is Essential for Tomatoes

Staking and pruning truck crop tomatoes is a common practice. Advantages claimed for staking and pruning are greater uniformity and better average size.

Stakes are commonly set when the plants are from 12 to 15 inches tall and should stand three to four feet above the ground. Plants should be tied to the stakes with soft twine or rags loosely and as the plant develops additional ties should be made.

The amount of pruning varies with the desire of the grower. Many believe that heavy pruning reduces yields needlessly and experiments tend to bear this out.

Protection Is Needed for Parts of Machines

Cultivator shanks, tractor drawbars, power take-off shafts, and similar devices or parts of machines should be breakpin protected, as a rule. Spring release hitches are replacing breakpins on tractor drawbars to some extent, while safety clutches form a convenient and practical means of protection for power take-off and other revolving drive or driven shafts. But whatever device is used, see that it is always ready—like a fuse in an electric circuit—to break, slip or trip when an obstruction is suddenly encountered.

Best Insurance for Many Legume Crops

Inoculation Is Favored for Growth and Soil Building.

It is only a few years ago since a few farmers began rather shamefacedly to coat their alfalfa seed before planting with a thin mud made from earth taken from an old alfalfa field. This was the beginning of the farm practice of inoculating the seed of leguminous crops. In 20 years, we have progressed greatly in this practice and our understanding of it. The most successful farmers we know today would not plant alfalfa, soy beans, sweet clover, peas, beans, vetches, or any of the clovers without making certain of inoculation. Science discovered and practice has proved that these crops so inoculated with beneficial bacteria as to produce numerous root nodules, take extra nitrogen from the air, thereby adding to the soil an excess supply of our most expensive plant food. Inoculation simply means supplying the seed with a start of these bacteria, to render the plant independent of soil nitrogen for its growth. With inoculation, legumes are soil builders and, other conditions being favorable, grow thriftily. Without inoculation, they deplete the soil of nitrogen the same as any other crop and unless other conditions are unusually favorable, grow unthriftily or not at all.

There are different good methods of inoculation. Commercial inoculation is reliable and easy to use. The soil transfer method is effective but more trouble. If you buy inoculator, specify the kind of crop you want to use it for, and you will get the right sort. By whatever method, do not try to inoculate soy beans with earth from an alfalfa field or inoculator meant for vetch. It requires a different kind of a bug for different groups of legumes.

Modern Practice Is to Fill the Silo Evenly

Many silo owners are coming to the conclusion that it doesn't pay to tramp the silage when the silo is being filled. It is almost impossible to compress the silage evenly, and the labor is largely wasted. The modern practice is to fill the silo full with no tramping—then let it settle for a few days, after which it can be refilled. Even with the most vigorous tramping, settling will occur, and it is observed that not much, if any greater settling will occur even if no tramping is done. The main thing is to distribute the silage evenly over the entire area, which can be done easily with proper handling of the distributor pipe.

Satisfactory Ration for Work Horses Is Outlined

Even though work horses are fed plenty of grain they will not keep in good shape if their ration is not properly balanced. Oats and prairie hay make a satisfactory ration, but corn and prairie hay are not good. When corn is the only grain fed, at least half the hay should be alfalfa or clover. If neither alfalfa nor clover hay is used, the ration of corn and prairie hay may be balanced by feeding a small amount of cottonseed or linseed meal. The amount of meal needed to balance the corn and prairie hay ration will vary from one and a half to two pounds daily, depending on the weight of the horse.

Do not wait to see if a new weed will be a bad one before destroying it. Endless trouble and annoyance later may be avoided by promptly killing weeds in new infestations.

Spraying is an essential practice in successful potato culture. Farmers who applied timely and thorough sprays last year grew their crops at the lowest cost per bushel.

Do not attempt to handle soil when it is too wet. This applies especially to upland soils, which are rather heavy. Avoid walking on wet soil either before or after preparing it for planting.

The condition of the weather has much to do with the time required to dry hay. Both clover and alfalfa hay should be put in the barn or stacked just as soon as dry enough to be safe from mold.

FARM STOCK

SEAWEED LATEST HEALTH BUILDER

Fed to Live Stock, It Also Provides Iodine in Milk.

Perhaps there is nothing new under the sun, but the new uses often found for old things are amazing enough to keep as interested in life. For instance, seaweed.

When the hogs owned by J. M. Ballard, of Indiana, won the grand championship at the last International Livestock show in Chicago, most of the farmers who inquired about their diet were amazed to find that they were being fed kelp, a rough brown-leaf seaweed that grows in profusion off both American coasts.

Prof. Oscar Erf, of the Ohio State university, was the first to experiment with kelp as live stock feed. His success prompted experiments at Purdue university, and later ones at the Iowa and Utah agricultural experiment stations. It was found that the weed contained at least 30 important chemical elements and was especially rich in iodine, in which several regions of the country are deficient, says the Farm Journal. Mixed in a very small proportion with other feed it proved to have decidedly valuable medicinal qualities.

Not only has this addition to animal diet helped the animals, it also is providing a means of supplying iodine to the human population.

"It has been definitely proved that by using kelp in a cow's ration iodine can be fed into the milk. Chicago physicians are recommending this iodized milk to their patients," says the Farm Journal article, adding that similar experiments with eggs are proving successful.

Strangely enough, kelp has been used for many years in the making of iodine itself, although it never occurred to anyone that its health-giving properties could be transmitted directly to human and animal uses. That is, it had never occurred to anyone in the United States until recently. Over in Japan, wise little Orientals have been eating seaweed for ages, and Occidental visitors generally have regarded it as a primitive habit.

Good Market Seen for Right Kind of Colts

For about the first time in 15 years the old-time horse dealer is in his glory now, says W. H. Peters, chief of the division of animal husbandry of the University of Minnesota. This year the demand for horses has been such that most any old kind of a horse could be sold for some kind of a price and any good horse could be sold for a good price.

"The time has finally arrived," says Professor Peters, "when all that farmers need to do to insure a good profitable horse market for several years to come is to go ahead and raise colts provided they have good big mares to mate to good big stallions.

"The need for horses is so great, however, that many farmers are likely to decide to begin raising colts from whatever mares they have, the common, inferior ones as well as the good, big ones. This will be the quickest and surest way of creating an over supply of inferior horses in a few years and destroying what would become a permanent profitable market for horses if every farmer would resolve to raise only good, useful colts."

Brood Sows Should Be Fed Very Little Grain

Brood sows should be given very little grain for 24 hours after farrowing but should have all the water they desire. The first feed given after farrowing should be limited in amount and fed as a thin slop. The amount fed is increased gradually as the pigs need more milk, until in 10 or 15 days the sow is being fed all she will eat. The brood sow's ration during the suckling period should be slightly laxative and provide for increased milk production to meet the needs of the pigs.

Economical Gains

At no time in a sheep's life can a more economical gain be made than when the lamb is suckling its mother, and at this time one has to be on the alert less something is done or neglected to be done so as to hinder its growth, thereby robbing it of its baby fat much earlier than nature intended. The first 90 days of the lamb's life the lamb can, with a little forethought, be made to gain from one-half to a pound per day.

Feeding for Profit

It makes a big difference how a person feeds live stock when it comes to counting profits. The cow that is not fed a balanced ration—a ration such as is required for economical milk production—cannot produce up to her capacity; an improperly fed hog cannot make pork economically and a steer fed nothing but corn and timothy hay or corn stover cannot produce beef at as low a cost as is possible with good feeding. Proper care also is a big factor.

Rodent Has Worn Out Its Welcome in Hawaii

Those who know the mongoose only through Kipling's immortal story of Rikki-Tikki-Tavi may be surprised to hear that Hawaii hunts the little brown rodent as a pest. Originally brought to the islands on the theory that it would do battle with sugar-cane-gnawing rats, the mongoose has become a nuisance which many people feel is worse than the rats. Its destruction of birds, small poultry and eggs is perennial and extensive. Some years ago the legislature put a bounty on the mongoose in the hope that sufficient scalps would be collected to diminish its ravages. However, the mongoose is both wily and prolific and his kind has not appreciably diminished. A bill in the present territorial legislature proposes to do away with the mongoose bounty on the grounds that were the little chap welcomed and encouraged instead of chased and persecuted, he might co-operate with society more cordially in campaigning against the sweet-toothed rats.

She motored with samples of her work to local builders and architects, who welcomed her fine hand-made bricks.

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

WILLINGNESS BEGETS WILLINGNESS
Pauline Herr Thomas

Patricia is fifteen years old. Her mother has despaired of ever again getting a glimpse of the little "Patsy" of six years, running errands for every one, always ready to help, begging to wash the dishes and water the flowers.

"Really," she says, "sometimes I wonder what has become of my Patsy! She is such a different creature at fifteen! I must beg her to do the smallest service. That sweet spirit of willingness has given place to one of the greatest reluctance."

It happens that I have been so closely associated with Patricia "in the making," that every time her mother speaks of this failing, which is too often, there flashes before me an incident in her childhood. To me, at the time, it was a danger signal, but I am sure it escaped her parents' notice. Often our close relationship with our children seems to rob us of proper prospective.

On this occasion her Daddy was washing his automobile. Patsy brought him polishing cloths, chamois skin—everything he requested—with the utmost eagerness, while she watchced the car emerge from its bath, bright and shining. I heard not so much as a "please" or a "thank you" from her Daddy. He was too much absorbed in his task to think of either, or perhaps he felt them unnecessary. When he had finished, he settled to read the news and had scarcly done so when Patsy

"Daddy, will y please fasten a

"Daddy, will you please fasten a washline for me? I'm washing my clothes, now."

"Now, Patsy, you know Daddy has just finished his work and wants to rest and read. You run along like a good girl and find something else to do. Daddy will fix a line for you some other time."

There was a long moment's hesitation.

I wondered what Pattsy's little brain was turning over as she stood watching Daddy settle down to his reading again. She said nothing, however, turned in a moment and presently found some other play. She was Daddy's "good girl."

She probably helped Daddy the next time just as eagerly as before in spite of his refusal to help her. But, of course, there were other times in her climb to fifteen years when both Daddy and Mother must have failed in a similar manner—when a willing heart encountered an unwilling one in return.

At fifteen Patricia has new contacts, new interests, which in great part account for her lack of enthusiasm for home duties. She enjoys helping prepare for the school play more than washing the dishes for Mother, now. Some such change was inevitable. But there is something more than new interests accountable for what Mother calls Patricia's "slackness at home." Mother should remind herself that at every turn Patricia finds her teacher and enthusiastic schoolmates showing a sympathetic and willing spirit while for a good many years Mother and Daddy have faled to do this.

The Question:
Why is a horse like the letter O?

THAT OLD SLAP ON THE SHOULDER

When a man ain't got a cent,
And he's feeling kind of blue,
And the clouds hang dark and low
An' won't let the sunshine thru,
It's a great thing, O my brethren,
Fer a feller just to lay
His hand upon your shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

It makes a man feel curious.
It makes the tear drops start.
An' you sort o' feel a flutter
In the region of the heart!
As you look and catch his eyes,
You don't know what to say
When his hand is on your shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

Oh, the world's a curious compound,
With its honey and its gall,
With its cares and bitter crosses
But a good world after all.
An' a good God must have made it
Leastways, that is what I say
When a hand is on my shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

UNCLE HAM BLOW GETS HIS FIRST LESSON ON CO-OPERATION AS A FAILURE

Editor Melting Pot:

Ain't wrote you a line for some time past an' as a speculator in co-operation with other fellers I jist got to say I'm all wet.

Not long ago Hank Bivens, me and Bill Raymond all went in kohoots on a sort of a towing in proposition. If any one of us ever needed help while out in the open highway one of the other two was to come to his aid as soon as possible.

We all three agreed that time nor place wouldn't interfere, shook hand and called the job a good one.

This happened two weeks ago, and five days later Hank put in an sos call to my house, sayin' he was out near Swagger's creek an' his car was stuck, said he had tried to get Bill but no one answered the phone. Martha and me was eatin' supper and I got up and went out an' towed Hank in.

Sunday night at 11 o'clock the old phone buzzed again and this time Bill was busted up some place south of town and had to be towed home. I dressed and went out and brung him in.

Yesterday afternoon I and Martha took a ride west of town an' got off the road in a ditch. I called Hank, then Bill, but no response. A little later I called again. Two more calls at 5 o'clock and no reply, so the garage man got the job for $7.50, Martha got a wrenched back and I got thunder from her for being a good feller.

Wild blackberries are just right now for cannin', etc. Better get over before it's too late.

A LIMERICK

I had a girl named Jessie May,
Who broke my heart and ran away;
An act far worse than treason—
The man she chose is old and gray,
But has a lot of jack, they say—
So that must be the reason.

Not Original Cost, But the Upkeep

For a lad who had recently got himself engaged to a beautiful and attractive young woman, his face was radiating a surprisingly small amount of rapture.

"I've got a million-dollar girl," he confided gloomily.

"Well then," replied his friend heartily, "you'r all fixed for life."

"No, no, you misunderstand, That's the upkeep."

ANSWER TO THIS WEEK'S PUZZLE PULLER

Because Gee makes it go.

Charles Brandon Booth Speaks At The Indiana State Fair, September 1 At Three O'Clock

Charles Brandon Booth, son of General Ballington Booth and Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, and himself New England Regional Director of the Big Brother and Big Sister Federation, comes to Indianapolis on September 1 with a mighty heritage to recommend him. For over fifty years his parents and grandparents, in fact nearly all his relatives, have devoted their time to social work. In this he is not an exception, having been for ten years in prison work, for several years an executive in Church work, and during his entire experience in social service connected with child aiding activities.

The Big Brother and Big Sister Federation, Inc., in the interests of which Mr. Booth has been engaged during recent years, is an international, pansectarian work having as its purpose enlisting the friendship and service of individual men and women for individual boys and girls.

Mr. Booth will speak here under the auspices of the Indiana State Fair in the Coliseum on the State Fair Grounds at three o'clock Sunday, September 1.

There will be no admission charge to the coliseum and the public is cordially invited.

Boy Scout Day At Indiana State Fair, September 3

F. O. Belzer, Scout Executive, of Indianapolis, urges the boy scouts of the state to spend at least one day at the State Fair, Boy Scout Day, September 3.

"Tuesday, September 3rd, has been designated as Boy Scout Day at the State Fair by the Indiana State Board of Agriculture.

"Boy Scouts of the State will be admitted free on that day upon presentation of their membership cards, or if in uniform. The uniform is the more preferable. All Councils in the State are urged to send in delegations.

Big Parade

"A big parade will be staged at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Every council in the state is invited to enter a marching unit in competition for the three trophies offered.

"Competitive units will be by Councils, and awards made to Councils. There will be three places with trophies, as follows:

"1st, American Flag.
"2nd, Contest Shield.
"3rd, Boy Scout Pennant.

Regulations

"In order to be eligible to compete, a Council parade unit must consist of not less than thirty-two, plus officials in charge. Larger units are permissible and desirable. A smaller unit can take part in the parade and is urged to take part, but cannot compete for trophies. Bands and Drum Corps are invited to take part, and if needed, may be counted in on the thirty-two required.

"Judging will be made on a schedule, which will include, among other things, the matter of uniforms, parade equipment, such as the proper Flags, etc., marching efficiency, etc.

"A large attendance from over the State is urged."

Dean J. H. Skinner Says State Fair Is Great Educational Institution

The Indiana State Fair, August 31 to September 7 will have something of interest to every citizen of the state, says Dean J. H. Skinner of Purdue University.

The State Fair is a great educational institution and the show window for the agriculture and industries of the Middle West—in fact, the Indiana State Fair is the great Midwest exposition in which all kinds of manufactured products, crops, live stock, poultry, farm products and even boys and girls are shown to the public in a most attractive and interactive way. No other fair has better equipment, premiums and attendance.

The Indiana Board of Agriculture has stressed educational features in all departments in a very large way. It has provided for a school for girls and a club camp for boys. It also provides a most excellent and wholesome race program and other entertainment for the visitors. No matter what the weather the Indiana State Fair is now prepared to carry on an excellent program with assurance that the public will be well cared for under any circumstances.

Every Indiana citizen, whether living on the farm or in the city, should be benefited by attending the Indiana State Fair one or more days.

Daily Jots

The last estimate is that there are about 3,691,456 persons in the country who do almost nothing all day long but annoy busy people with offers of Service.

Everett Walker, of South Bend, is here a guest of relatives for a few days. He came home with ye editor and wife who spent Sunday afternoon in South Bend. On our going trip, we stopped at the Rev. Otis Jones home at Elkhart and found the home under scarlet fever quarantine. In talking with Mrs. Jones we found that the two daughters were sick but were so improved that they thought another week would release the quarantine. Mr. Jones had been quarantined out so that he might keep up with his church work.

Marjorie McComb, aged 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russel McComb of Auburn, had her right leg broken above the knee on Sunday in a peculiar manner. The little girl went to Payne, Ohio, with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Houser of Garrett, and visited a cemetery. As other members of the party stood looking at a new monument in which Mr. Houser was interested, the little girl in some way pulled a small headstone over and it fell on her leg. Marjorie's leg was set but improperly, it is said, and it will have to be reset.

Capital letters in writing are a waste of time and effort, asserts Henrik Willem Van Loon, noted Dutch author who prefers to write his letters without the use of the conventional "capitals." There is a few reasons that might be attributed to such an attitude. First, Van Loon must be a very busy guy; second, he must not be up on the use of capitals, or third, it may be due to the added expense of capitals over lower case letters. Raspberries! Such famous folk are running out of fame, and wish to start some other craze for notority. What's needed now days is a little more precision.

Plans are developing for the annual home-coming event to take place on August 31st., when all former residents will be expected to return to St. Joe once more and enjoy a day of sociability. Meet your friends and chums of former days, shake their hand and again recall the good times of child hood. Many of them will be here as in the past and will be made to feel welcome by the big hearted registration and reception committees. The committee on invitation will be issuing the cards this week and they would be glad to receive names of persons to whom cards might be mailed. Your co-operation will make the work of this committee a real success.

John H. Leasure, of Auburn, in a complaint filed in the DeKalb circuit court, says that on Feb. 26, 1928, Earl E. Beber and Charlotte Louise Wyatt gave the Auburn State bank a note for $500 due in four years. The bank assigned the note to Jonas and Simon Schloss, partners doing business under the name of Schloss Bros., and they in turn assigned it to the plaintiff. A judgment of $700 is asked. The plaintiff also sues on a similar note due in five years, and another due in six years, another due in seven years, another due in eight years and another due in nine years for $500 each and another due in ten years for $6,500. The total amount of the judgment demanded is $12,900. Atkinson & Husselman are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Lesson for August 25

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 3:10-13; 6:14-16; Psalms 84:1-4.

GOLDEN TEXT—I was glad when they said unto me, let us go unto the house of the Lord.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Rebuilding God's House.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Rebuilding God's House.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Building God's House.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Builders of God's House.

After becoming settled in the towns surrounding Jerusalem, the people were called together for the purpose of establishing the worship of the Lord God. The leaders in this movement were Jeshua and the priests and Zerrubabel, the governor. In view of the fact that the clearing away of the debris of the old city and temple and the erection of the new temple would take a long time, an altar was erected where sacrifice might be offered at once unto God. Upon this newly erected altar were offered the regular sacrifices commanded by Moses, including those of the Feast of Tabernacles (Ezra 3:1-7).

I. The Foundation of the Temple Laid (3:8-13).

This was an auspicious occasion and was celebrated with most impressive ceremonies.

1. The priests' apparel (v. 10). These garments symbolized their consecration to the Lord's service.

2. The priests with trumpets (v. 10). The trumpets were used in calling together the people.

3. The Levites with cymbals (v. 10). This was according to the arrangement made by David (1 Chron. 15:16-21).

4. They sang together by course (v. 11). This means that they sang to one another responsively. The one company sang, "The Lord is good," the other responded, "For His mercy endureth forever."

5. Mingled weeping and sighing (vv. 12, 13). Some of the older men who had seen the magnificent temple of Solomon, which had been destroyed, wept much when they saw how far short the present foundation came of the former temple. Others were glad of the favor of God which had brought them back, and that a beginning was made in the new house of worship.

II. The Building of the Temple Hindered (ch. 4).

The leading adversaries were the Samaritans, a mongrel people—the offspring of the poor Jews who were left in Palestine and the foreign people who were sent into Palestine after the Jews were taken captive. The three perils which delayed the building of the temple for about fourteen years revealed the persistent methods which the enemy uses to hinder the program of God's people in every age.

1. An unintelligent pessimism (3:12).

Under the circumstances, a glorious beginning had been made. Many today, because things are not quite what they should be, do not go forward with a constructive program, but even hinder those who have the hopeful outlook. In spite of all the evil forces at work to thwart the purpose of God, the Christian church should push forward its program of evangelization.

2. Wordly compromise (4:2, 3)

"Let us build with you, for we seek your God." This is Satan's most common and effective method. God's children should not seek the world's patronage in building churches and carrying on His work. The leaders should declare with Zerubbabel, "Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God."

3. Opposition by word (4:4-24).

When refused a part in the work intimidation and political scheming were used by the enemies to defeat the building plan of God's people.

III. The Temple Finished (5:1-6).

Through the ministry of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, people were encouraged to resume enthusiastically the work of building the temple. When the temple was finished, it was dedicated to God.

IV. The Blessedness of Dwelling in God's House (Ps. 84:1-4).

1. The longing of the soul for God's house (vv. 1, 2).

It is refreshing when people long to meet God in His house.

2. The sparrow and swallow find protection in the sacred precincts of God's house (v. 3).

3. Dwelling in God's house (v. 4).

Those who have a heart for God find their chief delight in dwelling in His house.

Keep Going

Our new science of flying teaches us that a plane will not go down as long as it can go on. The birds have long known this and they fly. Keep going, believing, hoping, loving, and you cannot go under!

What Will the Master Say?

Will it matter at last whether you have been rich or just lived from hand to mouth? What will the Master say? Ah! that is the question.—Dr. J. B. Shaw

ALL-IN-ONE DRESS FOR LITTLE GIRL

Child Will Learn How to Manage Garment.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The fewer clothes in hot weather, the more comfortable the child. Up to about three or three and a half years old a romper is often the only garment necessary on either a boy or a girl; but as the little girl grows older she looks better in a costume with a skirt of some sort, however abbreviated.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has been working for some time on various problems connected with dressing children of different ages, but especially those of the preschool years. The self-help idea runs through all the designs chosen. Garments that button in front with few and easy-to-find flat buttons or other forms of fastening are preferred. If there must be buttons in back at the waistline two toward the sides are used rather than a single center-back button. Every mother knows how often that center-back button has to be sewed on or the buttonhole mended. Not only can the child reach side-back buttons better, but there is less strain and pull on the shoulders when they are used. Easy making and easy laundering are also points kept constantly in mind in planning children's clothing.

Here is an all-in-one outfit for a little girl to wear on hot days. It eliminates the need for undergarments, yet has the outward appearance of a dress. It is made in two parts, with a detachable plaited skirt for easy laundering. The self-help idea is emphasized, since the dress has an invisible front opening, snapping together under the blue front trimming. The child can also learn very quickly to button the skirt onto the waist before she puts the dress on, if she is once shown how the box plait comes in the middle of the front. The seven buttons on the skirt are arranged so that there are two side-back buttons and none in the center back. The buttonholes are made vertical so the buttons will stay closed.

A kimona style romper pattern was chosen, with a seam on the shoulder and very short sleeves. Except where the collar-like trimming closes at the center front, it is stitched flat, fitting the outline of the neck. The panty part of the romper has an invisible drop seat, and is made on a fold of the goods to give ample room through the crotch, and the very short legs are bound with plain blue material like the little skirt, the neck and armhole trimming and the top of the pocket.

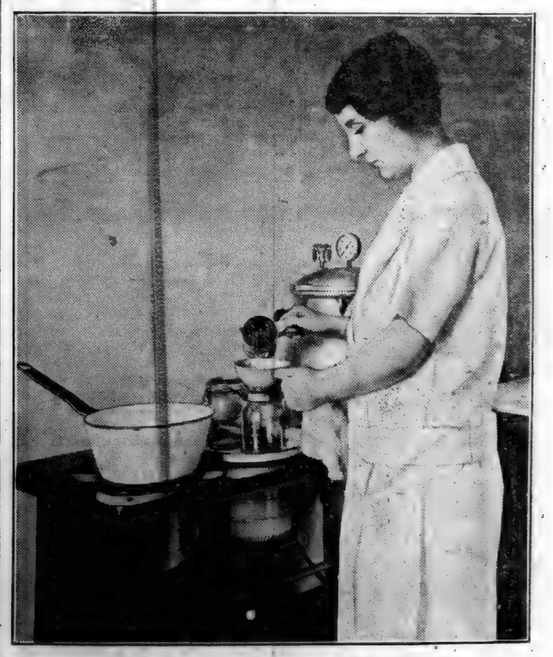
Tomato Cheese Whoopee Especially Delicious

A generation ago it was probably called a "rarebit" of Welsh or other descent, but the modern tendency to apply the latest catchword to everything has turned it into "whoopee," which happily gives one a feeling that the dish is sure to be enjoyed. The bureau of home economics says it makes not only a good lunch or supper dish, but an appetizing and quickly made meal after a long all-day motor trip or day on the water.

2 tbs. butter
½ cup finely cut celery
½ green pepper, chopped fine
¼ cup chopped onion
2 tbs. flour
1 tsp. salt
1 pint tomato pulp and juice
½ lb. cheese, flaked
2 eggs beaten
Few dashes tabasco

Melt the butter in a heavy skillet, add the celery, pepper and the onion, and cook for about five minutes, stirring frequently. Sprinkle the flour over these seasonings, quickly pour in the tomato and then add the cheese and salt. Cook over low heat until the mixture thickens and the cheese is melted. Pour some of this mixture into the well-beaten eggs, then pour all back into skillet, and continue to cook over low heat until thickened and creamy. Add the tabasco and serve on crisp slices of toast or heated crackers.

CAN STRING BEANS IN PRESSURE CANNER



String Beans Most Popular of All Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The farm garden should be planned to supply a considerable surplus of excellent vegetables and fruits which may be enjoyed later on at little cost if canned when fresh. Of course, the practical homemaker does not waste time canning what may be stored, like mature beets, turnips, carrots, sweet potatoes, parsnips, winter squash and pumpkin, or vegetables that may be dried, such as okra and large lima beans.

String beans are among the most popular and satisfactory of all the home-canned vegetables. Only the steam pressure canner should be used to process them. (Processing means heating the material to kill bacteria.) All vegetables except tomatoes require processing at higher temperatures than boiling. This can only be done under steam pressure. Either glass or tin containers may be used.

String beans and all vegetables should be packed boiling hot. That is, they are cooked for a few minutes and then, while still boiling, packed into the jars, sealed, and processed the required length of time. This is sometimes called the "hot pack." It is recommended by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture because the beans at the center of the container are quickly raised to the temperature required for processing, and the bacteria that cause spoilage are more likely to be killed. The following directions for canning string beans, as well as for canning most other common vegetables and fruits, are given in Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home."

Pick the beans over carefully, string, wash thoroughly, and cut into pieces of the size desired for serving. Add enough boiling water to cover, and boil for five minutes in an uncovered vessel. Pack in containers boiling hot, cover with the water in which they were boiled, and add one teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Process immediately at ten pounds pressure, or 240 degrees Fahrenheit—quart glass jars for 40 minutes, pint glass jars for 35 minutes, and No. 2 and No. 3 tin cans for 30 minutes. Remove from the canner and invert glass jars, placing them out of drafts. Plunge tin cans in cold water to cool quickly.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By The Baroness Orczy

WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. The Scarlet Pimpernel is really Sir Percy Blakeney, popular London dandy.

And so, in his difficulty, Citoyen Lauzet sent an urgent message to his friend Chauvelin, to come at once to Mantes, if possible—a request which delighted Chauvelin and with which he forthwith complied. And thus, three days after the sensational rescue of the Tournon-d'Agenay family, those two men—Lauzet and Chauvelin—both intent on the capture of one of the most bitter enemies of the revolutionary government of France, were sitting together in the office of the rural commissariat at Mantes. Lauzet had quickly put his friend in possession of the facts connected with that imprudent escapade, and Chauvelin, over an excellent glass of wine, had put his undoubted gifts and subtle brain at the service of the official.

"Now, listen to me, my dear Lauzet," he said after a prolonged silence, during which the chief of section had been able to trace on his friend's face the inner workings of a master mind concentrated on one all-engrossing object, "Listen to me. I need not tell you, I think, that I have had some experience of that audacious Scarlet Pimpernel and his gang; popular rumor will have told you that. It will also have told you, no doubt, that in all my endeavors for the capture of that detestable spy I was invariably foiled by persistent ill luck on the one side, and the mad, boundless impudence on the other. It is because I failed to lay the audacious rascal by the heels that you see me now, a disgraced and disappointed man, after half a lifetime devoted to the service of my country. But, in the lexicon of our glorious revolution, my good Lauzet, there is no such word as fail; and many there are who deem me lucky because my head still happens to be on my shoulders after certain episodes at Calais, Boulogne or Paris, of which you have, I doubt not, heard more than one garbled version."

Lauzet nodded his bald head in sympathy. He also passed a moist, hot finger around the turn of his cravat. This allusion to failure in connection with the desired capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel had started an unpleasant train of thought.

"I've only told you all this, my good Lauzet," Chauvelin went on, with a sarcastic curl of his thin lips, "in order to make you realize the value which, in spite of my avowed failures, the committee of public safety still set upon my advice. They have disgraced me, it is true, but only outwardly. And this they have only done in order to leave me a wider scope for my activities, particularly in connection with the tracking down of spies. As an actual member of the committee I was obviously an important personage whose every movement was in the public eye; now as an outwardly obscure agent I come and go in secret. I can lay plans. I can help and I can advise without arousing attention. Above all, I can remain the guiding head, prepared to use such fearless patriots as you are yourself, in the great cause which we all have at heart, the bringing to justice of a band of English spies, together with their elusive chief, the Scarlet Pimpernel."

"Well spoken, friend Chauvelin," Citizen Lauzet rejoined, with a tone of perplexity in his husky voice, "and, believe me, it was because I had a true inkling of what you've just said that, to my anxiety, I begged you to come and give me the benefit of your experience. Now, tell me," he went on eagerly, "how do you advise me to proceed?"

Chauvelin, before he replied to this direct question, had another drink of wine. Then he smacked his lips, set down his glass, and finally said with slow deliberation, "To begin with, my good Lauzet, try to bethink yourself of some family in your district whose position, shall we say, approaches most nearly to that of the ci-devant Tournon-d'Agenays before their arrest. That family should consist of at least one woman or, better still, one or two young children, or even an old man or an imbecile. Anything, in fact, to arouse specially that old-fashioned weakness which, for want of a better word, we will call sympathy.

"That kind of brood swarms in every district. All you have to do is to open your eyes. Anyway, having settled on a family, which will become our tool for the object we have in view, you will order a summary perquisition to be made by your gendarmerie in their house. You will cause the head of the family to be brought before you and you will interrogate him first, and detain him under suspicion. A second perquisition will then not come amiss; in fact, you will have it bruited all over the neighborhood that this particular family has been denounced as 'suspect' and that their arrest and subsequent trial in Paris, on a charge of treason, is only a matter of days. You understand?"

"I do," Lauzet replied, in a tone that sounded decidedly perplexed and unconvinced. "But—"

"There is no but about it," Chauvelin retorted brusquely. "You have asked my help and I give you my orders. All you have to do is to obey—and not to argue. Is that clear?"

"Quite, quite clear, my good friend," Lauzet hastened to assure him. "In fact, I already have some one in my mind."

"Which is all to the good," Chauvelin broke in curtly. "On the balance of your zeal your reward will presently be weighed. Now listen further to me. Having followed my instructions as to perquisitions and so on, you will arrange as sensational an arrest of this family as you can. The more it is talked about in the neighborhood the better for our purpose. You understand?"

"I do, I do," Lauzet said eagerly. "I see your whole scheme now. You want to induce the English spies to exert themselves on behalf of this family, so that—"

"Exactly! Therefore, the more sympathy you can evoke for them the better; a pretty girl, an invalid, a cripple; anything like that will rouse the so-called chivalry of those spies. Then, having effected your arrest, you arrange to convey the family to Paris,

"All You Have to Do Is to Open Your Eyes."

and do so, apparently under rather feeble escort, say, not more than four men.

"Not more than four men, remember," Chauvelin reiterated with slow emphasis, "as visible escort."

"I understand."

"Instead of the usual chaise for conveying your prisoners to Paris, you will use the local diligence and, having disposed of the prisoners inside the vehicle, you will have it further packed with half a dozen or more picked men from your local gendarmerie, armed with pistols; and you will take a leaf out of the Scarlet Pimpernel's own book, because that half dozen picked men will be disguised as other aristos in distress, women, cripples, old men, or what you will. You can then go even a little further in your trickery and arrange a breakdown for your diligence in the loneliest bit of road in the forest of Mestres, and choose the twilight for your mise-en-scene. Then—"

But Lauzet could no longer restrain his enthusiasm.

"Oh, then! I see it all!" he exclaimed eagerly. "The band of English spies will have been on the watch for the diligence. They will attack it, thinking that it is but feebly guarded. But this time we shall be ready for them and—"

But suddenly his enthusiasm failed. His round, fat face lost its glow of excitement and his small, round eyes stared in comic perplexity at his friend.

Lion in Bronze

At Braunschweig a lion in bronze surmounts a pillar near the market place. It dates from 1166. It is the Lion of Brunswick, a striking symbol of the strength and glory of a duchy which endured for centuries and was welded into the German empire by the mastery of Bismarck. Two modern statues stand in the streets of the old town, one of "Frederick Wilhelm the Kind," father of Wilhelm II, the other of the Iron chancellor, to whom more than to any other are due the strength and unity of the German nation.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Far From Perfect

"Why don't you call me a donkey and have done with it? You've hinted at it long enough," said the henpecked husband.

"It wouldn't be quite true," replied Mrs. Meek.

"I suppose not. I haven't ears long enough for that animal."

"Oh, yes, you have. You don't need longer ears."

"What do I need then?"

"Two more legs and a better voice."

FEATHER TRIM FOR FALL HATS; FORMAL LACE GOWNS POPULAR

A LITTLE feather now and then makes even the simplest hat take on an air of autumn chic. Just a mere glance at the early fall modes convinces us to the style-giving qualities of a bright bit of a feather.

According to advance millinery which they are sending over, Paris designers are displaying a genuine enthusiasm for feather trims. Sometimes there is just the required dash of color, plus that ever-coveted quality which we call "style."

Many of the summer's exotic straw hats have been foretelling the coming vogue for feather trims, in that they often flaunted cunning colorful motifs of pasted backle or pasted bird appliques or perhaps long ostrich flues worked into flat quills and various novelties.

Now the new autumn felts are taking up the cue and from the outlook a program of unique feather-trims is assured for the near future.

As heralds of the coming feather vogue, the hats grouped in the picture give a promising outlook. The model at the top has its fashionable off-the-face brim faced with pasted feathers, their cocoa-brown tones blended to the felt of the hat.

Below this, to left, a band of soft feathers is cleverly positioned in connection with a wide strapping of the felt. The feather motif is carefully matched in color, thus developing the entire hat in monotone, this being a hobby with the mode this season.

If not in one-color effect, then a dash of vivid hue is the aim of the designer, which theory is carried out in the large bakou hat to the right. The natural colored straw is enhanced with a tricolored ribbon band and two cunning bird motifs, the pasted feathers being in multicolors.

A striking illustration of the novelty note sounded in the new feather trims concludes this group. The wee bluish-gray feathers are fitted about the head like a toque. The straw hat is navy. The feathers also form a side trim.

In one of his fascinating books David Starr Jordan quotes an unnamed author as saying "the wise young man will wear out three dress suits a year." Well now, with this statement as a basis of reckoning, the question is if a man requires three formal suits per year, how many dine, dance and formal evening gowns should milady fair maintain during an equal period of time.

Be the answer as it may, this much is certain, in the collection a gown of lace must be given a position of prominence. To be up-to-the-minute in modishness it should accent a slim tailled silhouette and sponsor considerable length. If it has a train, so much more does it express chic.

The model in the lower picture answers admirably to these requirements. Not only is this a gown of sophisticated styling but the gold and yellow rayon lace of which it is made is the dernier cri. The separate scarf of matching lace and the train-like panel at one side are also two of fashion's newest notes.

This frock is a charming example of what designers are doing with lovely laces. Metal laces are particularly good, the newest types being exquisitely flimy and fine. Of regal beauty is a princess dress fashioned of thin-mesh black chantilly, many of which are entered on the style program for the coming social season. With sleeves or without, stylists are creating them, the former being wonderfully effective for smart dinner wear.

As a winsome exponent of the now so-enthusiastically accepted princess "lines" the gown illustrated qualifies with honors. An interesting thing about the much exploited fitted effects is that they are developed not only in satin, velvet, faille, moire, taffeta and other firm weaves, but they are notably interpreted in sheer fabrics and laces. The better styled flowery chiffons and those of monotone tint appearing on the late summer program, for the most part emphasize the fact of slim semi-fitted upper portions to which low flares of ingenius styling are cleverly attached.

The grace of these alluring types is subtly added thereunto, with flowing capelets on variously designed scarf necklines, or else one of the very new sequin-embroidered cape-collars impart a note of infinite charm.

Ensembles all of lace are an increasingly important theme with those who set the fashions. Those for evening and formal wear adopt silhouettes which lay stress on flowing sleeves and fantastic necklines. The newest thing is to make the frock in one tint and the coat of another, such as flesh color with a deeper pink or that which expresses the Paris mode—a black chantilly lace coat over a white lace gown.

Beautiful Formal Lace Gown.

DAIRY FACTS

FEEDING GRAIN TO DAIRY COWS

Feeder Will Supply Balanced Ration.

(By J. W. LINN, Extension Dairyman, Kansas State Agricultural College.)

Balanced rations are just as important to the dairy cow in summer as in winter. To maintain the balance and keep up the high production record, grain must be fed.

Grain feeding is always more expensive than roughage or pasture feeding in Kansas. If grain feeding is more expensive than roughage or pastures, there can be only one reason for its use, and that is to supply nutriment that the heavy producing cow cannot get from the roughage or pasture.

Profit from dairy cows is linked so closely with high production that it is impossible to separate them. In other words the cow producing 400 pounds of fat is making two and a half times as much profit as the one making 200 pounds of fat.

The wise feeder will feed a balanced ration and do so according to production. He will feed such as to have the same ratio between protein and carbohydrate—about one to six.

The grain ration that will usually be found most profitable is two parts of corn to one part of oats or bran. This will be true until the grass begins to dry up or grow short. It is important to again increase the protein part of the grain ration at which time the 4-2-1 ration which consists of four parts corn, two parts bran or ground oats, and one part cottonseed or linseed meal should be used.

The second important thing in profitable grain feeding is to use the grain according to production because the cow producing 50 pounds of milk will need about three times as much grain as the cow producing 20 pounds.

Production Best Guide for Feeding in Summer

It's the high producing cow that needs grain while she is on pasture, according to I. W. Rupel, of the animal husbandy staff at the Wisconsin State College of Agriculture.

Some have the idea that their cows do not require grain because they turn up their noses at it when they first go out on pasture. These men will find, according to Rupel, that as soon as the cattle have been on the new grass about a week, grain will keep them from slumping in production.

The proper way to determine how much grain to give during the summer, Rupel believes, is to feed according to production. A Holstein, producing over 30 pounds of milk per day, should receive grain at the rate of one pound for every four pounds of milk produced above 30 pounds. That is, a cow producing 50 pounds of milk should have five pounds of grain. Jerseys and Guernseys should have a little more grain than Holsteins, and when the pasture is poor, the grain ration should be increased.

Equal amounts of corn and oats make a good mixture for the summer grain ration. A little oil meal may be added to make the feed more palatable. Protein supplements are not usually necessary because sufficient protein is obtained from the average good pasture. When pastures become poor during the dry season, some protein feed is beneficial.

Dairy Facts

Heavy producing cows pay best.

To feed cows well is to feed them profitably.

In calf production, the influence of a good bull is of major importance.

Feeding dairy cows according to the amount of milk they produce is a profitable practice.

Milk can't be manufactured without salt and water. See to it, therefore, that the cow, the ewe, and the sow have plenty of both.

All kinds of young animals thrive best on green pastures. A green patch, enclosed with a temporary fence, often solves the grazing problem.

Creameries which buy whey cream should have no fear of ill effects from mixing it with the regular supply of cream, if the quality of the whey cream is equal to that of the regular supply.

To keep the average butterfat production on a steady increase, a herd owner must cull unprofitable cows.

Destroy all breeding places of flies by hauling away manure daily and preventing accumulation of any filth.

• • •

Since milk is one of the most easily contaminated foods, it is important that it be kept away from disagreeable odors and in a cool place. A brick or cement milkhouse furnishes the needed conditions in a most satisfactory manner.

Big Event At Indiana State Fair

The Horse Pulling Contest, which has been held at the Indiana State Fair for the past few years, is again one of the big features to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, September 3rd, 4th, and 6th, respectively, of this year, from nine until twelve in front of the grandstand. Admission to the grandstand is free on these mornings and it will give you a real thrill to pick out your team and see them pull. Last year, the above team broke the record and it was certainly a favorite of a big majority of people in the grandstand. This team weighed 2,390 lbs., exerting a tractive pull of 2,600 lbs., the world's record team for that weight.

Summer Fruits for Winter Use

Preserve in Summer so that Health may be Preserved During the Winter

(By Betty Barclay)

"Try a dish of home-made peaches, Alice. Mother put them up herself."

Such an invitation was quite common years ago, but rather rare today. Far too rare, as a matter of fact, to please thousands of Alice's and hundreds of thousands of Henry's and Fred's, with a "sweet tooth" just as highly developed as was the sweet tooth of a decade ago.

The old-fashioned pound for pound preserves were almost invariably looked upon as a dessert. Few, if any, realized that they were much more. As a matter of fact, a well-sweetened preserve, conserve, jam or jelly, is a jar or glass of winter fuel stored away for the use of our body engines during cold weather.

Realizing also that the fruit or berries are containers of valuable minerals, salts and vitamines, it is easy to appreciate the fact that a well-stocked preserve closet is a combination of a medicine chest, fuel storeroom and dessert closet.

We cannot all own fur coats for winter use, but we can supply internal body heat quickly through the medium of sugar, candy, sweetened preserves and such foods. Internal heat is much better than outside protection from cold as given by the fur coat and woolen sweater. Without internal heat, the costliest fur may leave us shivering. With sufficient internal heat, it may not be necessary.

So purchase summer fruits and berries when they are fully ripened and obtainable at moderate cost, and can, preserve, or pickle them in sugar, as you see fit. When winter comes you will have on hand, sufficient fuel to carry you over until the balmy breezes of Spring arrive.

Of course you may purchase much of the jam and jelly you use, but with a home-preserved supply on hand, you will eat it more often, and be prepared at any time for the company that always appreciates the peaches, plums or berries that mother cans herself.

The pound for pound recipe does not seem to be quite as common today as it once was, but the three parts sugar to four parts fruit recipe has taken its place with a vengance. Here are a few easily-followed recipes which you may use btween now and late Fall:

Plum Conserve

Wash and skin 5 pounds of blue Damson plums. Cut in small pieces and add 2 cups crushed pineapple. Measure, and add three-fourths the quantity of sugar. Cook slowly until it is a thick clear jam. Add juice 1 lemon and ¼ pound blanched almond meats. Cook 5 minutes longer. Seal.

Pear Preserve Ohio

Make a liberal supply of rich syrup, using three-fourths cup of sugar to each cup of water and boiling from three to five minutes.

Drop into it the pears, which have been pared and quartered, and a few pieces of stick cinnamon.

Bring to a boil, then reduce heat and allow to cook gently for from two to three hours, or until a dark, rich, red color. Then can and seal.

Blueberry Delight

Pick over, wash and stem the berries. Add three pounds sugar to each four pounds of berries and heat gently until the sugar dissolves and the juice is drawn from the berries. Cook rapidly until berries are plump and the syrup thick. Pack carefully in clean, hot jars and seal. Watch for leakages.

TIME AND TIDE

Well, we have the farm loan, farm aide—or whatever you want to call it—made into the law of the land—and here's hoping that it is half of what ist sponsors claim for it.

In our humble opinion nothing will take the place of the old law of "supply and demand" in stabalizing farm products.

Henry Ford's plants are capable of (and are) turning out 8,000 units per day. You may bet your last sou that because of the above fact that he will not continue to turn out 8,000 units daily after the demand for his popular car has fallen off.

That is about what the farm aide idea really means—to make a market for the farmer's crop wheether there is a demand for it or not.

Or otherwise—so that Iowa and Illinois can keep on raising nothing but corn; Kentucky and the Virginia states, nothing but tobacco; Calfornnia, raisins, etc., and so on down the line.

And to cap the climax, this farm aide will only be the means of opening the United States treasury to all kinds of subsidies.

If all the farmers in the United States were to plant only a half crop of everything they raise for two years they will be the dictators instead of the alurs-askers of the nation.

Summer Thirst Quenchers

(By Bettey Barclay)

It is a well known fact that the human body requires two or three quarts of liquid each day, but not so commonly known that many of the ills flesh is heir to may be laid to the fact that there has been a continued shortage of liquid in the diet.

Fasts of twenty or thirty days, so far as solid food is concerned, are fairly common. When liquid food, even plain water, is not obtained, however, it takes but a few days to cause death.

During hot weather, more liquid than usual is necessary—for perspiration draws heavily from the body's supply of moisture. By making much of this liquid a food, one can easily reduce the quantity of heavy, solid foods and thus give the digestive organs an opportunity for needed rest at a time when such rest is very desirable.

Sweetened beverages of any kind furnish the body with sugar—a highly concentrated source of human energy. If fresh fruit juices are present ,the thirsty one is assured also of a plentiful supply of minerals, salts and vitamines. With all of these constituents furnished, the evening meal on an extremely hot day may well consist largly of light, easily-digested foods—a soup, a wholemeal salad, and some sweet fruit dessert, for instance—and the diner finds himself in an ideal condition to combat the attack of heat with its threat of a sleepless night.

Many of the simplest summer beverages are far too often improperly prepared. Plain lemonade should have the sugar dissolved in the fruit juice before the water is added—something that is not always done, by any means. The juice of six lemons, six cups of water and one cup of sugar will make a delicious lemonade when the sugar is first dissolved in the lemon juice, the water added, and the beverage served immediately with a little cracked ice.

Iced tea may be a delicious or an insipid beverage—according to the recipe followed. Try this recipe some day and not the flavor:

Make an old-fashioned pot of tea and set it aside to cool. Two or three hours later, strain, and squeeze the juice of one lemon into the liquid. Stir in three tablespoons of sugar. Pour the whole into a larger dish, filled with pieces of ice. Serve as soon as thoroughly chilled—with lemon or orange slices on the rims of the glasses.

For a more elaborate, company thirst quencher, try the following recipe—the quantities being sufficent for sixteen liberal glasses.

Ginger Sorbet

½ pound candied ginger
2 quarts water
2 cups sugar
1 cup lemon juice
Juice of 4 oranges
Crushed ice or ice water

Chop the ginger fine, add it to the water and sugar and boil for fifteen minutes. Cool, and add water to make ten cups of liquid. Add the fruit juices and serve in glasses half filled with crushed ice, or diluted with ice water.

CULLS

Farming, like any other business, says the research department of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, is a continuous process of culling the good from the inferior. Good ideas must be separated from the bad ideas and good methods from poor methods. Other things being equal, the farming business which harbors the fewest culls should be most successful.

Because of changing conditions in agriculture, a type of animal, a crop variety or a method of farming which was the best available yesterday may be out of date tomorrow, and inferior to more recent types, varieties or methods. That which was sound and progressive a few years ago may be obsolete and unprofitable today because of the progress of agriculture.

The need for constant culling applies to every phase of farming. Despite the efforts and progress of dairymen, it is generally estimated that approximately one-third of the dary cows on farm today are unprofitable. Many farm poultry flocks are made up of a high percentage of culls. In 56 counties of one state, more than 115,000 unprofitable hens were culled and sold last year, saving the flock owners an estimated sum of $92,000 for feed alone. Something like 42,000,000 acres of oats are grown in the United States every year, although no one ever included oats in the list of paying crops, and such crops as barley and soy beans have been demonstrated as more profitable.

The feeling has grown more prevalent in recent years that inefficient methods and practices in farming are as wasteful and unprofitable as undesirable livestock or crops. A worn, out-of-date machine or piece of equipment is just as much a cull as a boarder cow. The poor cow can be replaced with a higher producer and the worn-out, inefficient machine can be replaced by equipment which does the work quicker, cheaper and better.

While this is true yet there must be a greater return for the efficient farmer in order to allow a disbursement that will give him a more modern equipment and at the same itme meet his obligations.

After seeing what some men have descended to, we cease to wonder what they have descended from.

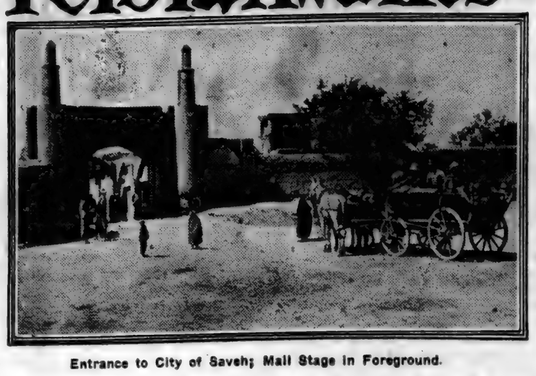
Persia Awakes



Entrance to City of Saveh; Mail Stage in Foreground.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

PERSIA, long practically railroadless, has laid down more than 200 scattered miles of rails since the World war, and is now constructing a real trunk line from the Persian gulf in the south to the Caspian sea in the north. Persia's awakening, in the matter of communications as well as in other senses, can be ascribed in large part to the World war. The higher price of silver that followed the conflict doubled Persia's capital, and the world sought her raw materials and so removed her from comparative isolation to a place of importance among commercial nations.

Persia is one of the oldest empires in existence. It has been a kingdom for 25 centuries—ever since Cyrus the Great, about 550 B. C., conquered Media and united that country to his under the name of Persia. It has had many glorious episodes in its long history; has produced the great teacher, Zoroaster; such world-famous poets as Firdawsi, Omar Khayyam, Saadi and Hafiz, and such great soldiers and rulers as Darius I, Shapur I and Shah Abbas.

Again and again the empire has been a prey to anarchy; again and again conquering hosts have swept through the country, Alexander the Great having many a successor, the most destructive conqueror being Genghis Khan with his hordes of savage Mongols—a leader who boasted that he had slain 30,000,000 of his fellow creatures!

The center of the country is a great plateau, rising from 2,000 to 6,000 feet, and crossed by frequent chains of mountains, while a lofty mountain barrier bounds it on the north and south.

In the whole Persian empire there were in 1910 only six miles of railway; a fact which casts the progress of the last few years into strong relief. There is only one navigable river, the Karun. It flows into the head of the Persian gulf, and on this sea the so-called ports are merely open roadsteads, at which cargo cannot be landed in stormy weather.

The merchandise of Persia is even largely carried on the backs of camels, mules and donkeys; a slow and expensive mode of transport, and the traveler usually rides through the country following the tracks made by the passage of caravans during the centuries.

Persians Are Handsome Aryans.

The Persian is of Aryan stock, and has the same words as ourselves for father, mother, brother and daughter (pidar, madar, bradar and dukhtar), and the construction of his language is like that of English.

He is a handsome, well-built man, with regular features and fine black eyes, his complexion being no darker than that of an Italian. In manner he is most courteous; he is quick, alert, fond of conversation and discussion, and has rightly been called the Frenchman of the East.

Persia is the home of many religions, beginning with the Zoroastrian now represented by the Parsees, and several sects of Christians down to Mohammedanism in its many divisions, Shiite Mohammedanism being the state religion of the country. The Shiites have their own traditions, the most marked being an inordinate respect for Ali, nephew and son-in-law of the Prophet and probably his first male convert. They believe that the angel Gabriel visited Mohammed on his last pilgrimage to Mecca and instructed him to proclaim Ali his successor.

So thoroughly are they convinced that the caliphate belongs to the house of Mohammed alone, that to the confession, "There is no God but God and Mohammed is His ambassador," they add, "and Ali is the viceregent of God." But Ali while on earth had some powerful enemies, chief among whom was Ayesha, the favorite wife of Mohammed and the only one of his harem who had never been married before, and they succeeded in putting him aside and choosing three caliphs before him. He finally succeeded in obtaining the caliphate, but was murdered in the mosque of Kufa after he had served only four years.

Fabulous are the stories which have grown up about his name. In fact, he is said to have out-Joshuaed Joshua in the following manner: One day while in Kufa he was so busy that he did not have time to say his prayers. Just as he finished his chores the sun disappeared behind the horizon, so he raised his hands toward the sky, made a sign, and the sun retracted its steps to the position it should occupy at the moment of prayer and waited while the great man offered up his petition.

Persian processions impress the stranger as fanatical. During their Month of Mourning—that in which the son of Ali was assassinated—they put on deep black, throw their shirts open at the chest, whether this lunar month is very hot or very cold, lacerate their bodies, and go unshaven and with bare feet through the streets. Using their swords they beat the tops of their heads until the blood streams over their faces and on to their garments. Large sums are paid by principal personages in the celebration for the blood-drenched robes.

Crude Theatrical Performances.

During that month the only theatrical performances of Persian take place. They are manifestations of Persian patriotism in which the Shiites show their hatred for other Mohammed sects, particularly for the Sunnites, and are somewhat like the early English miracle and morality plays. They are performed in the courtyards of the houses of the rich, the stage manager announces to the audience where the scene is laid, a suspended lion skin represents the desert, a silver bowl of water the Tigris, and the parts of the women are taken by boys or young men.

The crudity of the performances is amazing to the average American who is familiar with the elaborate settings of the modern moving-pictures. When the actors are supposed to be off the stage they merely sit down, and a "corpse" sits quietly on the stage dressed in a shirt, stuck through with arrows and smeared with blood, or in some similar outfit to indicate the manner of his death.

Many Persians have no home life in the usual sense of the word. A Persian house is divided into the biroonl, or men's apartments, and the anderoon, or part consecrated to the women. A strong door, set in a high blank wall, gives entrance to a narrow passage that leads into a square courtyard on which open several rooms. Here the men live, and here they usually entertain their men friends, while their women dwell in rooms set round an inner courtyard, the entrance to which is through the biroonl.

As a Persian is instructed from earliest youth that a woman's advice is of no account—in fact the priests tell him that he had better do the exact opposite of what a woman counsels—it can be understood that as a rule he has no exalted opinion of his wife or wives, and seldom turns to them for companionship.

When death approaches, if he has performed his daily prayers, kept the Fast of Ramazan, visited the mosque on Friday, and given alms to the poor, a Persian has no doubts as to his reception in the next world and dies in a happy confidence of attaining to the paradise promised by the Prophet to all his faithful followers.

Despite Persia's traditional conservatism in governmental affairs Teheran, its capital, is the city of kaleidoscopic contrasts. Visitors may enter through any one of its twelve beautiful gates, whose glazed tiles glisten in the sunlight, and find spread before them a dingy collection of mud houses rubbing elbows with palatial residences enclosing flower-filled gardens. A lumbering camel, seemingly just stepped out of a priceless old Persian rug, may draw aside to allow the passage of a high-powered motor car bearing a wealthy Persian en route to his villa on the outskirts of the city.

Rhages, Old Capital, in Ruins.

Teheran has not always been the capital of Persian. Rhages or Rei, its predecessor, the ruins of which are nearby, was a bustling city of one and a half millions in the Middle ages. As the birthplace of Harun al-Rashid, Caliph of Bagdad, the fifth and most renowned of the Abbassides, its name is forever linked with the "Arabian Nights." This city, also called Rhagae, was destroyed by Jenghis Khan and Timur.

Modern Teheran's position, 70 miles south of the Caspian sea, commanding the highways of the extensive upland plateau and the entrance to the Elburs Passes, has made it the center of a considerable caravan trade, though it does not rank high as an industrial city. Its population is roughly estimated at 300,000 in winter, but in summer this number diminishes one-third. For, although the district lies in the approximate latitude of Cape Hatteras, and nine months of the year bring it cool nights and sunshiny days, the three months of summer are uncomfortably hot and dry.

The palace of the shah is located in the "Ark," or former citadel, in the middle of the city. Here is the Salaam court, containing the large Takht-i-Khaneh, or Throne room.

MOTHER RABBIT FIGHTS SIX MEN FOR HER BABY

Yellowstone Traveler Tells of Cottontail's Gallant Grit.

Yellowstone Park, Wyo.—Yellowstone National park offers the season's best rabbit yarn—incredible, yet solemnly attested to by six good men and true.

Park Ranger Fred T. Johnston tells it:

"It was late in June. Six of us were traveling in and on top of a truckload of beds and supplies over a road evidently seldom used.

"During our journey we overtook a very young jack rabbit—in fact, one so young that it barely had its eyes open. He was exerting every effort, however, to scramble out of the rut he was in, but seeing that he was bound to fail we stopped to assist him.

"Our intentions were undoubtedly misunderstood, because as soon as he was picked up he squealed as only a scared rabbit can squeal, but he accomplished his purpose. It's hard to believe that a rabbit would attack six men, but by the word of the six who were attacked that's just what happened.

Leaps at Bunny's Captor.

"The young rabbit 'knew his squealing' and so did his mother, or at least we gave the rabbit that came galloping out of the brush the credit of being his mother. And galloping is the word to express her progress in our direction on the second squeal from her complaining offspring.

"She appeared from a distance of a hundred yards or so away and was standing in the center of a circular group we had formed before any of us could realize the truth of what we saw. I was truly thankful that I was not the one who was holding the infant rabbit. There she stood among the aforesaid six of us, eyeing every one with bulging eyes that meant only one thing—rage. She was poised on her hindlegs at the very feet of her infant's captor, apparently ready to spring at his face.

Young Rabbit Saves Day.

"Speech was impossible and how long we stood there dumfounded none of us attempted to say. I actually believe the young rabbit saved the situation because his squealing stopped with the appearance of his mother, and she finally hopped off a short distance and waited. This fact was not to be misunderstood, so the young rabbit was released immediately and left to the very capable and astonishing protection of his mother.

"To be attacked by a bear when molesting her young is natural, but a rabbit—well, even a bear seldom attacks six men."

Puts Up His Cork Leg to Pay Sweetie's Fine

Johnson City, Tenn.—Police Judge Barton is beginning to think that deal he made in court the other day was not such a good bargain.

Judge Barton has on hand one cork leg. He accepted it as security for a $25 fine imposed upon the girl friend of a one-legged man. The one-legged gentleman hadn't the $25, but he pulled off his leg and handed it to the court.

Judge Barton has not gone so far as to hope some policeman loses a leg, but otherwise he can't see how the commonwealth can get its $25 worth.

Honolulu.—Thirteen-year-old Solomon Kahoohalahala, of the Kalihi Boys' home is a lucky laugher. Faus made a more or less witty remark. The boy laughed, choked and coughed up the pin.

Woman Appeals to Court Against Voodoo

Lynchburg, Va.—Witchcraft and other mysteries which play on the minds of the superstitious are still vogue, according to evidence adduced in the Municipal court by a young colored woman. She claimed a colored man cut her hair and then told her that he had placed the hair under a tree and that the tree was dying and that she would be dead when the tree was dead. These statements frightened the girl and she rushed to court to break the effects of the voodoo. When the case came to trial she withdrew the charge, telling the judge that the hair had been taken from under the tree and inasmuch as the tree would not die her life was no longer in jeopardy.

BOY BLOWN TO SEA RESCUED AND FINED

Found Paddling Around With Seat as an Oar.

Hingham, Mass.—A strange tale of the sea was told in the Second District court by Arthur Bickford, fourteen, of East Boston.

He had been picked up, while being blown out to sea, by a boat which towed him into the Hingham harbor, where he was observed paddling about the bay in a row boat using one of the seats for a paddle.

The police were notified and Patrolman George Berry went to the Yacht club at Crow Point, where Bickford was found aboard the Foster Trainor yacht, Grey Goose, whose lookout had discerned him paddling about the bay.

Before Judge Edward B. Pratt, where he was arraigned on the charge of stealing a row boat, Bickford said the took the boat from the East Boston Yacht club and towed to Governor's island where he went ashore. Coming back to the boat he discovered that the oars were gone.

In his effort to get back to East Boston the tide carried him down the bay and far out to sea. All the time, he said, he tried to make headway by using a seat.

He stated far down the bay near a lighthouse a power boat came along and offered him a tow and when inside a point of land which he believed was Nantasket they cast him adrift. He then continued on paddling until sighted by the lookout on the Grey Goose.

He was fined $15 and allowed by the court to pay the amount in $2 weekly payments.

Too Poor to Buy Milk; Mother Burns Infant

Los Angeles.—Because she was "ashamed to face the milkman," to whom she owed a three-weeks' bill, Mrs. Josephine Valente, nineteen, burned her eight-month-old son, Dominick, to death in his go-cart, she confessed to the police. Mrs. Valente, held recently on a murder charge, declared her husband, Sabintino, twenty-one, refused to give her money for the baby's milk.

The young mother said she often tried to help by going to work, but could find no job.

"And I couldn't afford to put our boy in a nursery," she explained. "I knew the milkman would leave us no milk," Mrs. Valente related, "and I got to wondering what I would do. So I got a match and threw it into the baby's carriage after I put him to sleep in it."

Valente, employed by a motion picture studio, insisted he had given his wife $9 for groceries one morning. Detective Lieutenant Frank Condaffer said a $375 insurance policy on the baby's life was issued recently.

Budapest Suicides Continue to Mount

Budapest.—During the last 533 of the 1,901 persons who attempted suicide in Budapest succeeded. The majority in each case were women, the average ratio being 143 women to each 100 men. Each year since the war the number of persons who have tried to kill themselves here has been very high. Chief among the reasons for abnormal suicide rate is the impoverishment into which many well-to-do families have fallen.

Boy of 15 Dies in Fight After Being Called Sissy

New York.—Fifteen-year-old John Nolan of Paterson, N. Torvello and two boys who sided with him are held on open complaints pending the completion of the police investigation.

Seek to Reduce Cost of Honey

Losses and Gains Shown to Be Closely Related to Colony Yields.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beekeeping practices and management as well as the marketing of honey have been studied during the past year by the bureau of entomology and agricultural economics of the United States Department of Agriculture with a view to formulating methods that will help the beekeeper produce honey at a profit.

A preliminary report of the survey of apiary practices in the inter-mountain region—Utah, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho—covering the data secured in 1928 will soon be ready for distribution. A similar study will be started this year in the clover-honey-producing region and both studies will be continued until sufficient data have been obtained to warrant advice being given on practices and management in beekeeping as well as regarding honey houses and equipment that have been found to be efficient and profitable.

Beekeepers Keep Records.

Beekeepers co-operating with the department in these surveys keep daily records of labor and expenses, make invoices, and report on the management practiced under a variety of conditions. This information will be of interest to all beekeepers who desire to compare their management practices with those of other beekeepers.

Forty apiaries were included in the 1928 survey, ranging in size from 150 to 1,800 colonies, and covering a total of more than 24,000 colonies.

The results of this survey, according to E. L. Sechrist of the bureau of entomology and R. E. Kifer of the bureau of agricultural economics, show that the great variance in labor and investment costs, as well as the yield per colony, have a marked influence on the beekeeper's profits.

Co-Operation Necessary.

Such investigations cannot be carried out successfully without the active co-operation of the various state agricultural extension agencies, the bee press, beekeepers' organizations, and particularly the beekeepers themselves. All these have done excellent work in the past, and help given by them in personel contact has been of great value, the bureaus say.

The work undertaken in the clover region this fall will depend to a considerable degree on the assistance and co-operation of local beekeeping specialists and beekeeping organizations. Any organization able to assist in these surveys is invited to communicate with the division of bee culture investigations, bureau of entomology, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Paradichlorobenzene Is Useful to Control Pest

An effective method of controlling the plum tree borer that is also inexpensive has been developed by the zoology-entomology department of the South Dakota experiment station.

The new remedy is simple and its estimated cost is not in excess of 3 cents per tree, according to Prof. George I. Gilbertson, of the department. Ordinary paraffin is melted and paradichlorobenzine, or P. D. B., is added at the rate of one part to nine parts of paraffin. A thin coat of this solution—one pint to every four or five trees—is then brushed on the trunks and larger branches of the trees.

When it hardens, the paraffin-P. D. B. combination forms a protective coat which does not chip off in summer temperature and which allows the dissolved P. D. B. to vaporize slowly and enter the tissue of the borer and kill it. The fumigating action continues for several days until the larvae of the borer are dead.

This method is believed to be the first practical and effective control ever produced during two decades of research.

Prevent Horns Growing on Very Young Calves

To prevent horns from growing on young calves secure at a drug store a stick of caustic potash. When the calf is two or three days old and as soon as the buttons where the horn grows can be felt, clip the hair close to the skin just where the horn will grow.

Then wet the end of the stick of caustic potash and rub the button until it turns red but not until it bleeds. Do this with both horns and no horns will grow.

Be careful not to use too much of the caustic potash. If any of it runs off it will burn the hide. Also use paper in your hands so as not to burn your fingers.

Co-Operative Marketing of Different Products

Co-operative marketing of farm products is one way of increasing the farmer's bargaining ability. Co-operative marketing has been getting on a sounder basis in recent years, and farmers will probably find it an important way of safeguarding their interests in the future. The tendency in all business is toward concentration of bargaining power. Co-operation is the farmer's most effective way of accomplishing this end.

Titan Queen World's Largest Duroc-Jersey

Interesting Story of Growth of Colorado Sow.

How the world's largest sow, Titan Queen, registered Duroc-Jersey owned by the Colorado Agricultural college, was built up to her present phenomenal weight of 1,123 pounds in the past eight months is an interesting story as told by R. B. Broad, chief herdsman for the college, who has had personal charge of the task. The huge sow is also the largest Duroc-Jersey hog in the world.

Titan Queen was purchased at the International Live Stock exposition in Chicago last December by the Colorado school with the idea of building her to a record weight. She weighed 840 pounds at that time, the same weight she had registered at the national swine show in 1927, when she was the largest Duroc sow shown.

Mr. Broad began feeding the big sow on a mixture of 60 per cent corn, 25 per cent oats, 7½ per cent tankage, 5 per cent alfalfa meal and 2½ per cent linseed meal. Broad believes that the alfalfa meal which helped to complete the balancing of the ration was largely responsible for re-starting Titan Queen's growth, after she was brought to Colorado from Illinois, where she was raised.

This ration was continued until March 4, when it was changed to all the whole corn she could eat, and all the skim milk she could drink. In addition she had access to a mixture of five pounds of tankage, two and one half pounds of alfalfa meal, and two and one half pounds of linseed meal in a self-feeder until April 17, when she weighed 1,025 pounds.

Broad says that no special treatment was given the sow. She measures 9 feet 4 inches from the tip of her nose to the tip of her tail; 88 inches in circumference around the heart; 84 inches around the flank; 46 inches in height, and 10½ inches around the smallest part of her hind leg.

Combines Require Much Skill and Attention

Combines that have become so popular in the last few years require more skill and alert watching than do the old threshing machines, according to A. L. Young of the farm mechanics department, University of Illinois.

"Unless the operator is entirely familiar with the operation of the machine he should get the catalogue and directions and go over them carefully," says Mr. Young. The number of days of operation is an important factor in the cost of overhead operation. In order to make these as many as possible and to prevent the loss of any valuable time in the field it will be necessary to check over the entire machine so there will not be any delays and breakdowns in the harvest.

Cutting the grain too low should be guarded against as it will overload the machine and make repairs more necessary, Mr. Young warns. The operator should watch his machine for loose nuts and for places that show excessive wear. The machine should be oiled regularly rather than when there is nothing else to do.

Pastures Are Improved by Eradicating Weeds

Where more than one-fourth of the stand of vegetation in a pasture is comprised of weeds, it usually indicates that the land is either overgrazed, prematurely grazed, or a combination of the two. In planning to improve the pasture, consideration should be given to correcting the causes responsible for the weedy growth. On smooth pastures, most weeds may be successfully eradicated by mowing. If such a method is used, the weeds should be cut about the time they are in flower—before any seed is matured.

Agricultural Notes

Sentimental regard for a bull is always misplaced.

Try some of the newest sweet corn. It may be better than the older type you've grown.

Meal time with toads often begins before sunset and continues throughout a greater part of the night.

Millet can be put into cocks for curing where there is plenty of labor, time, and not too large an acreage.

Care should be taken that the sweet clover is not pastured too closely at the beginning of the pasturing season.

Volunteer wheat is one of the greatest sources of Hessian fly infestation to fall wheat. It is the only food available at the early emergence of the pest.

The ensilage cutter should be put in order. If there are any extra parts needed they should be ordered and fitted to the machine before the day of silo filling.

A machine that has recently been developed for conserving straw is a baler which takes the straw directly from the threshing machine and bales it without its having to be handled a second time.

LIBERAL FEEDING OF BROOD SOWS

Generous Rations While Nursing Pigs Profitable.

"Liberal feeding of brood sows while they are nursing their litters pays big dividends," declares B. W. Fairbanks, associate professor of animal husbandry at the Colorado Agricultural college.

"Excellent rations can be balanced with skim milk or buttermilk, bran, shorts, ground oats, wheat, barley, or corn," he adds. "A little leafy alfalfa hay builds up the quality of the proteins and supplies vitamine "A."

In discussing the weaning of pigs, Fairbanks says that "when the pigs are two to three weeks old they will drink from a trough in addition to their nursing. A shallow flat-bottomed trough placed in a pig creek is ideal for the feeding of additional milk.

"Fresh milk is generally fed the first day or two, and then skim milk is substituted. Middlings or shorts may be mixed with the skim milk and fed as a thin slop twice daily.

"When the pigs have learned to take freely of the shorts or middling slop, they are ready to wean, according to Fairbanks. This usually occurs when they are seven to ten weeks of age. If skim milk is not available it will be necessary to keep them on the sows longer.

"After weaning, a slop of shorts or middlings or corn meal is offered twice daily. At first the pigs should receive a ration with a liberal supply of protein, but this may be reduced slightly later."

Operations on Lambs Pay in Real Dollars

Docking and castrating will add materially to the receipts from the lamb crop. Either operation is simple and the risk negligible when performed on lambs at ten days to two weeks of age.

"Long-tailed lambs sell on the market for 25 cents to $3 a hundred less than docked lambs," says W. E. Morris, a live stock specialist with the agricultural extension service of the University of Minnesota. "Thin long-tailed lambs are classified on the market as cull feeder lambs and suffer the largest cut in price.

"Ram lambs sell for $1 to $3 per hundred less than wether lambs of the same quality. Fat ram lambs sell on the market at a cent a pound below fat wether lambs. Thin ram lambs are classified as culls and sold to the packers as such, at about $3 a hundred less than they would bring as feeders if they had been castrated."

Feeding Breeding Pig for Efficient Growth

Pigs retained for breeding purposes should not be fed and handled in the same way as those to be sent to market. Young breeding stock should be grown rather than fattened. Strong feet and legs and strong backs are more essential than fat in the development of gilts for brood sows. They should be fed only enough corn to keep them in a good thrifty condition. The rest of their feed should consist of shorts or oats with sufficient tankage or skim milk to balance the ration.

Figuring Horse Feeds at Cost of Production

Many farmers by figuring their horse feeds at cost of production find that they can keep a horse per year in very satisfactory manner at a feed cost of $50 to $60. To cover all costs of keeping a horse for a year including care, shelter and veterinary service, you would be entirely fair to the tractor side of the argument and reasonably fair to the horse by allowing a set charge of $100 per year as the total cost under farm conditions of keeping a good work horse.

Future Homes May Be Built of Paper Bricks

Already we have paper fire buckets and paper car wheels, and now it appears that we may yet live in paper houses.

A Serbian sculptor, Yovan Peshitch, has invented an economical building brick made of paper and seven other ingredients, kept secret by the discoverer. Fire and water-proof, the material is said to be undamaged by nailing and to be suitable for use in one-story and two-story buildings.

In its astonishing use for fire buckets, paper is coiled into rope and pressed into shape. A coating of bright-red paint completes the bucket. Car wheels are pressed from a kind of paper known as calendered rye-straw board under a terrific force of 500 tons.

Circular sheets are made into wheels by being smeared with flour paste and pressed together into solid blocks. Steel tires and iron hubs are added, and the finished wheel shows a rigidity more than sufficient for heavy railroad service.—Thrift Magazine.

Can't Talk With Mars

Radio communication with Mars is considered unlikely, in the opinion of E. O. Hurlburt of naval research laboratory, because of atmospheric conditions on the planet and because of certain limitations there, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The gist of the situation, as he sees it, is that the short waves which we might transmit to penetrate our atmosphere, if they did reach Mars, would probably find no receiver for them, since the Martians, if they have radio sets, very likely have gone in for those using long waves.

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

THE GAME OF TRUTH

(Florence Bascom Phillips)

"Mother, Virgil hit me"' cried my three-year-old daughter.

"I did not! She hurt her own self," emphatically declared my five-year-old son.

"He did hit me. He did," sobbed Evangeline.

"Why, I didn't either!" replied Virgil with still more emphasis.

Such episodes became problems befitting the wisdom of Solomon, and the persistence f a Philadelphia lawyer, rather than that of an ordinary, busy mother with four tots under school age, all demanding attention. But experience with an older foster-son had demonstrated the evils of growing out of a childhood habit of falsehood, so I determined to find a way to get these kindergarten children of mine to tell the truth. Therefore, I invented the "Game of Truth."

Placing a bottle, a pencil, a book, a ring, or similar artcles on the table, I shut my eyes and said:

"Virgil, put the pencil on the kitchen cabinet."

Both children had formed habits of obedience so this part was easy. Then I carefully explained how in this game we had to tell things exactly the way they really were, and placed a score card on the wall with each child's name written on it, promising a tiny gold star after the name of each one who successfully played the game. Then I questioned as follows:

"Virgil, who put the pencil on the cabinet?"

Upon a satisfactory, truthful, well expressed answer, I said:

"Evangeline, who put the pencil on the cabinet?"

At first, she echoed the words of her brother, which made her claim that she had put the pencil there.

Virgil then got a star after his name for telling the truth, and I played the game with Evangeline doing the acting. Each time I questioned both children as to who did whatever I had told them to do, explaining patiently that each one must tell things just exactly as they really were, until both children could tell the truth about these simple things. It was a game to them, one the most thrilling game we had played, and their delight knew no bounds when they began to see a row of gold stars after their names, for telling the truth.

Neither one has developed into a George Washington yet, but it has simplified the matter of getting their sories straight when they have a disagreement, for when I find one telling one thing and the other something else a reminder to "tell it just as it really is as we do in the Game of Truth" usually causes the child who is telling a falsehoood to speak truthfully about the matter, even to acknowledging having done wrong. It seems that when approached in this way, the child's mind grasps the larger thought of speaking the truth, in place of the more personal idea of possible punishment or reprimand for having done wrong.

The most frequent cause of lying appears to be fear of consequences if the truth is known. The next, seems to be the effort to create a condition which will merit praise. Keeping these two facts in mind helps me with my "little flock."

Don't grumble when folks lie about you. Suppose they knew the truth and—told it.

Gray hair may get you a seat in the crowded street car or a front seat at the band concert, but it also gets you nearer and nearer the call for the undertaker.

Over 900 Tons of Limestone Unloaded

Distributed Along Right-of-Way of Wabash Railroad in One Day

Over 90 tons of agricultural limestone was unloaded to twenty-one farmers from the Wabash limestone special which was run in the eastern part of DeKalb County Wednesday. Every part of the program from the time the special train arrived in Butler until the last car was unloaded for Frank Lyon and George Koeppe, went off in fine shape. Thirty-three farmers met the train with shovels of all descriptions and remained with it all day. Sixteen cars of finely ground limestone were distributed.

This is the first limestone special in northeastern Indiana that used the side dump equipment and gave the farmers an opportunity to unload on their farm at their nearest railroad crossing. This service will save a lot of long hauls and will also be cheaper than they can get limestone the regular way. The plan for the train was worked out by R J. Silkett, agricultural agent for the Wabash lines, K. E. Fling, Wabash agent at St. Joe, E. E. Stinson, county agricultural agent and Leo Poorman, limestone salesman from the France Stone Co.

The limestont special arrived at Artic at 7:00, left a car for Burl Moughler and one for Joe Wiley and R. W. Williams. When the special got to Butler it was in charge of Mr. High and Mr. Edwards, trainmasters from the Peru office. With two trainmasters and an assistant trainmaster on the job all day the farmers were given real service by the railroad company. At Butler three cars were set in on the team track for J. E. Maryman & Son and Cloyd Snyder, Lee Noragon, and one for Lester Casebeer and Harry Steele. The first car to unload with the side dump was for W. O. Mason at his farm crossing. It took the farmer crew only 26 minutes to unload this car and get it all cleaned up from along the rails.

Frank and Lester Snyder took a car and Clarence Cook a half car at the next crossing. Henry Emme got a car at the Mullett crossing. Clarence McClintock, Milo Provines, Homer Casebeer and Grant Keller got half cars at this same crossing. On the next crossing Frank Lyon and George Koeppe took a car between them. At the Auburn-Hicksville road crossing D. R. Kosht took a whole car and Carl Carpenter, Vernie Monroe and Frank Bowman took another car. Three cars were left at St. Joe, one for Guy Platter, half for Bob Nicholls, half for Frank Rhoades and Fred Ulm, and the other car for Harry Waltz and Fred Hart.

Orders for two more cars were received too late to be handled with this limestone special. If any care to get lime and did not get in on the limestone special their orders will be given personal attention and prompt shipment from the quarry will be assured. Late orders will be given station delivery as right-of-way delivery is special and has to be handled by groups. Movie pictures of t he limestone special were taken by Mr. Tilkert, manager of the Erie Stone Co. of Fort Wayne. As soon as they are developed they will be exhibited at several different places in the county.

PAYS FARMER TO ADVERTISE

Merchants and other business men are not the only ones who can profit by advertising, for the farmer comes in this class, too.

Our farmer friends can profit by the use of the classified advertising section in this paper, for nearly all seasons of the year they have something to sell or wish to buy something in the line of farm products, livestock, implements and the like.

One farmer friend who uses this paper with great regularity says that it saves him much time and trouble, for he thus manages to dispose of his products at his home.

Only recently a farmer called our attention that from a 90 cent ad in The News he had disposed of better than $800.00 worth of cattle. Not so bad at that, and yet some say it doesn't pay to advertise.

A few cents invested for a five-line classified or more in our liner column will produce great results. Phone or bring in your item.

Credlity receives its supreme test when the 45-year-old house-to-house canvasser for magazine subscriptions announces that he is working his way through Cornell or somewhere.

SEVERE AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR NEWVILLE

Saturday afteroon Oliver Keesbury, a former St. Joe resident, now living in Fort Wayne, enroute to Hicksville, had a very bad accident east of the U. B. Church near Newville. The dense clouds of dust is attributed as the cause of the collision with a car west bound on the Hicksville road. Both cars were damaged, the Keesbury car upsetting, the gas tank springing a leak which set the car on fire burning it up. Mrs. Keesbury was hurt some but not seriously.

A NEAR TRAGEDY

One of those near-tragedies, with a ludicrous aspect, occurred Tuesday of this week.

Some small boys conceived the idea of putting a cigarette stub down the small trousers of Marshall Pugsley. However, the boys missed their kick to their joke for all was well until Marshall arrived home. Here the seat of his pants commenced to blaze and only prompt efforts of an impromptu fire departmeent averted serious consequences.

Moral: If you must smoke cigarettes extinguish the fire before discarding.

LEARNED THE FATAL LESSON

Despite the columns and columns of warning stories and editorials that have appeared, some motorists still will try to beat a railroad train to a grade crossing.

This happened the other day as a driver in a near by state approached a crossing: A slow-moving freight tram was in sight, and the crossing alarm bell ringing; but the man felt he could easily get across before the train arrived. He stepped on it.

But the freight train concealed a fast-moving passenger train on the other track. The passenger train reached the crossing just as the automobile did. The automobile was soon a pile of junk, and the driver and wife are dead.

How long it will be before the last driver is educated to the point of a wholesome respect for grade crossings we do not know. It is amazing that any man would try to slip over a grade crossing when an approaching train is actually in sight, but yet they do try it.

MR. GEORGE WILSON STILL IN HOSPITAL

Just how seriously George Wilson was burned at the grist mill a week ago, no body seemed to know, and last Sunday the editor and wife called on him at the Souder hospital.

He reported the accident to us in about the following manner. He was attempting to start the engine at the mill following his dinner hour, and in priming with gasoline, some splashed on his shirt sleeve. The engine back fired or exploded setting fire to his shirt. Being unable to remove it he run for the yard and rolled in the grass. By this time his shirt was burned off and his right arm, chest and neck were badly burned.

About this time Fred High came by the mill, seeing what had happened, rushed him to Auburn, where he will be for some time.

He is able to sleep now, which is much in his favor, and we hope it will not be for so long until he will be able to return home.

He will start the operation of the mill as soon as he is home, having a man in mind who will come and look after the mechanical end.

Lesson for September 1

THE RETURN OF THE SECOND GROUP OF EXILES TO JERUSALEM

GOLDEN TEXT—The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him.

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 7:1-8:36.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Care on a Journey.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Care on a Journey.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Prayer Helps.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Prayer and Providence.

I. The Leader—Ezra (7:1-10).

1. Who he was (vv. 1-6).

(1) A priest (vv. 1-5). He was from the line which was to stand between God and the people, a descendant of Seraiah, the chief priest who had a lineage back to Aaron. The leader of the first company was Zerubbabel, a sort of military governor. The great need now was for a religious leader, for the people had gone far from God.

(2) A ready scribe (v. 6).

He was a teacher of the law of God. A scribe's training began at thirteen years, but he did not enter upon his official duties till thirty years of age, giving him seventeen years of training.

2. His high ambition (vv. 7-10).

(1) He set his heart to seek the law of the Lord (v. 10). He definitely set out with the purpose to know God's word. No one who purposes in his heart to seek the law of the Lord can fail.

(2) He set his heart to obey the Lord (v. 10).

He was not only concerned with knowing God's word, but obeying it. God's word cannot be known in its fullness by the intellect; it must be experienced.

(3) He set his heart to teach in Israel God's statutes and judgments (v. 10). He not only had a love for God's word, but a desire to implant it in the hearts of others.

II. Ezra's Commission (7:11-26).

Artaxerxes, the king, gave him a copy of the decree, authorizing him to lead a company back to Jerusalem. This decree empowered him:

1. To collect funds (vv. 15, 16).

2. To levy tribute (vv. 21, 22).

3. To appoint magistrates and judges (v. 25).

4. To execute penalties (v. 26).

For this great favor Ezra lifted his heart to God in thanksgiving (vv. 27, 28).

III. The Company Which Returned (8:1-20).

The company was comparatively small—only seventeen hundred and fifty-four males, but including women, children and servants there were perhaps six or seven thousand people.

IV. Ezra's Prayer and Fasting (8:21-23).

The first thing that Ezra did was to seek God's guidance. All Christians, as well as leaders of the people, should seek divine guidance and help in every new undertaking. No success can be realized without His help and blessing. The reason Ezra sought the Lord's help was that as far as possible he desired his mission to be free from human dependence. He did not minimize the dangers attending his journey, but since he had assured the king that the hand of the Lord would be upon all for good who sought Him, he was now ashamed to ask the king for a military escort to protect them from the marauding Arabs. His desire was to prove to the king the reality of God's helps for God's honor among the heathen was at stake. This was a real test of faith, but God was faithful.

V. The Successful Journey (8:24-32).

God heard their prayer. The treasure entrusted to them was great. Perhaps the entire value of money and sacred utensils was about five million dollars. For a small caravan carrying such an amount of money to go through a country infested by robber bands was most perilous, but Ezra knew that God was able and would protect them. Observe:

1. Care and honesty (vv. 24-30).

The money was weighed unto them at the start and was to be weighed when turned over to the authorities at Jerusalem. The incentive to honesty and strict accounting of the trust was that they were holy men and were entrusted with that which was holy because it belonged to God. Most exacting care should be exercised in handling the Lord's money.

2. Their safe arrival (vv. 31, 32).

Some four and one-half months were required to make the journey. God brought them safely to their destination, thus proving that He is faithful to those who put their trust in Him.

God's Answer Not Always Yes

A little girl had been invited to a picnic party. Being a devout little girl, she prayed for fine weather and a happy time. But on the morning of the day the skies were gray and rain fell heavily. Instead of roaming in the fields she stood looking out on a drenched landscape. "You prayed for fine weather, dearie," said her mother, "and God hasn't answered your prayer, has He?" "Oh, yes. He has, mother," came the apt reply, "and He has said 'No.'"

WHEN FRESH CORN IS COOKED RIGHT

If Boiled Too Long It Becomes Tasteless.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In cooking fresh corn on the cob surround it with a generous quantity of boiling water in order to lower the temperature of the water as little as possible when the corn is put in. Be careful not to cook sweet corn too long or it is likely to be tough and tasteless. The sooner corn on the cob is cooked after picking, the finer the flavor. While corn on the cob is almost always boiled it can also be roasted or steamed. Sometimes when corn is steamed at a clam bake one layer of the green husk is put back on the cob after the silk has been removed.

Succotash, a mixture of green corn and beans, usually lima beans, is a dish borrowed, name and all, from the American Indians, by our early colonists. The following recipe for making it is supplied by the bureau of home economics:

1 pint lima beans	½ cup cream or rich milk
6 ears corn	2 tbs. butter

Simmer the beans in a small quantity of lightly salted water until tender. In the meantime cook the corn on the cob in salted water for ten or twelve minutes, then cut from the cob. In cutting the corn use a sharp knife to trim off the tops of the kernels and then scrape out the pulp with the back of the knife. Mix the corn with the drained cooked beans, add the cream or milk and the butter, heat to the boiling point, and add more salt if necessary.

Corn with tomatoes is another mixture which many persons like and which is commonly served. Other good ways of using fresh corn after it has been boiled on the cob and the kernels have been cut off are as scalloped corn, corn fritters, in corn custard or pudding, in soup, chowder, souffle, or stuffed green peppers. Recipes for making any of these dishes may be obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture by writing for Farmers' Bulletin 1236-F.

Pineapple Sherbet Is Very Delicious Drink

In the very warm weather a fruit sherbet is often more appealing than a richer dessert. Lemon is used with most other fruit juices to bring out the flavor and add a cooling acidity, as in this recipe for sherbet made from fresh pineapple. The use of a beaten egg white is customary in sherbets to give a smooth texture and make the mixture seem less cold on the tongue than a plain water ice. The directions are from the bureau of home economics.

1 large fresh pineapple	4 tbs. lemon juice
Sugar	White of 1 egg, well beaten
¼ tsp. salt

Select a well-ripened pineapple, remove skin, eyes and core. Grind the fruit in a food chopper, using the fine knife, and take care to place a bowl underneath to catch the juice. Press the juice from the pulp and add to the juice in the bowl. To each measure of pulp add an equal measure of sugar and heat. When the sugar has dissolved press the mixture through a colander to take out the tougher fibers. Combine the juice and pulp. Add the salt and lemon juice and sufficient water to make 1 quart, and more sugar if desired.

Use a freezing mixture of 1 part salt and 4 to 6 parts of ice. Turn the crank of the freezer slowly and when partially frozen remove the dasher and stir the beaten white of egg into the mixture. Pack the freezer with more ice and salt and let the sherbet stand for 2 or 3 hours to ripen in flavor.

These proportions make about 1½ quarts of sherbet when frozen.

BIBS THAT CHILD CAN MANAGE ALONE

One of Most Necessary Articles for Youngsters.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Everything a little child wears may be made to play a part in its development if thought is given to the way the garment will be used and what the child itself will have to do to manage it without adult assistance.

Being interested in children's clothing from the standpoint of self-help in dressing as well as in practicability and simplicity of design and attractive appearance, the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has scrutinized a good many commonly used children's garments and found them lacking in some important feature.

One of the humblest, smallest, and yet most universally necessary articles is the bib worn at every meal from the time the first solid food is fed from a spoon. Attention has been given rather to protection of the clothing than to ease of manipulation, so that even a child of three or four is usually obliged to ask some one else to tie the strings of his bib at the back of his neck. Bibs of rubber and other water-proof fabrics are widely sold, and while these have the merit of preventing damage to the garments they are not comfortable.

Clothing specialists of the bureau have several suggestions to make about the fabric used in bibs and its attractiveness to the child, and they recommend improved styles of bibs which train the child in self-help. Ratine and Japanese cotton crepe are favored because they are soft and semi-absorbent, easily washed and require no ironing. These materials prevent the food which the child spills from dropping to the floor, and can be used as napkins. Children love pretty colors, and interest can be added to the wearing of the bibs by making them of different colors bound with white or of white bound with color. One successful bib developed by the bureau is of white ratine, bound with bias tape in color. This binding is extended at the neck line into 18-inch strings which are put through eyelets on opposite sides of the neck and then fastened to small brass or bone rings. The bib has no right or wrong side, and the child has only to get both strings over his head and pull on the rings as in the illustration, and the bib is adjusted snugly around the neck. If the strings are thrown back over his shoulders they form a lock which holds the bib securely in place throughout the meal. To get it off, the child takes hold of it at each side of the neck and pulls it out and down. Even a two-year-old may be taught to manage this bib without help.

Anyone can easily cut a pattern for this bib. The United States bureau of home economics in Washington will furnish a diagram if needed, but it does not have patterns of this or any other garments for sale.

STUFFED TOMATOES ARE MOST APPETIZING

Most Appetizing Vegetable for Serving Stuffed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the most successful and appetizing vegetables for serving stuffed is the tomato. Large, unblemished tomatoes should be chosen, firm enough to hold their shape when cooked. After they have been washed remove a thin slice from the stem. Carefully scoop out the pulp so that the tomato shell will not be broken. This pulp is added to the stuffing. Here is the entire recipe, tested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture:

Stuffed Tomatoes.

6 large firm tomatoes	¼ tsp. celery seed
1 cup diced salt pork	½ tsp. salt
1 cup dry bread crumbs	⅛ tsp. pepper
	½ cup buttered crumbs
3 tbs. chopped parsley	1 tbs. onion pulp

Fry the salt pork until crisp and remove it from the pan. Add the parsley and onion to the fat and cook for two or three minutes, then add the cup of dry bread crumbs, the salt, celery seed, and cooked salt pork, and stir until well mixed. After preparing the tomatoes for stuffing, mix the pulp with the seasoned bread crumbs and salt pork and add more salt if necessary. Fill the tomato cups with the mixture and cover the top with the buttered crumbs. Put the stuffed tomatoes in a pan in a moderate oven and cook until the tomatoes are tender and the crumbs are brown. Serve from the dish in which cooked.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By The Baroness Orczy

WNU Service
Copyright Baroness Orczy

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. The Scarlet Pimpernel is really Sir Percy Blakeney, popular London dandy. The failure of Lauzet, revolutionary chief of the section in which the Scarlet Pimpernel has been operating, to prevent the escape of the Tournon-d' Agenays, brings the condemnation of the government upon him.

"But suppose," he murmured, "they think better of it and allow the diligence to proceed in peace. Or suppose that they are engaged in their nefarious deeds in some other department of France."

"Then," Chauvelin rejoined coolly, "all you'd have to do would be to continue your journey to Paris and set your family down in the Conciergerie, ready to await trial and the inevitable guillotine. No harm will have been done. There'll be a family of traitors less in your district anyway, and you must begin the setting of your comedy all over again. Sooner or later, if you set your trap in the way I have outlined for you, that cursed Scarlet Pimpernel will fall into it. Sooner or later," he reiterated emphatically, "I am sure of it. My only regret is that I didn't think of this plan before now. However, there's nothing lost, and all I can do now, my friend, is to wish you success. If you succeed you are a made man. And you will succeed." Chauvelin concluded, rising and holding out his hand to his colleague, "if you follow my instructions to the last letter."

"You may be sure I'll do that," Lauzet said with earnest emphasis.

And the two sleuth hounds shook hands on their project and drank a glass of wine to its success. But before Chauvelin finally took leave of his friend he turned to him with renewed earnestness and solemnity.

"And, above all, my good Lauzet," he said slowly, "remember that in all this your watchword must be 'Silence and discretion.' Breathe but a word of your intentions to a living soul and you are bound to fail. The English spies have their spies, who serve them well. They have a long purse which will alternatively purchase help from their friends and treachery from ours. Breathe not of your project to any living soul, friend Lauzet, or your head will pay the price of your indiscretion."

Lauzet was only too ready to give the required promise, and the two friends then parted on a note of mutual confidence and esteem.

CHAPTER III

Enmeshed

A fortnight later the whole of the little city of Moisson was in a ferment owing to the arrest of one of its most respected tradesmen. Citizen Deseze, who, anyone would have thought, was absolutely above suspicion, had been put to the indignity of a summary perquisition in his house. He had protested—as was only natural under the circumstances—and in consequence of this moderate protest he had been dragged before the chief of section at Mantes and had to submit to a most rigorous and most humiliating interrogatory. Nay more! He was detained for two whole days, while his invalid wife and pretty little daughter were well-nigh distraught with anxiety.

Then, on the top of that, there followed another perquisition; just as if anyone could suspect the Deseze family of treason against their country. They certainly had never been hotly in favor of the extreme measures taken by the revolutionary government—such as the execution of the erstwhile king and of Marie Antoinette, ci devant queen of France—but Citizen Deseze had always abstained from politics. He had been wont to say that God, not men, ruled the destinies of countries, and that no doubt what was happening these days in France occurred by the will of God, or they could never occur at all. He for his part was content to sell good vintage wines from Macon or Nuits, just as his father had done before him, and his grandfather before that, for the house of Deseze, wine merchants of Moisson, in the department of Seine et Oise, had been established for three generations and more, and had always been a pattern of commercial integrity and lofty patriotism.

And now these perquisitions! these detentions! and finally the arrest, not only of good Citizen Deseze himself but of his invalid wife and pretty little daughter. If one dared, one would protest, call a meeting, anything. It was almost unbelievable, so unexpected was it. What had the Deseze family done? No one knew. Inquiries at the commissariat of the section elicited no information. There were vague rumors that the poor invalid citizeness had always remained pious. She had been taught piety by her parents, no doubt, and had been brought up in a convent school besides. But what would you? Piety was reckoned a sin these days, and who would dare protest?

The servants at the substantial house inhabited by the Deseze family were speechless with tears. The perquisitions, and then the arrest, had come as a thunderbolt. And now they were all under orders to quit the house, for it would be shut up and ultimately sold for the benefit of the state. Oh, these were terrible times!

The same tragedy had occurred not far away from Moisson in the case of the Tournon-d'Agenays, whom no one was allowed to call comte and comtesse these days. They, too, had been summarily arrested, and were being dragged to Paris for their trial when, by some unforeseen miracle, they had been rescued and conveyed in safety to England. No one knew how, nor who the gallant rescuers were; but rumors were rife and some were wild. The superstitious believed in direct divine interference, though they dared not say this openly; but in their hearts they prayed that God might interfere in the same way on behalf of good Citizen Deseze and his family.

Poor Hector Deseze himself had not much hope on that score. He was a pious man, it is true, but his piety consisted in resignation to the will of God. Nor would he have cared much if God had only chosen to strike at him; it was the fate of his invalid wife that wrung his heart, and the future of his young daughter that terrified him. He had known the citizen commissary practically all his life. Lauzet was not a bad man, really. Perhaps he had got his head rather turned through his rapid accession from his original situation as packer in the Deseze house of business, with a bed underneath the counter in the back shop, to that of chief of section in the rural division of the department of Seine et Oise, with an official residence in Mantes, a highly important post, considering its proximity to Paris. But all the same, Lauzet was not a bad man, and must have kept some gratitude in his heart for all the kindness shown to him by the Deseze family when he was a lad in their employ.

But in spite of every appeal Lauzet remained stony hearted.

"If I did anything for you, citizen, on my own responsibility," he said to Deseze during the course of an interrogatory, "I should not only lose my position but probably my head into the bargain. I have no ill will toward you, but I am not prepared to take such a risk on your behalf."

"But my poor wife," Deseze protested, putting his pride in his pocket and stooping to appeal to the man who had once been a menial in his pay. "She is almost bedridden now and has not long to live. Could you not exercise some benevolent authority for her sake?"

Lauzet shook his head. "Impossible," he said decisively.

"And my daughter," moaned the distracted father, "my little Madeleine is not yet thirteen. What will be her fate? My God, Lauzet! Have you no bowels of compassion? Have not you got a daughter of your own?"

"I have," Lauzet retorted curtly, "and therefore I have taken special care to keep on the right side of the government and never to express an opinion on anything that is done for the good of the state. And I should advise you, Citizen Deseze, to do likewise, so that you may earn for yourself and your family some measure of mercy for your transgressions."

And with this grandiloquent phrase Lauzet indicated that the interview was now at an end. He also ordered the prisoner to be taken back to Moisson, and there to be kept in the cells until the following day, when arrangements would be complete for conveying the Deseze family under escort to Paris.

"Cracked Gasoline"

When crude oil is subjected to ordinary distillation by fire the light products distill off up to a temperature of 572 degrees Fahrenheit. Above this temperature the hydrocarbons undergo partial decomposition, with the result that some light products are produced. This is cracking and the light products are cracked gasoline. It is suitable for cleaning when properly treated to remove objectionable color and other constituents.

Meanest Man Takes Tots' Milk Tickets

Lynchburg, Va.—Nurses in the tuberculosis division of the municipal department of public welfare have a candidate for the honor of being the meanest man living, though they have not disclosed his name as yet.

The man saved up milk tickets furnished him for two children suffering from tuberculosis until he had the equivalent of $9.20, and took the tickets to the creamery and requested the cash. He got it and bought a railroad ticket to go out of town.

RADIO MURDERER GETS FOUR YEARS

Slays Stepson in Dispute Over Late Concert.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—With four years' imprisonment facing him, Robert W. Wiseman, Watertown, S. D., referred to as the "radio slayer," has been lodged in the state penitentiary here under sentence from the State Circuit court at Watertown. He was found guilty of slaying his stepson following a dispute over the playing of the radio in the Wiseman home at a late hour at night.

Wiseman, who evidenced little concern when sentence was passed upon him, entered the penitentiary with little show of emotion, according to Warden George T. Jameson.

In addition to serving the four years for second-degree manslaughter, Wiseman was also fined $1,000 and will have to serve 500 additional days in the penitentiary if the fine is not paid.

Wiseman was sleeping on the night of the slaying of his stepson, Gerald E. Ellis, when young Ellis and a party of young men and women went to the Wiseman home and turned on the radio. This aroused Wiseman from his sleep, and he appeared in the room and ordered that the radio be turned off. When his stepson refused to comply with this demand Wiseman procured a shotgun and ordered him from the house.

Wiseman had taken his stand in the entryway to the front door, and near the front door the overcoat and hat of the stepson had been placed upon a chair. It is thought that when young Ellis started toward the front door his plan was to obtain his overcoat and hat and leave the house.

He had to go directly toward Wiseman, who had the shotgun leveled at him and the slayer claimed he thought his stepson was coming toward him to attack him, and fired the shot which killed the young man.

Live in Same House 30 Years Without Speaking

Little Rock, Ark.—Two sisters sit in identical chairs on a prim front porch facing a busy highway near here, separated by a high board wall and a silence of 30 years. Two front gates stand side by side in the white-washed fence. Two front doors give entrance to the house. Between them, dividing into exact halves the front yard, front porch, the house itself, and 20 acres of ground on which it stands, runs the mysterious wall.

On one side sits Miss Sarah Mercer, a wrinkled old lady with proud black eyes, rocking the long years away. On the other side sits her younger sister, Miss Rachel, a slight and careworn figure, whose eyes speak of tragedy but whose lips are forever sealed to curious passersby. For three decades no word has been exchanged across the dividing line.

Two sisters and the man who could love but one, are the actors in the Mercer melodrama, and the man long ago disappeared. He was the sweetheart of Sarah, in the eyes of the persons in the community, but Rachel loved him as well.

Thirty years ago a storm raged in the old house, and then the lover was sent away and the two sisters were left to nurse their pride alone—one with only her memories for comfort and the other to endure the stigma of ostracism and to rear as best she could in a conventional community her baby son, the son of her sister's fiance.

Buck Deer Wrecks Auto by Leaping on Radiator

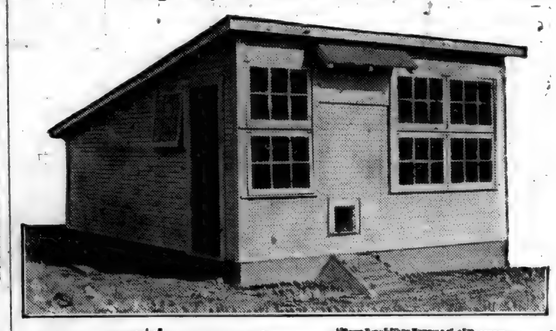
Cable, Wis.—A car driven by Henry Crandall carrying an orchestra to an engagement was wrecked by a buck deer near Seeley, Wis. The deer sprang from the bank at the roadside, striking the top of the radiator. The animal wrecked the front fenders and headlights, ripped the hood open, and hung there until the car was stopped. The deer's leg was broken and he was injured badly otherwise. An old-time hunter cut the deer's throat and left the carcass for the game warden.

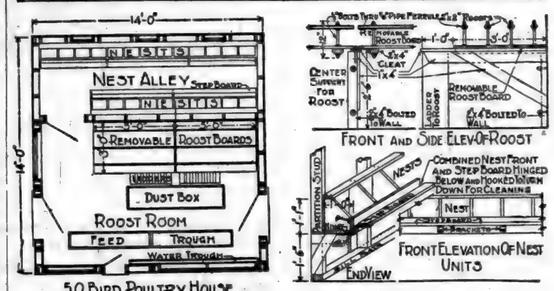
Swallow Fails to Heed Golfers 'Fore' and Dies

Trenton, Ont.—W. E. McClung, playing in a threesome, while driving from No. 4 tee at the local course made a perfect drive. A swallow, flying low, failed to heed his "Fore!" and the ball struck it in mid-air. The ball continued on its course and alighted 75 yards from its starting point.

The swallow was picked up in three separate pieces.

Poultry Pays Good Profits if Properly Housed and Cared For





50 Bird Poultry House

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

As a plain matter of fact, poultry keeping is not so popular on the farm as it should be. The average farmer is fascinated and mesmerized by the big returns to be obtained from the raising of hogs and cattle, and forgets the much heavier expense and the greater length of time it takes to get returns from an investment in cattle or hogs than it does in poultry. He forgets that the labor and time involved in raising poultry are much lighter than in cattle, and that he can turn his money over on poultry, whereas he is satisfied with a percentage profit on other live stock.

In the majority of cases, poultry raising on the farm is left to the women and children, who are often expected to pay part of the grocery bills and buy clothing out of the proceeds from this source of revenue. The fact that the housewife has to pay out all the money she takes in on them generally lessens her interest in the flock.

The average farmer has never had any eggs in the winter time from his hens. Hence, he usually neglects them when they need his attention most, and when he has most time to tend to them, so that when spring comes the chickens are poor, infested with lice and mites, low in vitality, and they are late in starting to lay, and soon want to set after they do start laying. He allows them to lay on the ground or under the barn, or anywhere else the hen decides. Thus, many eggs are never gathered at all and soon rot under some vine or in some fence corner.

Then, too, the average farmer has only scrub stock, which is slow in development and low in productivity. This is the case on many farms where all the other stock is well cared for. The poultry, being a very small item, are very apt to be sadly neglected. Were the farmer to buy good stock in chickens he would be agreeably surprised at the very substantial profits he would find can be derived from this hitherto neglected branch of his farm investment.

There is no excuse for a modern farmer not having a good stock of poultry and a good house for them, for it costs less to get a good start in reliable breeds of poultry stock and to fix suitable places for them, than it does in any other branch of the live stock industry. Then, with a little care and attention, they will repay their worth many times over.

This poultry house is 14 feet by 14 feet in size. It is built in the usual way, by using 2 by 4 inch studding, with building paper and clapboards outside, and matched ceiling inside. The idea of placing the windows high up is to let the sunshine into the back part of the house during the winter and the early weeks of spring, when sunshine is greatly appreciated by the poultry. The house is well ventilated by muslin-covered openings under the low roof in front. This is the natural way to ventilate a poultry house, the air entering under the low roof, and circulating back of the roosts.

All the inside paraphernalia of a poultry house should be easily removable. The nest boxes, dropping board, roosts, feed hoppers, dust boxes, drinking fountains—all should be installed in such a way as to be easily and quickly detached, so that they may be carried out into the sunshine for cleaning and fumigating.

The dropping board is made to fit the space at the back of the building under the slope of the roof. The nests are supported on standards set onto the dropping board.

Bathroom Fashions Set for World by U. S.

Bathroom fashions are being set for the entire world by the United States, according to a survey appearing in Woman's Home Companion.

"It is quite possible," says Hazel Rawson Cades, author of the article, "that down the centuries we shall be known as the people who glorified bathrooms. There have been other periods, notably the Roman, when bathing was popular and elaborate, but our immediate ancestors regarded it mostly as a private, necessary and uncomfortable performance. That anybody should entertain the suggestion that a bathroom be photographed and shown in a public print would have been considered as indecorous as airing the bed clothes out of Queen Victoria's windows.

"The plumber, once absorbed by problems of drainage, now turns his grave attention to becoming colors in bathtubs. Mural painters are recruited to decorate the walls with ships and fishes and animals. Architects specialize in bathroom plans. The bathroom, from the standpoint of looks and use, rivals any room in the house. And bathing threatens to encroach upon all other diversions.

"Running salt water and fresh. Dissolving bath crystals in splendid rotation of jasmine, lavender, pine needles and rose-geranium. Leaping backward and forward on nonslip mats. Adjusting back cushions that fasten on with suction cups. Reading 'Water Babies' in a nonsplashable cover, propped up on a rack that also is held to the tub by suction cups. Submerging sponge elephants and sailing celluloid boats. I can, seriously, imagine being so enthralled by the entertainments of the modern bathroom as to forget all social obligations and simply bathe away my days.

"I'd hate to think there still exists anybody who can be stony-hearted about the soaps and salts, oils and powders that lend such sweet temporal pleasure to the bath."

Fireplace Must Have Color to Be Real Joy

Has the fireplace been the joy you expected it to be? Or has it proved to be an alien feature which you cannot bring into relation with your furnishings?

If the fireplace is built of rough, variegated red brick it is apt to seem unrelated to the more delicate fixtures of your furnishings. Often these brick fireplaces have small, inadequate light-colored tile hearths.

Such a hearth does not give sufficient color or size to act as a base for the fireplace. The brick front seems to hang upon the wall without having any relation to the floor below. The brickwork should have an adequate base upon which to stand.

If you possess such a fireplace you may change its appearance a great deal by the use of a small rug. To correlate the color and texture of the bricks with the decorative scheme of the rooms you must introduce that rough texture and color in some other furnishing.

A small rug of various shades of red, woven with a long nap, will prove the desired connection, and placed in front of the hearth it will give weight to the area before the fireplace and thus the appearance of a more substantial base.

The color of the bricks will not end at the base of the wall, but will spread out onto the rug upon the floor. There are many small oriental rugs with the desired color and texture. The pleasure and feeling of "rightness" derived from such a rug will compensate for its cost.

Color of Woodwork

In any decorative scheme don't forget to consider the color of the woodwork.

When the wood used for window-and-door trim is oak, cypress, maple or birch, or any wood with a beautiful grain, a waterproof varnish will give luster and bring out the grain.

ILLUMINATED MOVIE PROGRAMS

It took the English to solve the last proble in movie going. Programs have heretofore been unreadable in the darkness of movie houses, but London reports that the problem has been solved by a new paper and ink now under practical trial. The letters are white and printed on a black background so the program looks much the same as a photographic negative.

The white ink, however, contains a trace of a radio-active element which makes the letters luminous on the black background even in the darkest room. Another chemical is used in the ink which shines in the dark when acted on by rays emitted by the radio-active element.

No doubt the same principle will soon appear in American theatres.

, The specialists are doing some great work in their line, but thank heaven none of them are trying to find a substitute for the old sweat gland.

Mrs. Manda Beams very pleasantly entertained the members of the C. C. Cluub at her home on Friday afternoon.

The Epworth League social, given on the Methodist Church lawn, Saturday evening, was well attended. A nice sum was realized.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Wolf were week-end guests in the William Reed home. Miss Ida Reed and nephew, Dickie Reed, returned home with them for a visit at South Bend.

Many from this place attended the Steward family reunion at Eckhart Park, Auburn, on Sunday. There were 68 present. The new officers elected are: President, Ernest Steward; vice president, George Steward, Fort Wayne; secretary-treasurer, Miss Ida Reed.

Those attending the Gloyd reunion held at the Otis Gloyd home near Robinson Chapel, on Sunday were: Mrs. Emila Gloyd, R. U. Bowser and family, Janice Wade, C. L. Whitacre, James Reed and wife. There were 108 members of the family present. The new officers are: President, I. C. Bowser, Fort Wayne; secretary, Mrs. Maggie Dennis, Richmond; assistant secretary, Mrs. James Reed; treasurer, R. U. Bowser. The next meeting will be held at the Harold Bowser home near Fort Wayne.

The Spencer Township Home Bureau members were guests of Prof. and Mrs. A. J. Smith of Waterloo. Mrs. Smith was a former member of the Spencerville Club. At noon a bountiful dinner was served, which was enjoyed very much. Mrs. Claudia Hafner, president of the club, presided att the afternoon meeting. A splendid program of songs was given. The roll call was a round table discussion of house hold hints. This proved to be a very interesting session. The club decided to have the G. E. Bursley Co. demonstration at the next meeting at which time the election of officers for the coming year will be held. This will be held at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Hart, the second Wednesday in September. All members are requested to be present.

THIS FLIVVERIZED WORLD

A new production record for Model A Ford cars was reached by the Ford Motor Company a few minutes before 5 o'clock, Wednesday afternoon, July 24th, when Engine No. 2,000,000 came off the assembly line at the Rough plant of the Company in Dearborn. The engine was taken to the car assembly line and assembled in a convertible cabriolet.

The second million Model A Ford cars were produced in the period of five months and twenty days. The first Model A was assembled on October 20, 1927, and the first million was reached on February 4, this year.

Early production of the Model T Ford cars, predecessor of the present car, forms striking contrast with the efficiency of modern mass production. The first Model T was built on October 1, 1908. It was seven years later, December 10, 1915, before the first million had been attained, and eighteen months later, June 14, 1917, before the second million was produced.

THIS WEEK'S PUZZLE PULLER

The Question:

What is the difference between an old flirt, a young one, a bug and a worm?

(Answer at bottom of column.)

EPITAPH TO ONE JOHN DOE

Here lies the body of one John Doe,
Who sold me a car not so long ago,
He said she'd easily do sixty-five,
But on this one subject John certainly lied.
He said I'd get thirty on a gallon of gas;
But never, no never, did this come to pass;
The tires would last me for years and years,
And I'd never need oil on the timing gears.
The paint was guaranteed to last right through;
The bearings, clutch and the brakes were too;
In fact I was never to have fear nor doubt
That the car would run and never wear out.
In a month of two, O my, alass—
Not a single promise came to pass;
So I got old John by the neck one day
And pulled his tongue out all the way.
I rapped him a punch and back he fell,
As his soul left his body and went to dwell—
In a place that is different from this, by ging—
And it's not in the place where angels sing.

Pat was hired in a lumber office. The proprietor was a young man, and he decided to have some fun with the new hand, so Pat was left in charge of the office, with instructions to take all orders which might come in. Going to a nearby store, the proprietor called up the office:

"Hello! Is this the East Side Lumber company?"

"Yis, sorr."

"This is Jim Yantis, on Route Six. Send me un 1,000 knot holes."

"What's that?"

"This is Jim Yantis. Send me over one thousand knot holes."

"Well, now, an' ain't that a pity! We've all out of 'em. Sold all we had to the brewery."

"To the brewery? What do they want with them?"

"They use 'em for bungholes in barrels."

Seeing Cyprus

Women Do Heavy Work in Cyprus.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

CYPRUS, lying almost at the northeast corner of the Mediterranean sea, once famed for the copper which bears its name, was an island stepping-stone and exchange center for ancient civilizations.

The traveler, if he takes the barren ride from the port of Larnaka to the capital, Nicosia, through a chalky wilderness, is likely to jump to the conclusion that Cyprus is drab and wholly uninteresting. But half-oriental Cyprus veils her charms, modestly masking her beauty in remote mountain valleys and along the northern shore, where no steamer stops except for carob beans, destined as provender for Spanish cavalry horses.

The best way to reach Cyprus is to steam from Beirut into the sunset glow, and dock at dawn in Famagusta harbor, beside Othello's Tower, where the dark-skinned Moor, inflamed by Iago, smothered his Desdemona.

Once Famagusta, rich and wicked, had a church or chapel for every day in the year. It is a graveyard of old churches now—some sunk in ruin, one or two still used to house the glittering panoply of worship, one changed into a mosque, starkly simple as a prison cell but with a Meccaward mihrab pointing the soul to paradise.

The walls of Famagusta are massive and high, with moats cut from the native rock on which the bastions rise; and with gun platforms, or cavaliers, overlooking them from within. At the Land Gate there was an almost unique ravelin, or outworks, which was useless and at another corner the masterly Martinengo bastion, which was merely futile.

Looking northward one sees the site of Salamis, six miles away. When Paul and Barnabas landed in Cyprus, Salamis was a Roman capital. Little by little its various forums and market place are being rescued from the drifting sands and viper-infested brush. Salamis enthusiasts would gladly use its Byzantine name, Constantia, for it is disconcerting, while trying to hang a splendid past onto a lot of sadly fallen columns to have visitors exclaim that they have always wanted to see the site of the battle of Salamis, which occurred 600 miles away!

Great Treeless Plain.

From Salamis westward to the American copper-ore docks at Karavostasi there stretches the great "treeless plain" of the Mesaoria, with, however, a miniature forest at Syncrasi and orchards surrounding many of the villages.

At places, as around Lefkoniko, this plain is rich with waving grain or dotted with golden threshing floors, where the driver sits in an easy chair atop the ox-drawn threshing sledge. Elsewhere rock strata, tiptilted toward the sky, discourage agriculture, but rare is the view in which some leaden-footed animal is not dragging a plow.

Along the north run the Kyrenia mountains, which one labels mere hills until he has climbed to Buffavento castle or to St. Hilarion and looked down with awe on plain and sea. Strung out in a well-defined and craggy ridge, they guard the pleasant northern slope from the central plain. Strong sea winds, sweeping south, blow the trees lopsided toward the hills.

South of the Mesaoria are massed the mountains that culminate in Troodos, the Cypriote Olympus. Cutting the northern face of that mass are neighborly valleys traversed by shrunken streams—the most charming bits of the whole island.

North of Salamis one of the prominent perches is occupied by Kantara castle—the Hundred Chambers.

The men of Cyprus have a distinctive costume—a straw hat with a mushroom brim, a plain shirt sometimes with a jacket, voluminous Turkish trousers whose seats are tucked into their belts for cross-country walking, and heavy leather boots with their tops turned down and tied above the calf.

The women do little to keep alive the Aphrodite tradition. One of their sex says of them: "They are rarely pretty or even good-looking, being heavy of feature and clumsy of form, and their voices are harsh and shrill. But how could any woman be beautiful who works from sunrise till dark for a few piasters a day?"

Kyrenia a Resort Place.

In spring the prize resort of Cyprus is Kyrenia. Almost overhanging the town, St. Hilarion, castle of Eros, clings to a crude crag.

Beyond the horseshoe harbor, miniature of Corsican Bastia's, there is the golden mass of Kyrenia castle, dwarfing the white and opal town, set on a green slope between gray mountains and blue sea. Across the waters to the north the snowy heights of the Cilician Taurus hang like clouds.

People come to Kyrenia to see the castles, the monastery, and the pleasant slopes planted with grain and dotted with olive and carob trees. They remain until the castles are old stories, the Phoenician rock-cuttings have lost their first mysterious challenge, and the harbor has become a mere incident.

The climb to St. Hilarion begins through green grain fields, passes under dusty olive and shiny, heaven-sent carob trees, whose sweetish, dark brown pods the prodigal son would fain have eaten, zigzags toward a rusty cliff, tops the pass behind, and comes to the plain from which rises the rock pedestal for this romantic ruin.

But when one has scrambled among the evergreens whose roots are splitting medieval battlements apart, the romantic castle, high and inaccessible, has disappeared, and there are only some decrepit walls, forgotten by the Titans who tossed them there.

Bella Paise Abbey, a mere picnic jaunt from Kyrenia, is the finest ruin in Cyprus. The cloisters, from whose graceful archways vandals have torn away stone traceries, are still beautiful. The refectory, with its swallow-nest wall-pulpit, from which lectors once droned to eating monks, is almost intact. The abbey stands in a pleasant hillside town, bowered in fruit trees.

Lovely Views From Bella Paise.

The best view is from a hill to the northwest. To the left there is the gently sloping plain, verdant with crops, and dotted with trees, with a jade strip of sea making lace on brown rocks, undecided as to whether to ally itself to the deep blue of the sea or to the varied greens of the countryside. Where the slope becomes steeper, there is an idyllic village, with milk-white minarets spearing up through the dark foliage.

To the right the gray mountain overhangs steep slopes up which the village has pushed its lemon and orange trees, its mulberries and gardens. The lower bulwark of the town, impressive in its way as the mountain itself, is this massive gold-brown ruin, whose retaining wall rises like a precipice of handworked stone above the fertile fields.

America owes its incomparable collections of Cypriote art to Cesnola, who lived at a time when an American consul could defy the Turks and boast of outwitting them. His book makes spicy reading in these days. In the widespread site of Lambousa, to the west of Kyrenia, another famous treasure was found, smuggled out of the island and sold by an Armenian to the late J. Pierpont Morgan for a sum that still makes Cypriote mouths water. For treasures found, one-third of the intrinsic value goes to the finder, one-third to the owner of the land, and a third to the government.

Amid the debris of Lambousa rises a monolithic chapel of obscure origin. Said by natives to be a Venus temple, a hole in the floor is explained as the tomb of a priest of Aphrodite. A stone's throw away is the Akhiropietos monastery, "made without hands," "dropped full grown from heaven."

Tiptilted Lapithos owes its green freshness to a perennial stream which emerges from a barred cavern in the mountain side. In Lapithos the current price of huge, juicy lemons is 450 for a shilling. The juice is expressed, bottled without sugar, and kept for a year or two without fermenting. It makes a most refreshing drink, but, at 18 for a cent, lemons are hardly worth picking and the ground is often covered with decaying fruit.

A NEW LINE OF THOUGHT

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

THE Spencer high school had been out now for more than a month. The summer vacation was passing and Margaret and Angeline Carter, who taught in the school, were longing for something, anything, to happen so long as it brought a change. The first week or two after school closed the two young women had been busy in doing a belated house cleaning in their small, white house. When the cleaning was finally done to their entire satisfaction they turned their attention to their clothes, and when their wardrobe was in apple-pie order they made calls and caught up with their reading. And now when they had done everything they had planned there seemed nothing further for them to do but sit with folded hands and wait for vacation to end and the school year to begin. Though, dear knows, the Carter girls were tired to death of teaching. In fact, they were tired of home and a wee bit tired of each other, and for the past week they had discussed the idea of selling or renting their house and boarding for the coming year.

"I think," said Margaret seriously one day when a morning of idleness had irritated her frayed nerves more than usual, "that I shall go to see Cora Blaine and see if she will let me board with her this winter."

"Well, of course you can do as you like," answered Angeline, "but for my part I wouldn't think of boarding with Cora Blaine, not with that snip of a daughter of hers in the house."

The discussion was waxing hot when the postman brought a special delivery. Angeline tore open the letter and read it.

"It's from Cousin Fanny Pringle," she announced as soon as the man had gone. "She is coming to make us a visit. She is planning a continental tour and she is seeking a congenial companion for herself and a comfortable, safe place where she can leave Darling while she is gone—Darling—who do you suppose Darling can be, Margaret? I never heard her mention her before, did you?"

"Never," said Margaret. "But read on, Angeline, maybe she will explain."

"I shall room at the hotel while I am in Spencer," Mrs. Pringle wrote. "But I shall expect to take my meals with you girls, as the hotel fare doesn't agree with Darling. I will arrive some time before noon on Tuesday and I wish you to have an extra fine sirloin steak, well done and cooked without either salt or pepper. I trust you will select the steak very carefully, for Darling is most finicky about her food. She is having a twist with her stomach and that is one reason why I am getting her out of the city for a few days, hoping the change will do her good. In her present condition of health I am uneasy about leaving her for my trip abroad and I shall not go unless I can find an understanding person to leave her with." There was not a great lot more to the letter and nothing that explained the mysterious Darling.

Tuesday! Why, there would be only tomorrow in which to put the house in order and do the extra baking for their guests! The Carter girls were all excitement and with so much to think about and so many things to attend to they forgot for a time their differences and were as busy as bees.

Tuesday morning dawned clear and bright. Margaret and Angeline were up at five o'clock putting the last touches to their immaculate house and planning the final details of the dinner. Everything must be perfect, for Cousin Fanny was very wealthy and fussy, and then of course there was the mysterious Darling. No one could guess what she would be like. Probably some one out of the ordinary, for Cousin Fanny was always getting infatuated with unusual people. And then of course there was the trip abroad, and it all depended upon which of the Carter girls Cousin Fanny took a notion to. A trip abroad with all expenses paid was a prize worth working and fighting for if necessary. And Margaret and Angeline each secretly meant to do her best to win her way into the good graces of Cousin Fanny.

As the hands of the old-fashioned clock in the hall moved slowly toward the noon hour, excitement ran high. The table was set for five with all the best linen and silver, the dinner was cooking and the extra sirloin steak was pounded to a shred and ready to be put over the coals at a moment's notice.

The coffee had just begun to percolate when Margaret, who had gone for the dozenth time to the front of the house, announced in a low tone: "They've come!" She ran to open the door.

Angeline, who was in the kitchen, slipped the steak over the coals, tore off her kitchen apron, smoothed her hair with her hands and arrived in the front hall just as Margaret opened the door in answer to an imperative peal of the doorbell. On the steps stood Cousin Fanny. She was a stout old lady, elaborately dressed. Behind her stood the chauffeur, and in his arms he held a small, silky black dog. The dog had such a funny, wrinkled old-looking face that Angeline had to stifle a desire to shriek as the diminutive little creature peered at her from under a huge red satin bow.

"Well, here we are," announced Mrs. Pringle. "Parker," she commanded the chauffeur, "set Darling down, and then you may go." Then, turning to the waiting girls, she said: "I hope dinner is ready. Darling is used to having her meals on time and she doesn't like to be kept waiting. Let's eat as soon as I can get my things off. We can talk later while Darling is having her nap. She likes to go to sleep just as soon as she is through eating."

While Margaret was helping Mrs. Pringle remove her wraps Angeline hurried back to the kitchen and a few moments later they were all seated at the table. Darling had a chair close beside his mistress, because, as Mrs. Pringle explained, her food had to be cut up just so. The girls winced when they saw the little dog eating off the delicate china that had been put on the table for the expected guest. It was a long and tedious process coaxing Darling to eat, but after a while she was stuffed to her mistress' satisfaction and was carefully lifted down from the chair and laid to rest on a fat silk pillow on the davenport, where it was cool and quiet. When the little dog's snores satisfied Cousin Fannie that her pet was sleeping she herself settled cozily back in her chair and announced that she herself felt like taking forty winks after her dinner and journey. This left the Carters free to retire to the kitchen and do up the dinner work.

It was a good thing that Mrs. Pringle and Darling were tired and their naps were prolonged, for never before had it taken the Carter girls so long to do a mess of dishes. They did not talk much, for fear of disturbing the sleepers, but words under the circumstances were unnecessary. They would look at each other and go off into perfect spasms of laughter. They laughed until they cried.

"Can we hold out for a whole week, Angeline?" Margaret asked in a whisper.

"I don't know," Angeline answered. "But whether we do or not, I can see where the experience is going to do us a world of good, can't you?"

"Which do you prefer, Angeline—a trip abroad with Cousin Fannie as a companion or staying at home to keep Darling comfortable?" Margaret asked.

"Neither," Angeline answered, with finality in her voice. "I only want you, my home and my job when vacation ends. What about you, sister?"

"You have expressed my sentiments exactly. What fools we were getting to be to want to break up our dear home. And, Angeline, do you remember those lines. 'The more I see of men the better I like dogs?'"

Angeline nodded and they began to laugh again, and anyone who heard them would realize that nothing—nothing could ever spoil their companionship again.

Audience Before Him Sways Public Speaker

Public speaking may be an art, but it certainly is a necessary evil. It must be evil because almost everybody deplores it. It must be necessary because there is so much of it. Why it is necessary we do not know, James Warnack declares, in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Speaker and audience are about equally responsible for their mutual boredom. Speaker and audience both are self-hypnotized. In reality, they are practically one, the speaker standing in the same relation to his audience that a man's voice stands to its owner and operator. The public speaker usually is merely the mouthpiece of his audience, saying the things his hearers like and want to say, but which he can say better for them.

Much as a man, when speaking, puts himself into his voice, so an audience, when listening, throws itself into the mind, heart and voice of the speaker. Speaking may be caused by thought, but the act of speaking is an emotional operation, an emotion and act which gather force with continued and uninterrupted exercise. This law is exemplified in both public speaking and private conversation. Excitement increases with repeated vibrations of the vocal cords.

The public speaker should be forgiven almost anything he says from the platform because when he speaks he is about nine-tenths of his audience and about one-tenth himself. He also should be forgiven if, later, he denies what he said or that he said it, because then he is about nine-tenths himself and one-tenth his public.

In either or both cases he should be forgiven but not trusted too far because in the public address he is the more or less unconscious mouthpiece of massed thoughts and emotions, while later he is merely an ego reacting from the influence of a mob. For let it not be forgotten that almost any audience is a mob in embryo. That the embryo seldom matures is due to the inherent dread of the fusion of individualities and the confusion of each individual.

Language Somewhat Mixed

The Portuguese language is a Romance language resembling the Spanish and paralleling it rather closely in grammar. The Portuguese vocabulary shows a considerable borrowing from the French. According to the latest estimates there seem to be 11 vowel sounds and some 26 consonantal sounds. One of the most marked features of Portuguese as compared with other Romance languages is the loss of the intervocalic "l" and "n"; thus "quaes" represents the Latin "qualis" and "peson" the Latin "persona." An interesting phenomenon of Portuguese is the appearance of a personal or inflected infinitive, which makes possible a very succinct construction comparable to the Latin accusative and infinitive.

HATS OF CROCHETED ANGORA; NOVELTY SLEEVES PROMISED

THE idea of angora headgear is fairly taking the younger smart set by storm. If it is not a beret crocheted of angora then it is a skull cap of the same or a toque draped of angora scarfing.

In the beginning of the vogue most of the hats and caps were of white angora, but with the approach of autumn, colorful angora is becoming a recurrent theme. Furthermore the angora craze is not being confined to the realm of hats, but many ingenious neckpieces are fashioned to accompany them.

While the millinery departments are most of them carrying angora hats and sets, and many "readymades" are available, the woman who crochets is intrigued with the idea of making her own. The really handsome and genuine angora novelties cost a "pretty penny," and it is well worth one's time and effort to make one's own.

Two Nifty Angora Hats.

So insistent is the call of the mode for a touch of angora somewhere about one's frock or coat, often crochet borderings or edgings are used in a trimming way. It is easy to acquire the angora touch by crocheting in simplest fashion an edge about this or that coat or cape, which is just what some women are doing—"dolling up" their white woolen coats with a few angora stitches—gives quite a midseason and early fall aspect to one's costume.

Top the angora-edged wrap with a tight-fitting hat of crochet angora and a narrow scarf of the same and "chic" is the word for this midseason ensemble.

Young girls and children are wearing cunning angora berets not only in white but in bright red, green or modish yellow or vivid blue. Often these are allied with nobby flannel coats in perfectly matching color.

Not only are the tightfitting hats of angora in the limelight, but some very clever brimmed models are noted. Most every fancywork department is now making it a point to give instructions "how to make" any style angora crochet hat one may wish. So why delay—simply a few balls of angora wool, a crochet needle, a brief time in following directions, and presto! the dream of a modish hat—plus a scarf if you so desire—becomes a reality.

We may be ignoring sleeves so far as our frocks are concerned, but when it comes to the new fall coats and jackets, that's another story—one in which unusual sleeves is the dominant theme.

Even now we are seeing this reaction to designful sleeves in that the jackets which complement midseason ensembles create a sense of "coming events" in regard to new sleeve silhouettes. If you are interested in modish sleeves, meet Mary Philbin (in lower picture) who, being one of Hollywood's shining stars, knows how to dress. Because of her knowledge of fashions she chooses this pretty navy and yellow printed crepe sports frock, the button-trimmed flowing sleeves of which are one of its outstanding style details.

By the way, if you are casting about for a timely midsummer costume, one to bridge over between now and when cool days arrive, choose a dark print crepe. Those in the fashionable browns patterned with yellow or pumpkin or tangerine shade are just as autumn-like as fancy can picture. Wear a yellow felt hat with it, possibly a matching yellow blouse to complete the symphony in fall colorings.

Continuing with a survey of sleeve prospects, it's really surprising the extremes to which some of them are going. Some of the more formal wraps of velvet or fine cloth have deep flounces dropping from the elbows, while one-piece frocks adopt sleeves which flare a wide circular-cut ruffle. Others have the sleeve and flare cut all in one piece.

The idea of novelty is further accented in applied ornamentation such as embroidered or appliqued patterings, which give to the sleeve a new interpretation.

Perhaps the most marked departure in the way of sleeve treatments registers in the advance fur trimmed coats. Especially does the positioning of fur interpret elaborated themes. One striking model of a modernistic patterned woolen weave has its sleeves cut slightly belled. There is a pointed upturned caracul cuff finishing in a diagonal line at the top. Several inches above another band of the fur runs parallel to this diagonal, giving an intriguing swirling effect to the sleeve entire.

For sheer frocks designers are creating sleeves which repeat the pointed and flared flounces which fashion the skirts.

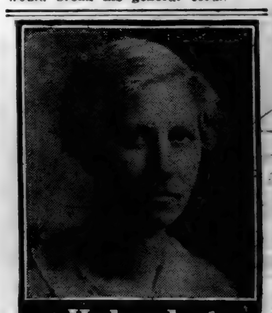
Would Ruin Him

Two young prospective aviators were discussing the subject of aviation, and a certain famous flyer, when the smaller, age eight, remarked to the other:

"What if the tail of the plane would get caught as he started up; it would cut a gash in his head, wouldn't it?"

His brother answered: "Yes, it would just mash him down and break his back."

And the little fellow said: "Yes, it would break his general cord."



Helped at Change of Life

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine at the Change of Life. I would get blue spells and just walk the floor. I was nervous, could not sleep at night, and was not able to do my work. I know if it had not been for your medicine I would have been in bed most of this time and had a big doctor's bill. If women would only take your medicine they would be better."—Mrs. Anna Weaver, R. F. D. No. 2, Rose Hill, Iowa.

Variety of Corn With Hard Husks

Specimen Found in Experimental Plots With Ear Tightly Enclosed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A variety of corn with husks that fit tightly over the ears like finger stalls would be a boon to corn growers everywhere because of the protection afforded against corn ear worms, black weevils, and corn ear smut.

A single specimen of such a husk-protected ear was recently reported by C. H. Kyle, of the United States Department of Agriculture. He found it among the corn plants in his experimental plots where he is attempting to develop a corn that will have ears tightly inclosed in husks for protection against ear smut. Ordinarily, the husk covering of an ear of corn is made up of a number of overlapping leaves, each of which only partially encircles the ear. The unusual specimen found by Mr. Kyle had a single leaf completely encircling the ear.

Husk Protection.

While it is not likely that such a perfect husk will ever be a fixed characteristic in any corn, Mr. Kyle says this specimen indicates the possibilities of producing a high degree of husk protection through crossing self-fertilized lines selected for husk protection. Husk protection is dependent upon the length, thickness, tightness, and texture of the husks.

Some progress has already been made in this direction. Mr. Kyle has crossed seven "selfed" lines which he had selected for their factors in husk protection. Three crosses having the best average husk protection produced only 10, 11, and 43 exposed or "unprotected" ears per 1,000, respectively.

Free From Smut.

Of the 13,159 ears grown from all of the crosses, 9,979 were in the husk-protected class, and none were smutted. On the other hand, 228, or 7.2 per cent, of the 3,180 ears in the exposed class were smutted. The crosses with the best husk protection—those crossed with line G—produced approximately one-eighth as many smutted ears as the crosses with the poorest husk protection, the C crosses.

Other scientists in the department, G. N. Collins and J. H. Kempton, have shown that corn ear-worm damage is reduced when the tips of the ear are covered with the husks, and Kyle has shown in other experiments that husks that tightly inclose the ears protect them from rice or "black" weevils.

Ventilated Crates Are Fine for Apple Storage

Apples are best stored in ventilated crates. Crates stack better in storage space than either baskets or barrels and fruit cools quicker in crates than in the other containers and for other reasons keeps better. Then, too, it is usually desirable to grade and condition the fruit just before it is put on the market and crates can be handled and emptied for resorting more conveniently than the other containers.

Cellars vary considerably in their adaptability to storage of apples. Some are fairly satisfactory while others are poor. Cellars with furnace heat in them are quite satisfactory for storing fruit. Usually the chief fault with cellars for storing fruit is that they cannot be properly ventilated and when a considerable quantity of fruit is taken in it is difficult to get the fruit quickly cooled. Then, too, it must be kept in mind that ground heat is 50 degrees Fahrenheit and this is 18 or 20 degrees higher than the best temperature for keeping apples in storage. In the early fall when days and nights are warm this temperature may be an advantage but later in the season it is difficult to keep the ordinary cellar cool enough for proper storage of apples.

Ground Speltz Fed to Live Stock or Poultry

Speltz is a grain that is nearer to barley in its chemical composition than to any other of the farm grains. It is, in fact, quite similar to barley in composition and, of course, not so different from oats and corn. Its principal difference from oats is that it does not contain so much outside hull or fiber and it differs from corn in that it does contain more fiber than corn.

Speltz is a very hard grain and should be ground moderately fine before it is fed to live stock or poultry. If it can be ground rather fine, it can be used as a part of the grain feed to replace barley, corn or oats in a ration and will give about the same results as if the barley, corn or oats were being fed.

Efficient Production by Improved Equipment

More efficient farm production may be secured where the equipment used on the farm is all of approximately the same size and requires the same power unit to operate it. For example, a farm needing four work horses may secure the most efficient production by having as much machinery as possible that requires four horses. This keeps the horses in use the maximum proportion of the time and results in lower production costs. Lower production costs are the result of more efficient use of man labor where one man is driving as many horses as possible all the time.

Use of Combine Fast Increasing on Farms

Machine Will Facilitate Practice of Double Cropping.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Summarizing an article on "The Influence of the Combine on Agronomic Practices and Research," John H. Martin, of the United States Department of Agriculture, says:

"Extensive use of the combine probably will result in a decrease of diversified farming and increases both in the size of farms and fields and in the practice of early tillage. The combine also will facilitate the practice of double cropping in some sections.

"The use of the combine is limited much more by the type of farming than by climatic or topographic conditions.

"Combining will probably largely solve the problem of organic matter in the soil in the regions east of the Rocky mountains by immediately returning the crop residue to the land, if needed.

"The usual loss of straw for feed in combining probably will be compensated by growing feed on land now used for green-manuring crops. If straw is desired for feed, it can be saved by some additional labor.

"Crop varieties susceptible to lodging can be harvested more efficiently with a combine than with a binder. Only a few varieties of wheat will ever shatter enough to cause appreciable losses, but most varieties of oats and some of barley will shatter unless harvested as soon as they are ripe enough to combine."

Sweet Clover Big Help in Improvement of Soil

(E. B. WELLS—Extension Soils Specialist, Kansas Agricultural College.)

Sweet clover as a soil builder "tops" all other legumes. Being a legume, it has the power of taking free nitrogen from the air and using it in the building of its own tissue and storing some in the soil for use by the crops which follow.

Plenty of lime and proper inoculation are the only requirements needed by sweet clover for a good stand.

By growing sweet clover which draws upon the subsoil for a large amount of its mineral elements and then plowing the crop under for following crops in the rotation, the sweet clover enthusiast is able to utilize his soil to much greater depth than is ordinarily the case.

Sweet clover has been found to be superior to most crops in its ability to utilize the phosphoric acid of raw rock phosphate. Such a fact suggests the combination of raw rock phosphate and sweet clover for green manure as a source of cheaper phosphoric acid, and at the same time offers a possible solution of our soil fertility problem.

Secure Better Results From Various Hay Crops

For best results timothy hay should be cut when in full bloom. Clover should be cut when it has reached full bloom. If allowed to stand too long, many clover leaves will turn brown and fall and the stems will become woody. Such hay has less feeding and market value than hay cut at the proper time.

Mixtures of clover and timothy are best cut when the clover has reached full bloom. Red clover is usually ready to cut ten days to two weeks before timothy.

Alfalfa should be cut when 10 to 25 per cent of the crop is in bloom. Alfalfa that is putting forth new shoots from the crown should be cut without regard to bloom.

Farm Notes

No fodders are better for growing bulls than alfalfa, clover and vetch hay.

Spraying with the bordeaux or some other fungicide is practiced to prevent tomato blights.

Sweet clover may be seeded in bluegrass pastures to supplement these at times when the blue grass is at its poorest supply.

Unless they have two full-size hive bodies, bees in any colony, headed by a young and vigorous queen from good stock, are likely to swarm.

• • •

Sweet clover is not as palatable as red clover or alfalfa, but it provides plenty of forage and will grow under conditions distinctly unfavorable to alfalfa.

• • •

Most good clay soils are benefited from plowing occasionally at a depth of six or eight inches. Many other soils need not be plowed over four or five inches.

Many farmers recognize birds as a valuable ally in the warfare against insect pests, but few know that when the birds cease their daylight activities the battle is taken up by another important ally—the toad.

• • •

Although toads, like birds, devour some beneficial insects, they more than compensate for such indiscriminate feeding by eating termites, beetle larvae with injurious or potentially injurious habits, plant sucking bugs, voracious caterpillars, and other noxious insects

FARM POULTRY

FLOCK HISTORY IS GUIDE IN CULLING

Always Better to Improve Production by Care.

"In culling poultry the history of the flock should be the first important consideration," say the extension specialists in poultry husbandry at the Ohio State university. "If the flock as a whole has been laying heavily throughout the entire year, culling should be comparatively easy, as the good birds will show evidence of high production, while the few poor birds will be outstanding, showing very definite evidences of low production or none.

"If the flock has laid indifferently throughout the year, or has suffered from parasites such as red mites, lice, or intestinal worms, or is improperly housed or cared for, the culling will be very difficult, for many of the birds that are really worth keeping will be questionable, due to their condition. Under such circumstances the first step should be to correct conditions, and allow the good birds to come back and show their value, which will cause the poor birds to be more easily recognized.

"It is always better to improve average production by better management rather than by culling, which decreases the number of birds and cuts down the possible earning power of the flock."

Get Rid of Parasites on Chickens in Flock

The hens have enough to bother with in the summer with the hot weather without having to fight lice and mites in addition. The flock owner can do a great deal to help the hens get rid of these pests.

There are various remedies on the market which can be used, or a drug known as sodium fluoride can be bought at the drug store and can be put on the hens, applying it on the back, head, throat, on the breast, around the vent, between each thigh and the breast and on each wing. This is a rather tedious process, although it will get all the lice.

Within the last year and a half, however, it has been found that painting Black Leaf 40 on the perches will rid a flock of lice. This is easy and effective.

Mites are a worse pest than lice, since these little bugs stay in the cracks and crevices around the nests, droppings boards and perches during the day and get on the birds at night, at which time they suck the hen's blood. These can best be fought by using a strong disinfectant on the nests, roosts and droppings boards.

If these pests—lice and mites—are allowed to remain on the birds, they will sap the chicken's vitality and will hinder egg production considerably.

Ducks and Geese Are Fed Pretty Much Alike

Ducks and geese are fed just about alike. They should be kept warm and dry and fed about four or five times per day. All young water fowl should have soft feeds, that is to say, wet mashes mixed as follows: Three parts yellow corn meal, four parts bran, one part red dog or low-grade flour by weight. Add to this 10 per cent of high-grade meat scraps, 1 per cent of fine sand, and mix with water or milk so that it is quite moist but not sloppy. Feed this every two or three hours for two weeks.

Care for Chicks

Raising good chicks is about the most important thing on a poultry farm. That to a large extent determines your profits. If you neglect the chicks by crowding them too closely, by letting the house become filthy and the soil in bad shape, you may produce weak chicks that do not live well and thy well. It is comparatively easy to grow good chicks if you are willing to do the necessary work of properly caring for the chicks.

Turkeys on Upgrade

Turkey raising is on the upgrade, now that the blackhead bugaboo has been done away with. And the turkey growers are getting the marketing system down to a fine point, too. Six turkey marketing associations have just been formed in various parts of Colorado, and the next thing will be a statewide pool. Profits received by members of turkey marketing pools in the West last year were very pleasing—that's why new pools are being formed to handle this year's crop.

Scratching Shed

In some of the warmer sections of the country, fowls will prefer to spend their nights in the trees and on outdoor roosts but severe storms, driving snows or heavy rains will in most instances, send them into the houses. It is the storm more than the cold that the hen objects to, and for this reason, if no other, a scratching shed where the fowls are sheltered from the wind, should be provided where the layers can sing and keep busy during the entire day.

Much More Than Half of People Illiterate

Sixty-two per cent of the population of the world, ten years of age and over, are illiterate. Of a total population of 1,363,900,000, the number of illiterates is 850,500,000. These remarkable figures were obtained through a comprehensive study of illiteracy in the various countries of the world, conducted by James F. Abel, specialist in foreign education, United States bureau of education. In this work Mr. Abel was assisted by Norman J. Bond, statistical assistant.

While only 18 countries report an illiteracy rate of more than 50 per cent, the population of these countries is approximately 618,000,000. Contrasted with this is the total of 468,000,000 inhabitants of all the 45 countries reporting less than 50 per cent illiteracy.

The United States is included in the group having under 10 per cent of illiteracy. Porto Rico and the Philippine islands, however, have a much larger percentage. Porto Rico reports 55 per cent, and the Philippines 50.8 per cent.

Lyle Womak, who sued his wife, Ruth Elder, for divorce on the ground of cruelty and coldness, has joined the Byrd expedition to the pole.

"It will be cold in the Antarctic," he said to a Panama correspondent, "but it won't be as cold as Ruth."

Then in allusion to his divorce he added bitterly:

"In the old days marital problems used to be solved—now they're dissolved."

Public Fairly Warned

A warning to the public to keep off the streets while a young woman was taking her driver's test appeared recently in a paper of Vetsernas, Sweden. The advertisement read: "The public is requested to leave the streets today between 11:30 and 12:30. Margit is getting her driver's license." The notice was signed with the name and address of Margit's proud parents.

Menace of Codling Moth

The Department of Agriculture is out to see that the codling moth is not coddled any more. It is time that it be taken seriously. Estimates now are that at least 20 per cent of the crop of apples and pears of the Pacific Northwest are lost each year through the destruction wrought by the worms of the moth. In individual cases the loss runs as high as 50 per cent.

The moth is nothing if not prolific. Two generations are produced each year during the growing season. This means that it is vital that the trees in the orchards be sprayed as many as six times a season.

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

THE SPIRIT OF INVESTIGATION
(Mary Stark Kerr)

A business woman was calling at the home of a young mother; while the latter was signing some papers her child was playing around the room, and investigating various articles which attracted his attention, as is natural for a child eighteen months old. "Stop that!" cried mother, "Let it alone!" and she jumped up and snatched the child away angrily.

"He is so troublesome," she said to the caller. "He is into everything. I wish he were a girl; that is what I wanted; boys are never any use to one when they grow up."

"O," said the shocked caller, "don't say that. A boy can be a great comfort to you. I have one only six years old, and he certainly is a delightful companion to me. But if you talk about your son like this, it will ruin his life, and yours, too. A child, even of his age, can feel the antagonism you are expressing, and it will cause him to have the same feeling toward you; or else, if he keeps on loving you, it will break his little heart."

"Well, I wish he would let things alone," snapped the mother.

"You can have your wish fulfilled, if you will take the right way of doing so," said the caller. "When children want to handle everything, they do not mean to be annoying, they are only trying to learn. Help him to learn, by showing him the objects which attract him and explaining what they are for. That will help him to grow out of this stage sooner, for when he has learned all the necessary things about these articles, he will not trouble about them any further. But the more you hinder him in his search for knowledge, the longer this stage will last."

"I never heard that before," said the mother. "I think I'll see how it works, because I surely want him to get out of this stage; it is terribly trying."

"I know it is trying to us, but do you know, I haven't a doubt that it is a good deal more trying to the child when we interfere with his search for knowledge. But if we work with him instead of against him, we shall find enjoyment in his curiosity. I am sure that if we parents do our part as we ought to, we shall get the reward as we go along, and our children, instead of being a trial to us, will be a real pleasure."

WINTER FUEL RECIPE

By Betty Barcley)

We have furnaces in our bodies, just as we have furnaces in our homes—and they need fuel, particularly during cold weather. Sugar is quick-energy fuel, whether it comes in the form of sugar, candy, sweetened fruit drinks, jam, jelly or preserves. So why not take a tip from the notebook of grandmother, and see that the shelves of the old preserve closet are filled this coming winter? Try this recipe.

CARROT MARMALADE

12 raw carrots
4 cups sugar
3 Sunkist lemons
1 teaspoon ground cloves
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 teaspoon ground allspice

Grate carrots, add sugar and let stand one hour. Add lemon juice and spices. Cook slowly for one hour. Turn into sterilized jars and seal when cold.

PROGRESS IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL

Women are busy tearing down the war hotels located between the Capitol and the Union Station. When they are cleared away the land will be converted into a beautiful plaza, which was the original intention, when it was purchased.

This is the beginning of the removal of the mushroom buildings that the World War forced the Government to erect. A large number of the departments and commissions that are engaged in doing the work of the Nation are still housed in temporary buildings, just as they were during the war. These buildings are probably the most uncomfortable, winter and summer, in Washington; so uncomfortable in summer that on very hot days the clerks are unable to stay in them after 2 P. M., and are released.

With the completion of the great building program on the Mall, now under way, most of these government agencies will be well housed in the most modern buildings in Washington. There is now going up the last unit of the Department of Agriculture building the Internal Revenue building and the immense Department of Commerce building. Others have been projected, and work on them will start within a year or two.

One can appreciate how the Government has grown within a generation from two simple facts. Twenty-five years ago the Department of Commerce was very insignificant; today it is building the largest building in Washington and one of the largest in floor space in the world to house its various activities. Attorney General Olney in Cleveland's last Cabinet occupied, with his entire staff, a small residence; today Attorney General Mitchell has an eleven story office building to house his staff, and it is cramped.

For Beauty TESTING RESULTS For Pleasure

In checking up the annual report of the Allen-DeKalb Dairy Herd Improvement records for the year 1928-1929 which ended May 31st, we are pleased to find that the Merriwold Farms herd stood in fourth place, with an average of 14.16 cows in the herd for the year—producing an average of 6323 pounds milk, and 367.0 pounds butter fat.

For each dollar spent for feed, we received a return of $2.70; produced butter fat for twenty-one cents per pound and milk at $1.21 per hundred. Considering that fifty percent of this herd was heifers in first milk, we believe this to be a rather satisfactory accomplishment.

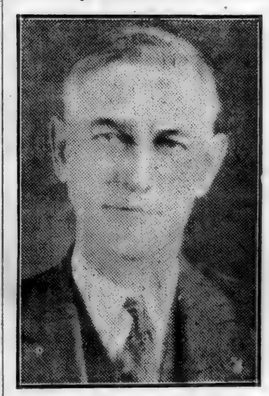
Governor Leslie Is Very Enthusiastic Over The Indiana State Fair



Governor Harry G. Leslie is an ex-officio member of the Indiana Board of Agriculture and is very much interested in the progressiveness of the state fair and the way it is being handled. Governor Leslie makes the following statements:

"The Indiana State Fair is one of the greatest expositions in the United States. Whether viewed from an industrial, agricultural or educational standpoint, it is a wonderful institution. It brings together and presents in a striking way the achievements of the people of Indiana.

"Supported by the State, every interest and activity of the people is given consideration and the State Board of Agriculture has spared no pains nor expense to adequately house and exhibit every item entered in the exposition.

"Despite adverse weather and economic conditions, Agriculturists have gone steadily forward emphasizing quality and breed until Indiana is one of the ranking states in agricultural activity. The support given boys and girls club work has been an inspirational and educational force whose value can not be estimated.

"The people of Indiana can ill afford to miss this great fair from August 31 to September 7, for it is worthy the support of every citizen. A week spent studying exhibits is a liberal education in itself. I cannot too strongly commend this great exposition to the people of Indiana."

PONTIAC GOSPEL QUARTET SUNDAY

According to plans made some time ago by the local curches, the Pontiac Male Quartet will appear at St. Joe, next Sunday morning at the High School Gym, at 10:30 and render one of their sacred concerts.

This quartet is composed of young business men of Pontiac, and they are all Christian men who desire to sing and entertain, remembering that the Gospel is always first.

This quartet is known as the Radio Gospel Singers and have appeared in this community. Sunday we predict a large and appreciative audience for the singers who come to St. Joe merely for the offering.

Churches of the community will also attend as word has been sent to a number of them.

If you enjoy a real male quartet, plan to attend Sunday morning.

T. J. Cotton, pastor of the M. E. Church at Spencerville, has resigned taking effect September 8 and is moving to Bellmore, Indiana, located fifty miles west of Indianapolis where he is accepting a pastorate. He is also planning to enter De Pauw University to complete his studies.

MRS. EARL WYATT, 39, PASSES AWAY

The funeral services of Mrs. Ina Wyatt of Auburn, were held Wednesday afternoon from the Church of the Nazarene at 2 o'clock, Rev. H. W. Cornelius officiating. Burial was made in Roselawn. Short services were conducted at the home of Mrs. Wyatt's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Warner, residing near the Dutch Ridge Church close to the DeKalb-Allen County line, Tuesday morning after which the body was removed to the late home in Auburn.

Mrs. Wyatt died at 10 o'clock Saturday night at her parents' home following an illness since July 3. She was taken sick while on a visit with her parents. Friday of last week Mrs. Wyatt appeared to be so much better that arrangements were made to take her to the Dr. J. A. Sanders' hospital for further treatments. Saturday morning however, she grew worse, becoming unconscious and hope of her recovery was given up.

Mrs. Wyatt was thirty-nine years, seven months and twenty-five days old.

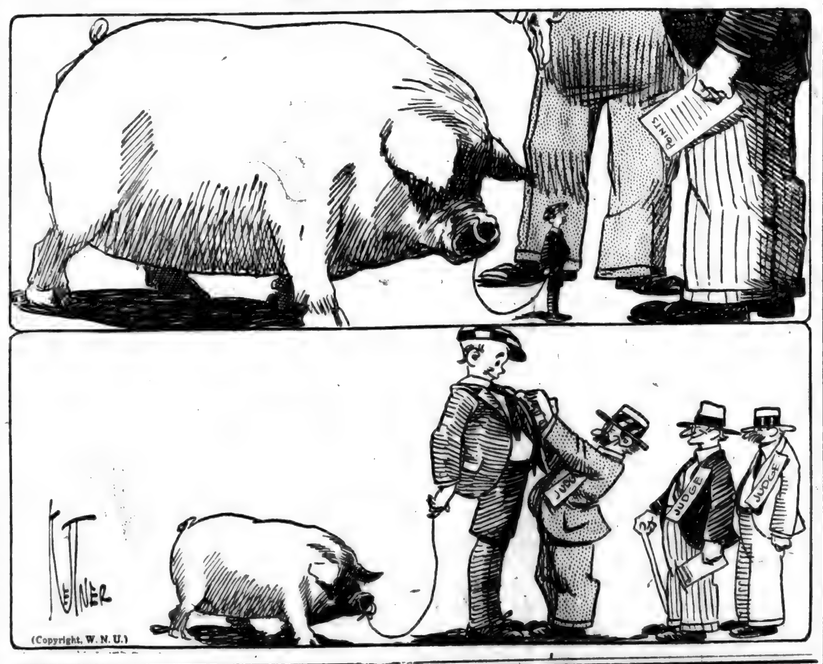
The deceased, whose death was caused from a cancer, was born on the parental farm in Perry Township, Allen County, January 5, 1890. Since her eighteenth year she taught music. She attended the schools of Perry Township, graduating from the grades when fifteen years of age. She was united in marriage with Mr. Earl Wyatt March 4, 1915.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt resided on their farm in Jackson Township until February 27, 1927 when they moved to Auburn.

Mrs. Wyatt was a member of the First Nazerene Church in Auburn.

Surviving are the husband, parents, and aged grandmother, Mrs. Mary Warner, of Auburn, and three brothers, Anson, living on a farm near his parents, Sylvester of Huntertown and Charles of Chicago.

Before and After the Award



PARADE AND FLOWER PRIZES

The home coming registration book gives 605 registrations on last Saturday, but according to previous years these figures represent less than half of the visitors. The day was ideal in every respect and the guests had a real treat in visiting.

The rides afforded both old and young pleasing entertainment for the three days and nights and all were well patronized. The result of the prizes offered for the parade entries were given out by M. E. Leighty, Auburn, and Herman Reasoner, judges, as follows:

Best motor driven car, Culture Club, first prize, $5.00; second prize, "We Girls," $2.50.

Best horse drawn float, first prize, the school, $5.00.

Best commercial float, first prize, E. R. Kinsey, $5.00; second prize, St. Joe Valley Bank, $2.50.

Best fantastic, Fred Hart and his assistants, $2.00.

Most Comic, Huber Moughler, boy with calf, $1.00.

The flower show was much larger than in former years and was a leading attraction of the Home Coming. The flower ocmmittee is very appreciative of the fine display of flowers brot and it shows much interest in the growing of flowers in our community. All of the exhibits were of a high quality. One hundred and eight entries were made by the people of Newville, Spencer and Concord Townships. Mr. Ten Eyck, florist of Auburn, had a display that elicited much favorable comment.

The following named were prize winners:

BUTLER MAN HELD FOR EMBEZZLEMENT

John O'Malley, 27, of Butler, was taken to Albion Saturday by Sheriff Singleton of Noble County, to face a charge of embezzlement.

O'Malley runs concessions at street fairs and recently he had charge of one at Ligonier for a Columbia City man. The latter charges that O'Malley sold the tent and all its contents worth about $70 without his authority or knowledge.

O'Malley was operating a concession at the St. Joe carnival when he was taken into custody Friday night by Sheriff John C. Armstrong and his deputy, Art Zimmerman.

CONCORD LADY DIES OF CANCER

BETTER HELP IN HOMES

Housewives are to a great extent solving the help problem by the employment of electric servants that are never late on the job, never ask for holidays nor demand the use of the family car.

The amazing increase of electrical equipment in American homes is disclosed by the household research bureau, which finds that at the close of 1928 this equipment included 17,700,000 electric irons, 7,700,000 vacuum cleaners, 1,223,000 electric refrigerators and 5,735,000 electric washers.

There are nearly twenty million wired homes in the United States, where the field of usefulness of electrical energy is being more rapidly developed than in any other country.

American women have discovered that the employment of labor-saving devices in the home is a means of conserving their energy, health and beauty, besides making for true economy. These devices are banishing much of the drudgery which was formerly inseparable from housekeeping.

NEWS AND VIEWS

If you expect things to "come out all right in the end," it is well to have them right at the beginning.

A fool there was and he saved his rocks, even as you and I; but he took them out of the old strong box when a salesman called with some wild-cat stocks, and the fool was stripped down to his very socks, even as you and I.

SPENCERVILLE WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

The St. Joe Independents were defeated by the fast going Spencerville team in their three game series for the county championship on last Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Spencerville won the game on Saturday, 7 to 1. St. Joe won the Sunday game 3 to 2. Spencerville won the Monday game 10 to 9. With the exception of a few errors, the series exhibited three games of neat, clean ball playing. Both teams have been playing tight ball all season, so Managers Zonker of St. Joe and Goldsmith of Spencerville conceived the idea of getting two good teams in the same diamond to give the fans of both towns an exhibition of the season's best. St. Joe has won fifteen out of the twenty games played this season and the Spencerville team has won a majority of games played.

Chas. Kimes, of Spencerville and Ed Storer and Frank Bachtel, of St. Joe, were the Umpires, who officiated to the entire satisfaction of the crowd.

The St. Joe team wishes the Spencerville team much luck in the future. The St. Joe people say, A good series.

TESTED RECIPE

Watermelon Salad

Thoroughly chill a fine ripe watermelon. With a French potato cutter scoop out balls from the choicest part of the pink flesh, avoiding the seeds as much as possible when cutting out the balls. Arrange balls in individual nests of crisp lettuce heart leaves and pour over French dressing or serve with cream mayonnaise dressing. If the French cutter is not at hand cut the melon pulp in one-inch cubes. Marshmallows may be cut in small cubes and added to the mayonnaise dressing before adding it to the salad.

Protecting Oysters

A New Jersey law specifies that only boats under sail power may engage in the hunt for "seed" oysters. They are obtained in the stretch of bay from Fortescue, N. MANY CONVENIENCES FOUND IN BATHROOM

Built-in Closets and Drawers Make a Bathroom Convenient.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When the installation of running water in an Illinois farm house was completed, it was possible to have a modern bathroom, and a small second floor room was remodeled for the purpose. Its dimensions were such that in addition to the built-in tub and other plumbing fixtures, one of the side walls could be used for specially fitted linen drawers, with two small closets suitable for storing medicines and bottles, and a roomy lower cupboard for sick-room equipment. High windows on two sides give good light. The photograph was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture. The new bathroom was part of the general home improvement carried out at the suggestion of the home demonstration agent.

RAYON GARMENTS QUITE PLEASING

Are Found Satisfactory to Wear and Care.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The increased vogue for garments made of rayon, particularly for underwear, has led manufacturers to strengthen and improve this fabric so that it is usually found very satisfactory in respect to wear and to care. Many women launder for themselves any underwear that does not require ironing, especially knit garments of silk or rayon, such as vests, bloomers, stockings, and other articles, and if a few precautions are observed, this can be safely done and the articles of rayon will give good service.

Some types of rayon are weaker when wet than dry, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. It is often torn by being hung up with clothespins or by rough fingernails or rings worn while it is being washed.

Do Not Use Clothespins on Rayon Garments.

Lukewarm water should always be used rather than hot water, which makes rayon tender. Soapsuds made of pure, neutral soap, are also preferable to rubbing soap directly on the garments. The fabric should not be rubbed, but squeezed and rinsed repeatedly until it is clean.

After washing, the garment should be hung over a line or in any other suitable place, but under no circumstance should clothespins be used. The illustration shows what has happened in one case where this precaution was not observed. A large hole, started from a small puncture, has appeared, and the threads of the fabric are rapidly running. Many rayon garments can be gently patted and pulled into shape sufficiently to wear without ironing, but if an iron is used care must be taken not to have it too hot. Medium heat is best.

New Flavor Combination for Serving Potatoes

Is the family tired of potatoes cooked in all the ordinary ways—baked, boiled, mashed, creamed, scalloped, or fried? Try this new combination of flavors the next time you have potatoes. It is from the bureau of home economics.

3 cups potatoes, sliced	1½ cups strained tomato juice
1 small onion, sliced	1 tsp. salt
3 tbs. butter.	Dash of pepper

Cook the canned tomatoes for 2 or 3 minutes, then press them through a coarse strainer to remove the seeds. Wash, pare, and cut the potatoes into slices about ¼ inch thick. Brown the potatoes and onion in the butter about 20 minutes and sprinkle with the salt. Add the tomato juice, cover, and simmer until the potatoes are tender. The potato thickens the tomato juice so that no other thickening is necessary.

VEGETABLES AND MEAT FOR GUMBO

Most Pleasing Ingredient Is Okra From the South.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From the far South comes this recipe, tested by the bureau of home economics, for a "gumbo" made with meat and vegetables and served in a mold of flaky hot rice. The characteristic ingredient of all gumbos is the okra, which is obtainable in most markets during the summer months.

¾ lb. cured ham	½ cup chopped celery
1 lb. beef, diced	1 quart okra, cut crosswise
1 pint water	Bay leaf or celery seed if desired
1 quart tomatoes, fresh or canned	Salt and pepper to taste.
2 tbs. butter	1 green pepper chopped fine
2 tbs. chopped parsley
1 onion, sliced

Cook the ham and beef until browned in a large heavy skillet, add the water and tomato, cover, and simmer until the meat is almost tender. Cook the other vegetables in the melted butter and add to the meat mixture with the okra. Season to taste and simmer uncovered until the okra is tender and the stew has thickened. Serve the gumbo in a rice ring made as follows:

Rice Ring.

1 cup rice	½ tsp. onion juice
4 cups water	2 tbs. butter
1 tsp. salt	2 dashes tabasco

Wash the rice well, and sprinkle it into the rapidly boiling salted water. Cook for about 20 minutes, or until the rice is tender and the water absorbed. Add the seasonings, put the rice into a well-greased ring mold, and pat it down gently. Reheat in the oven, turn onto a round platter, fill the center with gumbo, and serve at once.

Mexican Salad Somewhat Out of Ordinary Dish

Somewhat out of the ordinary is this Mexican salad, made with peppers and tomatoes, with a liberal amount of onion in the seasoning, as well as the characteristic chili flavoring. Bacon fat serves in place of salad oil in the dressing. The bureau of home economics suggests using this salad for a lunch or supper dish.

2 large green peppers	4 slices bacon
1 onion, medium, cut fine	¼ cup vinegar
2 large firm tomatoes	¼ tsp. chili powder

Skin the tomatoes, remove the seeds from the peppers, and cut the tomatoes and peppers into small uniform pieces. Mix with the onion. Fry the bacon until crisp and remove from the pan. Add the vinegar and chili powder to the bacon fat. Let this mixture come to the boiling point and then pour over the vegetables. When chilled, add the bacon, which has been broken into small pieces, and serve on crisp lettuce leaves, with the sauce as a dressing.

Freshest of New Peas May Be Cooked Tough

The freshest of new peas may be cooked so that they are tough and unappetizing, if the housewife does not know certain points about bringing out the best flavor and keeping the bright green color. The bureau of home economics gives the following directions for cooking peas in the right way. One or two leaves of mint may be added for flavor for those who like it.

Start the cooking of green peas in boiling, unsalted water, in an uncovered pan. Then as soon as they come to the boil, lower the heat, and simmer them. Peas actually cook more quickly at the simmering point, are more tender, and keep their sweet, fresh flavor and bright green color better than when boiled. Boiling, in fact, seems to toughen and harden peas. Use no more water than necessary in cooking peas so that the liquid, which contains valuable food elements, does not need to be drained off.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

BY THE BARONESS ORCZY

WNU Service
Copyright Baroness Orczy

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. The Scarlet Pimpernel is really Sir Percy Blakeney, popular London dandy. The failure of Lauzet, revolutionary chief of the section in which the Scarlet Pimpernel has been operating, to prevent the escape of the Tournon-d' Agenays brings the condemnation of the government upon him. He causes the arrest of the Deseze family on a charge of treason.

The following day was market day in Moisson, and at first Lauzet had been doubtful whether it would not be best to wait another twenty-four hours before carrying through his friend Chauvelin's project. The dawn, however, broke with ideal conditions for it; a leaden sky, a tearing wind, and torrents of rain alternating with a thin drizzle. On the whole, nature had ranged herself on the side of all those who worked their nefarious deeds under cover of semi-darkness. Lauzet, gazing out on the mournful autumnful aspect of weather and sky, felt that if the Scarlet Pimpernel did indeed meditate mischief he would choose such a day as this.

Thus it was that in the early dawn of this market day the citizens of Moisson had a sad scene to witness. Soon after seven o'clock a small crowd collected round the big, old-fashioned diligence which had drawn up outside the Deseze house in the Rue des Pipots. To right and left of the vehicle were soldiers on horseback, two on each side, mounting guard, and the man who held the reins was also in the uniform of the rural gendarmerie. Every one in the city knew this man. Charles Marie was his name, and he had begun life as a baker's assistant—a weak, anemic looking youth, who had been sent out of the army because he was no use as a fighting man, so timorous and slow witted was he.

Lately he had obtained a position as hostler at the posting inn in Montes, because, it seems, he did know something about horses; but why he should have been chosen to drive the diligence to Paris today nobody could conjecture. He must have had a friend in high places to be so exalted above his capabilities. Anyway, there he sat on the box, looking neither to right nor left but straight between the ears of his off-leader, and not a word would he say in response to the questions, the jeers, and the taunts which came to him from his many friends in the crowd.

Soon, however, excitement centered round the porte-cochere of the Deseze house. It had suddenly been thrown wide open, and in the doorway appeared poor Citizeness Deseze, escorted by two officers of gendarmerie, and closely followed by Madeleine, her little daughter, also under guard. It was pitiable to see the poor invalid, who could scarcely stand on her half-paralyzed limbs, thus being dragged away from the home where she had lived as a happy wife and mother for close on a quarter of a century. A murmur of sympathy for these two women, and of execration for the brutality of this arrest, rose from the crowd. But it was quickly enough suppressed. Who would dare murmur openly these days, when spies of the revolutionary government lurked at every corner?

Hostile glances, however, were shot at Citizen Lauzet, who had come over that morning from Montes and now stood by, somewhat detached from the crowd, watching the proceedings in the company of his friend Chauvelin.

"Is this in accordance with your idea?" he asked in a whisper when, presently, Chauvelin completed a quick and comprehensive examination of the diligence.

Chauvelin's only reply was a curt and peremptory "Hush!" and a furtive glance about him to see that there were no likely eavesdroppers within hearing. He knew from experience that the famous League of the Scarlet Pimpernel also had spies lurking in every corner; spies not so numerous, perhaps, as those in the pay of the committe of public safety, but a great deal more astute, and he also knew—none better—that the case of the Deseze family was just one that would appeal to the sporting or chivalrous instincts of that band of English adventurers.

But he was satisfied with the miseenscene organized, under his supervision, by Chief of Section Lauzet. Prominence had been given all over the department to the arrest of the Deseze family, to the worth and integrity of its head, the sickness of the wife, the charm and modesty of the daughter. Half a dozen picked men of the gendarmerie of Montes, armed to the teeth, would join the diligence at Montes, but they would ride inside disguised as passengers, whilst it was left for anybody to see that the coach was traveling under a feeble guard of four men, an officer, and three troopers, and was driven by a lout who was known to have no fight in him.

CHAPTER IV

The Road to Death

Lauzet had been inspired when he chose this day; a typical day in late October, with that pitiless rain lashed by a southeasterly wind that would score the roads and fret the horses. Down in the forest the diligence would have to go almost at foot pace, for the outline of every tree on the roadside would be blurred, and objects would loom like ghosts out of the mist.

Yes! The scene was set for the comedy invented by Chauvelin for the capture of his arch enemy. It only remained for the principal actors to play their roles to his satisfaction. Already the female prisoners had been hustled into the diligence amidst the sighs and tears of their sympathizers in the crowd. Poor Madam Deseze had sunk half fainting with exhaustion into the arms of her young daughter, and the two women sat huddled in the extreme corner of the vehicle, more dead than alive. And now, amidst much jolting and creaking, some shouting and cursing, too, with cracking of whip and jingling of spurs, the awkward, lumbering diligence was started on its way. Some two hundred meters farther on it came to a halt once more, outside the commissariat, and here the male prisoner, Citizen Deseze himself, was made to join his family in the airless, creaking vehicle. Resigned to his own fate, he set himself the task of making the painful journey as endurable as may be to his invalid wife. Hardly realizing yet the extent of their misfortune and the imminence of their doom, the three victims of Lauzet's cupidity and Chauvelin's vengefulness suffered their martyrdom in silence and with resignation.

The final start from Moisson had been made at eight o'clock. By this time the small city was filling with the neighboring farmers and drovers, with their cattle and their carts and vehicles of every kind, all tending either to the Place du Marche or to the various taverns for refreshment. Lauzet, accompanied by Chauvelin, had ridden back to Montes. Just before nine o'clock the diligence rattled over the cobblestones of that city, and a halt was called at the posting inn. It was part of the program to spend some hours in Montes, where the extra men of the gendarmerie would be picked up, and only to make a fresh start when the shades of evening were beginning to draw in. It was not to be supposed that the English brigands would launch their attack in broad daylight, and the weather did not look as if it were going to mend.

Chauvelin, of course, was there, seeing to every arrangement, with his friend Lauzet close at his elbow. He had himself picked out the six men of the gendarmerie who were to ride in disguise inside the diligence; he had inspected their disguises, added an artistic or realistic touch here and there, before he pronounced them to be good.

Finally he turned to the young officer who was in command of the party.

Senate Pages

The page boys in the senate are paid $3.30 per day while the senate is in session. Their hours are concurrent with those of the senate, but it is necessary for them to report somewhat earlier than the hour at which the senate convenes. Their duties are those of messengers, generally. Under the laws of the District of Columbia they are required to attend school for 15 hours each week. Some attend night school and other attend classes conducted by an instructor at the capitol in the mornings.

Magnificent Opal

The finest opal in the world unearthed at Lightning Ridge, New South Wales, is 6½ inches by 2 inches, weighs 790 carats and combines every color of the rainbow in shimmering perfection.

Low Building Cost Feature of Modified Dutch Colonial Style

While this home appears to be large it contains only five rooms, two bedrooms and bath being on the second floor and three rooms downstairs. It is 24 feet wide and 26 feet deep in dimensions. The rear has an extension which makes that into a breakfast room.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Many people have an idea that some time they will own their own home. They cherish the idea but never cross the bridge between the land of dreams and that of actuality.

They always come up against that old stone wall, "We haven't got the money." But there is usually a way or ways if you are persistent enough and want it bad enough.

Systematic saving will usually bring it about and nearly all banks have formed "Build a Home Savings Accounts" or "Save for a Home Savings Account." They are eager to help you get started and when you have sufficient savings to make a start they are eager to help you secure the balance through a real estate loan made either on a long term loan whereby a small part is paid off each month so as to mature the loan over a period of from 10 to 15 years, or on a straight five or seven year loan with such prepayments on each interest date as you feel able to pay.

They will also put you in touch with a reliable, responsible contractor who will take care of your building and take all worries off your shoulders. He will help you select materials that will be most satisfactory for your home and of the kind carried in stock by your local building material dealer.

While the home we are illustrating here appears large, it contains only five rooms, two bedrooms, bath, alcove and closets on the second floor and living room, reception hall, dining room, kitchen and breakfast nook and closets on the first floor.

This is a good example of the modified Dutch colonial home. Added to this rectangular house are an enclosed vestibule, an open terrace and a sunroom effect. These give the exterior of the home an appearance of size much greater than its dimensions and add to its comfort and attractiveness.

This house is designed for the farm family or a family living in town that requires two fairly large bedrooms. It is 24 feet wide and 26 feet deep, exclusive of the breakfast nook. The living room is 15 by 18 feet. The dining room is connected with the living room by a double cased opening which gives the effect of the two rooms being one spacious room. The dining room is at the rear and on the corner which permits windows on two sides for light and ventilation.

Stairs to the basement are under the stairs to the second floor and are reached through the kitchen.

Upstairs there are two bedrooms and a bathroom and a large alcove. All of these rooms open off a center hall. Each of the bedrooms is a corner room and there are two good-sized closets.

This is a most desirable home building design and because of its low cost will appeal to a great many prospective home builders who want a pretty house that contains plenty of room for the family and is efficiently arranged so that the homemaker can take care of it with a minimum amount of labor.

Plastering Now Fine Art in Home Building

The old methods of throwing plaster on a wall or ceiling without the proper care and attention have given way to modern and well-defined systems that have resulted in a splendid accomplishment.

Plastering is to the home or business building what clothes are to humanity. Appearance counts, always and in everything, and people are becoming interested in improving their ways of living.

Better plastering by a recent decorative method can be done only through the use of the proper products, and among these some stand as the highest representatives in this class. One is an emulsion based on portland cement, sand and asbestos. To say that splendid results have been obtained with this decorative plastering would be to put it mildly.

Leading builders and decorators make it a point to insist upon the best as the only logical product that can be employed efficiently. Beauty as well as permanent improvement have been made possible with the use of this material and it is highly recommended to all those who know of the importance of better plastering to use such splendid material as one that will give everlasting satisfaction.

Porch Box Adds Touch of Charm to Home

A window box or porch box can add great beauty to the home. It is the color, design, the arrangement of the choice plants, that makes the success of a flower box. There are certain definite rules of procedure that should be followed.

This applies not only to the plants to be used, but also to the soil, fertility, the drainage, and the kind of wood best suited to make the box. More than this, the location of the box, be it in the sun or in the shade, will influence the plants to be used.

Enamel Gives Luster and Rich Color, Too

Enamel is really varnish to which color and opacity have been imparted by the addition of pigments. The resulting finish may have high, medium, or no luster. It is very durable, waterproof, and consequently easy to keep clean by washing.

For this reason enamel is generally chosen for woodwork that is to be subjected to hard wear, or woodwork that will require frequent washing. The varnish binder makes it highly resistant and protective, for there is no better wearing material than varnish. The greater the proportion of varnish, therefore, the more durable the finish. A high gloss in an enamel is generally indicative of durability. For this reason a high-gloss enamel is frequently specified for kitchens and bathrooms.

Here's Way to Thwart That Chimney Leak

Leaks are liable to develop back of the chimney where it comes up through the roof. The water flowing down that part of the roof, behind the chimney, will be dammed against the back and leak through, in spite of all precautions. It has been found that there is only one satisfactory way to overcome this, and that is to build what is known as a cricket or saddleback of the chimney and cover it with sheet copper. This is really a little gable roof which throws the water to each side of the chimney and prevents it from collecting.

Paint Coverage

Paint that is thin enough for a priming coat will cover approximately 600 square feet to the gallon. After measuring the surface of the building and ascertaining the number of square feet to be painted, divide the total number of square feet by 600, and the result is the number of gallons of paint to mix.

Lesson for September 8

NEHEMIAH REBUILDING THE WALL OF JERUSALEM

GOLDEN TEXT—The people had a mind to work.
LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 2:1-7:4.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Working Together.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Working Together.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Teamwork.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Co-operation in Religious Work.

In order to prepare to teach this lesson the teacher should master the contents of the book of Nehemiah.

Nehemiah was a cupbearer to the Persian king. While performing his official duty he learned of the distress of his brethren in Jerusalem. The walls of the city were broken down, its gates burnt, and the remnant of the captives were in great affliction. This news brought by his brethren greatly moved Nehemiah. He sat down and wept and mourned several days, fasting and praying before God. In answer to his prayer he was granted a leave of absence from the Persian court, and credentials from the king. He journeyed to Jerusalem and made a survey of the city by night without disclosing his purpose to anyone. Having thus obtained first-hand information, he called the representatives of the Jews together and said, "Let us build the walls of Jerusalem."

I. Preparation for the Building (chap. 3).

The division of labor in this project displayed Nehemiah's administrative ability. A wise distribution of labor makes difficult tasks easy. Observe some outstanding features of this great work:

1. Stress laid upon indifference (v. 5).

In administrative tasks it is proper that unfaithfulness should be pointed out as a warning to the unfaithful and encouragement to the faithful.

2. Help rendered by the women (v. 12).

Perhaps Shallum had no sons to aid him.

3. Stress laid upon earnestness of some (v. 20).

Recognition of fidelity will spur one to faithfulness.

4. Every one built over against his own house (vv. 10, 23, 28).

No incentive for exertion is quite so strong as that which concerns one's own family.

5. Certain guilds of men undertook certain work (vv. 8, 31, 32).

II. Hindrances Encountered (4:1-6:14).

1. Scoffing of Sanballat and Tobiah (4:1-6, cf. 2:19, 20).

The oppressors of God's servants frequently begin by hurling ridicule.

2. Conspiracy for a sudden attack (4:7-9).

When the enemy saw that the work was actually succeeding they changed from ridicule to an attempt to throw the workmen into a panic.

3. Conspiracy with the Jews (4:10-23).

They sought to hinder by inducing the Jews who were outside to discourage their brethren by the claim that the task was hopeless and that they were liable to sudden and secret attack.

4. Greed and oppression of the rich (5:1-13).

The Jews of that day, like the profiteers of our day, took advantage of the poor and oppressed them, so that they mortgaged their land and even sold their daughters into slavery.

5. Scheme to take Nehemiah's life (6:1-14).

When Sanballat and Tobiah failed in every other way they sought by craft to get Nehemiah away, that they might kill him.

III. The Wall Completed (6:15-7:4).

So energetically did they pursue their tasks that in fifty-two days the wall was completed. We may learn from this:

1. That though God's children are beset by enemies, they should not fear.

2. That when beset by enemies, we should pray (4:9).

Their faith was accompanied by wise precaution.

(a) They set a watch (4:9).

(b) Men were permitted to be with their families (4:13), and would thus fight better.

(c) Half worked and half watched, all armed for battle.

(d) They worked with sword in one hand (4:17).

(e) They slept in their clothes in readiness (4:23).

Prayer and faith are not slothful or inactive.

A Picture by Plato

Plato pictured the soul under the figure of a many-headed monster, a lion and a man, combined in one form. The man represented the higher nature, the reason; the lion the passionate element; and the many-headed monster the lusts and appetites. The picture is as true today as when first presented. The lion and many-headed monster exists in every person. It can only be changed by the love of the Christ, by which the lion is made to be as a lamb.

Bathing Parties Are Spoiled by Peepers

Penarth, Wales.—Organized "peeping parties" are threatening to kill girls' swimming parties along the Welsh coast.

As there are no bathhouses along the rock coast, feminine swimmers have been forced to disrobe behind protecting rocks. But of late their privacy has been so rudely interrupted by gangs of "peepers" carrying long-range binoculars that they have been forced to give up swimming.

To meet the new situation the women are begging the authorities to place plain-clothes officers along the beach in order that they may enjoy a dip without being spied upon.

BLAME VOODOOISM FOR MAN'S MURDER

Widow Tells of Rites Practiced by Neighbor.

Atlantic City.—Voodooism, practiced among negroes of Africa, the West Indies and southern states, entered the investigation of the death of Joseph London, fifty-eight-year-old retired grocer, whose charred body was found in the ruins of his home at Conovertown after the dwelling had been destroyed by fire recently.

Mrs. Flossie London, twenty-nine-year-old second wife of the grocer, told detectives that Otto Martin, a neighbor, had practiced voodoo rites over her with such success that she believed herself completely within his power. Martin, forty-five years old, is a painter of Mill road, Absecon. His mother hails from a Virginia settlement of negroes, where voodooism is practiced, they say.

"Martin held a terrible spell over me, one that I could not shake off," Mrs. London said. "So strong was his power that it was only through the practice of antidotal voodoo rites that I was finally able to shake it off.

"I went to a voodoo practitioner last year. Under the orders of that practitioner I made a magic potion from tree bark mixed with water and sprinkled it over my hair. That magic dose brought immediate relief. I felt that Martin's spell over me was broken at last.

"When Martin next came to call upon me, I ordered him from my house. That was last August. He has never returned."

Martin told detectives he could not help solving London's death mystery. He admitted quarreling with London a year ago over a trucking business in which they were interested.

Monkey Rescues Pal From Trap of Keeper

Providence, R. I.—The best laid plans of mice and men and Billy Overton "gang aft agley."

One of Mr. Overton's plans went agley the other morning. As he is keeper of the menagerie at Roger Williams park, he has been spending much of his time recently pondering over ways and means by which one might capture a monkey. Several monkeys, once of the park mound but now of more cosmopolitan address, have been wandering at will through the former property of Roger Williams ever since they escaped. Less irked than piqued at the treachery of his pets, Keeper Overton ruminated at some length and then took steps.

A fashionable box, nile green with suede trimmings, caught with orange blossoms and sturdy nails, was placed on a prominent hillock close to the monkey mound. Inside was placed a banana, a de luxe edition of a banana ripe, yellow, luscious and otherwise tempting. A sliding door of the box was pulled up so that any monkey chancing by would observe that there was an opportunity to appease the inner monkey in a proper manner.

Night fell as softly as usual, but the day dawned with a crash. One of the first sights to greet Keeper Overton as he appeared for the day's labor was a rapidly approaching young man who flapped his arms wildly, withal crying, "There's a monkey in the trap, there's a monkey in the trap!"

"You wouldn't fool me?" demanded Keeper Overton.

"There's a monkey in the trap, there's a—"

So the two men hurried to the hillock. They arrived just in time to see one monkey dash over to the trap, pull up the door that had descended and release another monkey. The latter, tidily brushing banana from his whiskers, scooted away followed by his true friend.

Cat Survives Electric Shock That Kills Man

Regina, Saskatchewan.—Forty-eight hours after it had been electrocuted, a cat taken from the top of an electric pole, came to life again.

Charles Lefrentz, North Portal farmer, who attempted to rescue the animal, was killed. In its fright the cat reached for the high-tension wire, the current passing through its body to the man. Both were believed dead, but now the feline is as lively as ever.

THE BANK'S PART IN THE FARM PROBLEM

By H. LANE YOUNG
Member American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission

ONE of the most discussed and least understood questions regarding the farmer's problems is the part the bank has played, or is to play, in financing the farmer. The basis of co-operation between the two, however, is a very simple one.

H. Lane Young

Both sides are subject to criticism for the condition that exists today. The major share of the blame rests on those banks that have failed through disregarding fundamental principles in loaning other people's money, that have encouraged the farmer to expect bank loans without first putting his business on the earning basis which would justify a bank to lend him money.

One of the underlying reasons for the failure of so many country banks has been the existence of too many banks. With the limited business of the community divided among too many banks it was impossible for them to make enough money to justify the employment of officers with the proper ability to manage the bank successfully. Then the scramble for business was so hard that good judgment and foresight were forgotten in granting loans, with the resultant failure of the weaker institutions.

In the future, banks are not going to loan the money of their depositors without the kind of security that can be immediately realized upon in case the loan is not paid, or unless the applicant presents a sound and successful record of business operation—whether that business be manufacturing, merchandising, or farming.

Farming-Banking Interdependent

This is a perfectly obvious attitude, because country banking cannot be successfully and profitably carried on unless farming is successfully and profitably operated—the two businesses are dependent upon each other. There is no longer any question that the time has arrived for these interdependent businesses to reach a common ground of understanding of the requirements that both must meet for their mutual welfare.

There is no doubt but what the future prosperity of the farmer and the basis of cooperation between banker and farmer is the intelligent diversification of crops. It is necessary, however, to have the right conception of diversification.

The mistake that many farmers have made in attempting to diversify has been to invest too much money, time and land in a new and untried crop—sometimes a hazardous crop, or one for which no immediate market has been developed, resulting in a loss of the initial effort and discouragement of future efforts on a more conservative basis.

Disregarding the primary and essential principle of farming—namely, increasing earnings by decreasing the cost of production through the practice of building up soil by crop rotation and intensive cultivation, is responsible for a large share of the farmers' trouble today.

'WAY BACK WHEN

If you want a few chuckles turn back 40 or 50 years in the newspaper files and read what the people were most interested in then.

Remember when Dennis Kearney, the sandlots agitator of San Francisco, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and paid a fine of $1,000 for disturbing the peace and using language tending to incite riots? Times haven't changed much. "Agitators" are nothing new. Every generation that lived has had its agitators, preventers of stagnation.

Nor has human nature changed. Now and in recent years Americans have been sending relief funds to starving families abroad. In yellowed newspapered files we read of Americans responding nobly with money and food for Ireland's poor, suffering from famine in 1880.

In that same year (1880) the Khedive of Egypt shiped a huge obelisk (like a tall stone monument) to New York state, as a gift. The obelisk set the whole country talking. For Egypt was as mysterious and fascinating then as it was when American and British grave-robbers were prowling in the tomb of old King Tutankhamen.

A national election in 1880, with the usual conventions of republicans and democrats. The campaign was very hot, the voting close. People took politics more seriously in those days, marching in long processions with red-fire torches.

The matter of a third term for presidents still excited the nation periodically. We find republicans holding an anti-third term convention at St. Louis in 1880 to head off the re-nomination of General Grant, who had already served two terms.

Prohibition was a big issue in 1924. It was an issue though of less importance in 1880, when the prohibitionists held a political convention in Cleveland and nominated Neal Dow of Maine as their presidential candidate.

American bicyclists held their first national meet in 1880, at Newport, R. I., 160 racing riders participating.

Dr. Henry S. Tanner of Minneapolis fasted for 40 days, back in 1880, living on water alone.

Any of these events of 1880, barring the bicyclists, might just as well happen today Actors, scenery, costumes and "stage props" change, but the plot of life is about the same in one generation as in others.

Two Great Capitals

Capitol of Argentina and Congress Square, Buenos Aires.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

ON OPPOSITE sides of the wide estuary of the Rio de la Plata, only a few hours steaming distance apart, lie two of South America's greatest cities, Buenos Aires, capital of Argentina, and Montevideo, capital of Uruguay.

Buenos Aires means "good airs," or "delightful breezes," if one is willing to translate less literally. The city is not merely the capital and chief port of a South American republic. It is a world center—a city of superlatives, contrasts and paradoxes.

Its population of slightly more than 2,000,000 makes it, by a wide margin, the metropolis of South America and the southern hemisphere. It is the greatest of Spanish-speaking cities, having nearly three times as many inhabitants as Madrid. It is greater than any other Latin city except Paris. In the New world it shares third place with Philadelphia; only New York and Chicago surpass it. And now that Petrograd and Moscow have shrunk while Vienna is marking time, it probably ranks or soon will rank as the eighth city of the world, led only by the three metropolises of Europe (London, Berlin and Paris), the two of North America (New York and Chicago), and Tokyo and Osaka in Asia.

This great city is the focus of the culture, thought, politics, economics, and social life of Argentina as well as the funnel through which pour the millions of pounds of dressed meats and the millions of bushels of wheat which make up the contribution of the republic to the hungry peoples of the Old world. Its language is the language of Spain, but many other things Spanish have been thrust aside. Its inhabitants would laugh at the idea of a midday siesta—so generally observed in most Spanish-American countries. The rapid development of Argentina has made innumerable fortunes, and the stream of gold has been poured lavishly into the lap of Buenos Aires. In no other city, perhaps, can one see so strikingly displayed the evidences of extreme opulence.

Making a Marvelous City.

In progress and the possession of vision the people of Buenos Aires are unsurpassed even by the restless builders of North America's greatest cities. For centuries after its establishment Buenos Aires was without a port. Ships anchored miles from the shallow, sandy shore and all freight was handled in lighters. Within the last twenty-five years the municipality has constructed the largest artificial docks in the world. These provide adequate facilities for the thousands of ocean vessels and coasting craft that put into its port annually.

The narrow checker-board of streets in the business center which the colonial Buenos Aires bequeathed to the world-city of today has been a constant embarrassment in the face of the demands of modern business. The municipality has widened some of these narrow ways at a cost of many millions of dollars, into stately and handsome avenues, and is carving other arteries of traffic diagonally through the closely packed squares.

In the newer parts of the city streets of ample width and numerous broad avenues have been laid out. Many of the avenues are lined with the costly palaces of Argentina's multimillionnaires. It is in this part of the city and in such semi-business avenues as the tree-trimmed Avenida de Mayo with its mile or more of fine hotels, clubs, cafes, and business buildings de luxe, that Buenos Aires reminds the traveler of Paris. The comparison is forced on the observer again when he drives in the afternoon through Palermo park, the Bois de Boulogne of Buenos Aires, and becomes a part of the seemingly interminable procession of smart equipages bearing their throng of well-dressed men and women.

The men of Buenos Aires are up-to-date in all things; but its women are even ahead of the times. They wear the latest Paris creations even before they are donned by the Parisiennes themselves. Climate must be given its rightful place in the explanation of this paradox. Summer models are designed in Paris in December, and the reversal of the seasons south of the Equator makes these seemingly premature creations fitting attire in Buenos Aires in January and February when they reach the beau monde of that distant metropolis. Buenos Aires is in the south latitude corresponding to that of Charleston, S. C., north of the Equator, and has a climate somewhat like that of the country between Charleston and Norfolk, though drier.

Montevideo, on the northern shore of the estuary, presents in its tempe something of a contrast to Buenos Aires. Physically, it is situated so that it is one of the healthiest cities in the world, and it has an equable climate which makes it a delightful place to live in. In addition it possesses an atmosphere free from the bustle and noise of the more modern and commercial Buenos Aires and the more metropolitan Rio. Because of these features, Montevideo has become the resort city of South America's Atlantic coast. Thousands of wealthy South Americans are to be found there at nearly all seasons of the year, participating in the carnivals, gambling in the great government-owned casinos that may be compared to those of Monte Carlo, or merely enjoying the restful life of this city which still clings to the Spanish habit of looking to "manana." Since Montevideo is in the southern hemisphere its seasons are the reverse of those in the United States. Visitors are especially numerous for the bathing season which begins in October, corresponding to the northern May, and is at its height at Christmas, the southern midsummer.

Detached impressions of Montevideo will bring to mind many similes and contrasts with better known cities. Like New York it covers a narrow strip of land from shore to shore, in this case a peninsula. But in architecture it is the antithesis of the North American metropolis, being made up of a seemingly vast number of low stone buildings, a few two or three stories in height, the great majority of them but one story. The principal thoroughfare, "The Avenue of the Eighteenth of July," extending along the ridge of the peninsula, with its colonnades and sidewalk cafes, gives a touch of Paris. And as a great packing center for the live stock produced on the unsurpassed pastures of Uruguay, Montevideo is comparable to Chicago or Kansas City. Evidence of this fact is sometimes wafted on the winds when they blow to the city from the seat of the gigantic industry across the bay.

Clings to Old Customs.

In physical equipment Montevideo is modern. It is well lighted, well watered, adequately supplied with transportation facilities, and most admirably drained. Socially it clings to the past, following more faithfully than any other large city outside of Spain and the Orient the old Spanish-Moorish traditions of society's proper attitude toward women.

Courting is still carried on by smitten swains parading below the balconies of their senoritas and whispering sweet nothings to them—from a safe distance. Ladies go freely on the streets but not in the company of men. "Society is mainly a matter of family parties. Even at the opera there are separate galleries for men and women, and unless a Montevidian family man can afford the price of orchestra seats he must view the production from one level while his wife looks on from another.

A cloistered life can hardly be said to have affected the appearance of the women adversely. Throughout South America Montevideo has the reputation formerly possessed by Budapest of harboring the most beautiful women of its continent.

Montevideo has nearly a score of daily newspapers, and the voices of a small army of newsboys are heard constantly except during an hour and a half at midday when a "siesta" is enforced by law for all business. With the voices of the newsboys mingle those of youths and derelict adults hawking government lottery tickets or boxes of matches from the sale of which the government also obtains revenue.

Just as Uruguay is free from physical extremes—it is without mountains or gorges, deserts or jungles—so Montevideo is without social extremes. It has no squalid slums and no ostentatious "millionaires' row." It may not inaptly be dubbed a comfortable bourgeois paradise.

Montevideo is famed for its port which is one of the best on the Atlantic coast of the Americas. The city has a population of approximately 450,000, more than a quarter of the population of the entire 72,000 square miles of the republic.

Mathematics

Johnny's mother had been teaching him to count money and to be careful in spending it. One day he came home from an errand to the grocery with five pennies in change.

"Now, Johnny," said mother, "I will give you these pennies if you can tell me how much they make."

"Five all-day suckers," said Johnny.

THREE PERFECT DAYS

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MARGARET GRANT'S poise had a restful effect on her fellow passengers when she entered the dining car. The nervous little woman with the fretful baby relaxed somewhat as Margaret sat down beside her. Richard Adams, across the aisle, unpuckered his forehead and seemed to think better of the caustic criticism he was about to address to the ebony attendant about the length of time it took to broil a steak. Two children being piloted out stopped instinctively to smile up into the brown friendliness of her eyes and were started again on their way by impatient parents.

The nervous little voice of the nervous little woman rasped out a commonplace sentence and was answered by Margaret's velvety contralto, which made Richard Adams smooth the last faint wrinkle from between his eyes and sigh contentedly.

She did not notice the extreme deliberation which enabled him to finish just as she rose from the table, and the keen look which followed her bronze head would have been lost on her if the train had not given a sudden lurch just as she reached the door. Some one of the line waiting in the vestibule had loosened the catch that held the door, and only a quick brown hand thrust against it prevented it slamming on Margaret's fingers as she regained her balance.

"Oh, thank you," frankly looking up into a pair of surprisingly blue eyes, which would have been stern if they had not been crinkled at the corners by the action of the sun without and a sense of humor within. She felt his strong hand steady her for a necessary moment and only that.

"Making up time, I guess, and none too smooth a roadbed to do it on," she heard above the roar of the train as they crossed the space between the two cars, with its flimsy, accordion-like cover. Then he seemed to draw into himself with a reserve equal to her own. His seat proved to be opposite hers in the pullman.

She sat quite motionless, entertaining herself with mental pictures of the end of the journey, a sure-enough holiday in California, after a year of exacting hospital duty, following her graduation. The doctors whose opinion made it flattering, insisted on having her as their "special" when they could. Now she had only Jack's eager face before her and she blew him an airy radio kiss, though her hands remained idly clasped in her lap, hands whose every firm curve said, "Let me help you."

She was barely conscious of the man opposite, though she had taken a nurse's satisfaction in the ease with which he had swung his heavy Gladstone bag up before him and when he burrowed for the book which now absorbed him. Poor Jack! Never well, but so debonair and appealing that she had to love him and promise to marry him when he was better.

The next day was passing and Richard began to inwardly curse the conventions that kept them apart. "Hang it all! I suppose if I were a young sheik and she a flapper we wouldn't be miles apart. I could walk right over and tell her she is the first woman I ever really saw."

She seemed so oblivious of him, friendly only with children and never tiring of them. Her seat became a mecca for all the little chaps in her car and adjoining ones. Over the corner of his book Richard saw the most amazing toys involved from candy boxes and paper, bits of string and the most unpromising material that the children produced.

At last he could stay out of the charmed circle no longer. "I could whittle those handles a bit and then they would stay in the wheelbarrow," he volunteered, carefully adjusting the milk bottle top which served as a wheel.

"That's just what we need, isn't it, Billy?" she said, admitting him without demanding a countersign, an accurate account of his genealogy, or a letter of introduction as he felt that she might.

I saw a ship a-sailing, a-sailing on the sea,
And, oh it was all laden with pretty things for me.

she crooned to a waiting five-year-old as she ballasted a half walnut shell with softened wax and adjusted a tiny sail on its toothpick mast.

There were comfits in the cabin and apples in the hold,
The sails were made of silk and the masts were made of gold,

he finished, and they smiled in absurd freemasonry over the shared nursery rhyme.

"Why do people look for ships which they have never sent out?" she wondered.

"Because we all want the impossible," he replied, "then we are not bored by our wishes coming true too soon."

"But isn't it ironical of fate to produce what one has always longed for, when the freedom to take it is gone?" She had an odd and almost uncanny sensation of having known this man before, of having always known him. All her twenty-seven years, or at least as long as she could remember, she had wanted and expected a playmate with exactly this comradly smile she saw opposite. A year ago she had given up his ever coming, and had more than half promised herself to Jack Dunston when he left the hospital after a long illness. Now she could see that what he satisfied in her was the desire to mother something. But, oh, if she had only not let him care as he did.

When Richard Adams found she was going to California he anathematized the luck which he had just been blessing, that made his immediate presence necessary in the Imperial valley for the biggest engineering project he had yet undertaken. He must see her long enough to establish a bond that would hold until he could find her again. His practical soul scoffed at love at first sight. But his mystical side admitted the answer to her call. She summoned him and he recognized her right. No one in his thirty years had even imitated it.

When they left El Paso after a flying visit to Juarez their acquaintance had extended to the point where an unfinished phrase carried an electric thrill of understanding.

At Tucson, where he was to change, she walked along the platform with him to rest from the cramping monotony of the train. "Violet rays will never feel magnetic to me again!" she thought as her hand touched his, and the bronze and blue of his rare smile upturned to her suggested the sea or the open spaces of the desert as he helped her down the steps.

Suddenly he said: "Why, there's Brooks and his wife." A man and woman coming toward them stopped in pleased amazement and the latter exclaimed: "Why, Dick Adams; walking right out here to Arizona with my paragon after saying you never cared to meet her!"

The Los Angeles train was ready to leave.

"You must come to the Imperial valley and spend the winter with us, Margaret," insisted Mrs. Brooks, "after you have seen Los Angeles." But Margaret gave no promises. Richard Adams was content to wait.

"Hasta manana," he said as they parted, and "Hasta manana," she answered, but in her heart she felt it was "Adios."

Los Angeles and Jack came all too soon. She knew just how his eyes would caress her and envelop her. "His future and even his life may depend on me," she thought as she struggled to put out of her life forever the dream of three perfect days.

But Jack avoided her straitforward look as he piloted her to his beautiful car, and in an instant she sensed the reason. Curled up in the front seat with a charming air of possession was the most entrancing bit of flapperdom she had ever seen.

"Carol, this is Miss Grant," Jack announced, and then they proceeded to the hotel.

Then, as he settled her in her room: "Margaret, I've been a cad. Here you were expecting—" She turned a radiant face toward him, cutting him short.

"Jack, dear, I was expecting and hoping to find you well, and I am more than glad that you do not need me. I can stay only a week. Alice Brooks expects me back in Arizona for a long visit. She says it is frightfully lonely with only those tiresome engineers about."

"Well," said Carol as he swung into the seat beside her, "the old dear took it cheerfully."

"Yes," agreed Jack, "Margaret is a good sport, but, honestly, I hated to break her heart after all she did for me."

Onions Sure to Put Up Strong Case in Court

In the lawsuit between a San Francisco landlord and one of his former tenants, a dentist, to determine, whether or not a lease may be broken by fried onions, a strong case might be made for either side.

The onion is no joke. It is a vegetable to be taken seriously. It is one of the oldest of cultivated plants and is now known to have been a chief food of the ancient Egyptians. When this fact was established the mystery of how the pharaohs got the great monoliths to the upper stories of the pyramids was at once solved. In onion there is strength.

A once famous advertising slogan told us that "The world's greatest general died from eating a dish of fried onions." Later biographers of Napoleon reject this allegation as inaccurate. It isn't the man who eats the fried onions who is in danger. But if his associates will only resort to the homeopathic principle that "like cures like" they will be entirely safe and also add much to their enjoyment of life.

As a mater of fact, the onion is one of nature's most valuable contributions to cookery. By a delicate use of the onion the French have raised cooking to a fine art.

Whether the onion appears as chives, scallions, garlic or just plain onion its charm is resistless. Young women have sacrificed their hope of marriage through weakness for onions at the romantic age. Men have turned from expensive menus to feast on an onion sandwich.

The onion, as every crossword puzzle fan has found out by looking in the dictionary, is a liliaceous plant—basically a lily. Which may explain the obscure Bible passage, "Consider the lilies of the field. They toil not, neither do they spin." If those lilies were really onions they belonged to the aristocracy of plants and therefore shouldn't be expected to toil. There is, in our modern phrase, such a thing as being too strong to work.

Pretty Things that are made at Home

IF YOU liked to play with dolls when you were a youngster, you can have the fun all over again, making the very attractive "doll pictures" such as the one shown in this illustration.

In the realm of interior decoration these pictures have become quite a factor. Young girls are particularly keen about them for their rooms. For that matter they are equally as attractive hung on the walls of living room or sun parlor—it depends upon the subject of the portrait.

For his "den" a smiling little Japanese maiden dressed in gorgeous kimona brings into the scheme of things just the needed dash of color. A dimpled babe cuddled under a ceriid of flowered crepe paper in a lace-draped crib is just the thing for the nursery.

FOR THE DOLL PICTURES

A daintily arrayed maiden, whose frock and parasol are lace-ruffled, like the one in this illustration lends an atmosphere of enchantment to the young girl's boudoir. You can get the entire paraphernalia for the making of these charming pictures most anywhere, that is, at any counter where they sell fancy crepe papers for flower making and such. In other words the dealer supplies the materials in "sets" so to speak (and they are not expensive) and you do the work (it's more like play) of dressing the quaint maiden in a beflowered crepe paper frock with myriads of lace ruffles, ready for her debut in the picture, which is to hang on your wall or that of some friend whom you wish to delight with this charming gift.

You can mount these picture dolls on black velvet or black cardboard, and when framed appropriately they are a work of art craft of which to be proud.

The art of home picture making may be as variously interpreted as one may choose. A parrot of brilliant plumage made entirely of red, yellow and green crepe paper, pasted on a black velvet plaque, is a clever subject.

To the glory of the evening gown be it said that the arbitrary rules observed in the symmetrical round and V-shape decolletage of yore are ignored by present designers. Apparently, in creating the unique and attractive low-cut effects which so enhance modern formal gowns, stylists are indulging in a "poetic license" such as is the privilege of every artist who would express the beautiful whether in verse or dress.

In view of the flattering contours given to low-neck gowns, women are appearing at their loveliest in evening attire. In the lower picture is a frock the artistry of whose decollete treatment gives it an air of utmost distinction.

The decorative flowers so effectively positioned invite comment, in that they express a recent Paris vogue—made of the same material as the dress. Their construction is simple, each petal being lined with self-fabric, by seaming all about the edge. The large irregular sprawling petals are massed together, suggesting rather than definitely forming individual flowers. Several of the lately-arrived French gowns are garnitured with self-fabric flowers of this type. Particularly effective are velvet frocks in evening colors, the flowers which adorn them being made of the velvet which has been crushed so as to contrast them with the smooth-surfaced weave.

Much ingenuity is shown in the placement of flowers in connection with decollete bodices. The tendency to pose them at the back is especially noted. A very low horseshoe-curve cut at the back of a black velvet gown is emphasized by a row of white gardenias outlining it. Then again elaborate clusters or festoons are arranged in novel ways, so as to accent the back treatments now in vogue.

BEAUTIFUL EVENING GOWN

The frock illustrated, which, by the way, is fashioned of flame-colored faille combined with matching marquisette, achieves both bouffancy and the inevitable uneven hemline by the use of four shirred panels of varying lengths and widths.

Evening silhouettes may vary greatly, but one feature always maintains—that of the irregular hemline.

Corsica's Good Bandit

Banditry in Corsica does not necessarily mean robbery and murder as for many years the country was practically ruled by a recognized bandit, who permitted plunder and bloodshed only in the case of the vendetta, which was regarded as a sufficient excuse for any kind of outlawry as long as it was confined to the principals and their following. This bandit was Romanetti, whose edicts and wishes were recognized throughout the country although he had no official capacity.

Bear Wrecked Auto

The Alaska Weekly prints this story from its correspondent at Miller Creek, Alaska: "H. D. Cowden, miner, returning to his parked truck at Glacier creek, saw a bear climb through the rear door. He watched from a thicket and saw the bear take a position on the seat. One huge paw accidentally turned on the ignition and a big shambling foot pushed the self starter and with a roar the car started down the grade, bear and baggage. The bear took a flying nose dive through the side curtains and the truck came to rest in a willow thicket where it is still a pile of dilapidated wreckage."

POULTRY

CARE OF PULLETS DECIDES PROFITS

Mash, Grain and Clean Water Should Be Available.

The care of pullets makes a big difference in next year's profits or losses, says L. M. Hurd, of the New York state college of agriculture. After the pullets are twelve weeks of age both mash and grain should be constantly available in separate outdoor hoppers. Fresh clean water should be frequently provided if there is not a natural supply in the field. Unlimited grass, clover, or alfalfa range and shade, are essential for best growth.

The ability to lay is inherited, and thus depends more on breeding than on feeding; but pullets should be well developed in body before they start to lay. If the pullets seem to mature too rapidly, do not feed them wholly on grain to slow up their inclination to lay; anything that checks laying is also apt to stunt permanently the growth of the birds. Feed a mash along with scratch grain, as it is more complete in protein minerals and vitamines.

For proper fleshing at maturity it is sometimes advisable temporarily to reduce the amount of animal protein—meat scraps, milk, etc—in the mash, or to limit the amount of mash fed. The former plan is better, as it allows the birds a better chance to obtain more of the minerals and vitamines, which they need. To feed large amounts of scratch grain and mash low in protein for about a month before the pullets normally mature, tends to make them complete their development in better flesh. Experiments at the Cornell university experiment station show that pullets need a substantial reserve of fat when they begin to lay, for satisfactory production later.

Production of Quality Eggs During Summer

Summer is usually hard on the production of good quality eggs. However, there is no reason why good quality eggs cannot be produced and marketed in summer. Commercial poultrymen can do it; owners of farm flocks can, too, if attention is given to a few important points.

All male birds removed from the pens so the eggs that are laid are infertile is the first thing, since infertile eggs will not spoil so quickly as fertile eggs. Clean eggs is the next. It is always a temptation to wash eggs that are dirty so a good appearance will be given. Such eggs, however, are apt to age more readily than unwashed eggs, since there is a more rapid evaporation of the contents of the egg and the air cell becomes enlarged, giving the egg the appearance when candled of an old egg. Production of clean eggs in the first place will help greatly—have plenty of clean nesting material in the nests.

Poultry Notes

Gather the eggs twice a day.

Crowding at the feed hopper stunts the growth of chicks.

* * *

Watch for lice and mites. They multiply fast in hot weather.

* * *

Keep poultry supplied with fresh, clean water during hot months.

Green feed in the poultry yard make greenbacks in the pocketbook.

Chicks need fresh air as well as heat. Leave windows open at the top.

* * *

Hens need water. It is an essential part of the ration, poultry specialists of the Pennsylvania State college say. A shortage of water causes a decrease in the number and size of eggs.

* * *

Use plenty of feed troughs. Start the chicks by nailing a two-inch strip around a nine-inch planed board and provide such a trough three feet long for every 100 chicks. More troughs are needed as chickens grow.

* * *

Of the total cost of producing poultry and eggs on most farms, 50 to 60 per cent is feed cost.

* * *

Lice and mites breed fast these hot days. And if you don't swat 'em and keep 'em swatted, they'll sap a lot of the growth and profit out of your flock.

* * *

A brooder house on clean ground is a profitable investment providing strong, healthy chicks are put into it. Otherwise it is as unprofitable as money in a "closed" bank.

* * *

Fresh eggs contain more water than stale eggs. For this reason fresh eggs sink in water when immersed, while stale eggs float.

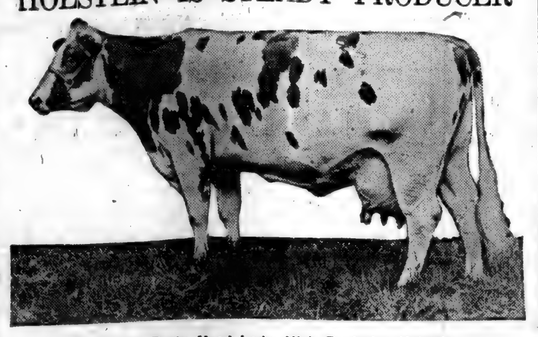
Bare spots around the henhouse are incubators to breed parasites and disease. It pays to cultivate them up and sow to something green.

* * *

Lice and mites are poultry pests which can be controlled effectively. Use nicotine sulphate for lice and creosote or carbolineum for mites. Apply the chemicals on the roosts.

HOLSTEIN IS STEADY PRODUCER



Mt. Vernon Beaty Mead Lady, High Producing Holstein.

By producing 10 gallons of milk containing 2.6 to 2.9 pounds of butterfat daily for 365 days, Mt. Vernon Beaty Mead Lady, a five-year-old Holstein-Friesian cow, owned by Carnation Milk Farms of Seattle, Wash., becomes the 98th Holstein cow to produce more than 30,000 pounds of milk in a year. At the same time, she qualified as the 137th Holstein to produce more than 1,000 pounds of butterfat in a year. This is more than four times the production of the average cow.

Feeding babies their daily milk supply would be a simple matter with such a cow as this, as "Lady" could provide 80 babies daily with fresh wholesome, easily digested milk of moderate fat content. Or she could meet both the milk and butter needs of 30 growing children or adults for a year or could keep the "soda" counter supplied with 160 milk shakes daily.

Production for Year.

The production of "Lady" is 30,049.6 pounds of milk containing 1022.4 pounds of butterfat (1,278 pounds of butter) in one year. For only 63 days did her milk production drop below 80 pounds daily, the lowest mark being 79.1 pounds and the highest 91.05 pounds. Her daily production of butterfat varied between 2.9 and 2.6 (3.6 and 3.3 pounds butter).

Marketed as whole milk at 14 cents a quart, nearly 14,000 quarts would bring $1,956 in one year. Sold as 30 per cent cream at 25 cents a half pint, this milk would bring $1,704 and in addition would provide 26,641 pounds of skim milk that, fed to 223 chickens producing eggs that sold at 30 cents a dozen, would be worth $1.27 a hundred pounds for feeding purposes and would bring the gross return to more than $2,000 for the one cow.

How steady was the production of "Lady" is indicated by the fact that as the year closed she was producing 82.6 pounds of milk containing 2.80 pounds of butterfat (3.6 pounds butter) which was her best average production during the last 10 months.

"Lady" is a good sized cow as she weighs 1,750 pounds, according to A. M. Ghormley, manager of the farms. In order to make this record, she ate 60 pounds of feed daily consisting of 8 pounds of beet pulp, 1 pound of molasses, 40 pounds of beets and mangels, and 25 pounds of alfalfa with green feed substituted for part of the alfalfa when available. This amounted to nearly 13 tons of feed in a year. In order to produce the total of more than 15 tons of milk, it was also necessary to provide more than 60 tons of water which, if carried in 12 quart milk pails, would require 6,000 containers or 16 a day.

On the national list for butterfat, Lady ranks 89th and is one of five Holsteins that have equaled this production in 1929. For milk production, she ranks 93rd on the national list of 98 Holsteins, no other cows of any dairy breed having produced more than 30,000 pounds of milk in a year.

Sketch of the Lady.

Lady was bred by R. E. Waugh of Burlington, Wash., and is now owned by Carnation Milk Farms. At the age of 4 years, 5 months, 21 days, she was credited with 500.2 pounds of milk on strictly official test containing 16.656 pounds of butterfat (20.8 butter) in 7 days. During the early part of the lactation just completed, she is credited on strictly official test with 603.7 pounds of milk containing 19.643 pounds of butterfat (24.5 butter) in 7 days. Her sire is Segis Pontiac Korndyke Mead and her dam is Lady Betting Rag Apple. A sister, Mt. Vernon Segis Walker Mead, is credited with a senior-three yearly record of 27,493.5 pounds of milk containing 823.33 pounds of butterfat (1,028.9 butter).

Fundamental Problem in Farm Electrification

The one fundamental problem in the spread of farm electrification is to get the farmer now without electricity to have it installed on his place either through the individual electric plant or the power line. The use of electricity by the greatest number of farm people in the lightening of their daily tasks and improvement of their home life is of greater importance, it must be agreed, than getting a comparatively few farmers to use an excessive amount of current and neglecting the great bulk of farms now without electricity of any kind.

Use for Combine

In harvesting small grain with a combined harvester-thresher it is necessary to wait from seven to ten days longer than when cutting with a binder in order to reduce the moisture content of the harvested grain. As the grain gets dead ripe, it dries out very rapidly, and letting it stand even a day or so longer will frequently make a big difference, resulting in a higher grade of grain produced.

Sell Pigs Early and Store New Corn Crop

Finishing Porkers on Grain Late in Fall Is Mistake.

Limiting the amount of corn fed to March farrowed pigs during the summer and finishing them on the new crop in the fall has been a mistake every year since the World war, according to records compiled by swine specialists at the University of Illinois. Without exception, the drop in hog prices between September and December has been more than great enough to offset the advantage of feeding cheaper new corn in the fall. Last year when old corn was scarce and high in price, many hog growers were tempted to carry their pigs along as cheaply as possible, waiting for the new corn crop. By so doing, statistics show that the producers saved about $1.20 a head on the ration but that they took an average of $9.56 less per head in December because of lower prices. The net loss to the producers from holding was $8.36 per head.

One of the rules followed by leading hog growers for profitable pork production is that of early marketing. The average September price for light hogs at Chicago during the years 1923-27 was $11.44, the high point of the yearly cycle. The averages for December during that period was between $9 and $9.50.

Finishing young, spring pigs on the corn crop of the year before calls for crib room or storage space on the farm. Where crib room is limited, sheet steel cribs and bins can be erected quickly and conveniently, supplying a fireproof, ratproof and weatherproof shelter for corn and small grain. Ample storage room for all crops is a valuable asset on any farm and should be supplied.

Milk for Poultry Has Healthful Advantages

Milk can be used in many ways that will be of benefit to poultry. It can be used either sweet or sour; it is really more healthful sour than sweet.

There is nothing else that will aid in keeping growing chicks in prime condition more than sour milk or buttermilk given them as a drink or used in mixing up an occasional damp mash.

Another advantage in the use of milk is that it takes the place of flesh of some kind. When milk is not used one very naturally needs to use either beef scraps, beef meal, or fish scrap.

Poultry raisers keeping cows should use every particle of milk they have to spare in their poultry feeding. If they have a good deal of milk and not enough fowls to consume it, it will pay them to increase the poultry flock in proportion.

Liberal Silage Ration Stimulates Production

In times of drouth during the dog days when the grass turns white and vegetation is hard and woody, a liberal ration of silage will stimulate large production and will keep the cows in a good condition for fall and winter production. Those who have had the most experience will tell you that the silo should be used for summer as well as winter, especially by the dairy farmer. A crop safely stored in a silo is a sure and dependable asset to the stock keeper. As for the dairyman, every test has proved that silage is a most important item in economic milk production.

Agricultural Hints

Too many chicks under one hover causes stunted chicks. Give them room.

* * *

The greater part of crown and root injury of apple trees is started by low temperatures.

* * *

Tuberculosis in live stock costs American farmers between fifty and sixty million dollars annually.

* * *

With all things considered, the cheapest source of digestible carbohydrates is found in corn or cane silage.

* * *

Next winter's fuel supply should come from dead and down trees and from crooked and weed trees. Thus will the woodlot be improved.

* * *

The farmer who needs money from hogs most this fall is the one who can least afford such a loss as cholera may inflict. Vaccination is good insurance.

PLAY IS LIFE

(By Edith L. Reid)

"Mollie won't keep her doll buggy off my train track," shouted Dave from the back-yard.

"Dave ran his train over the nice castle I built in the sand pile," defended Mollie.

Mother was baking cookies and trying to wash up a lot of dishes, and the disturbance in the yard was annoying, of course. First she called out, "Stop your noise, and play nicely."

Then Mollie came clear into the kitchen and complained, "Dave stepped on my mud pies," and Dave shouted in anger, "Well, I didn't mean to."

"Stop your fussing about little things like that," said Mother impatiently. But a few minutes later Dave reported that Mollie had stood on his red bridge and smashed it. Mother met the crisis by sending Dave to the basement for an hour and Mollie to the sleeping porch.

"You two ought to be ashamed to quarrel about nothing," was Mother's final reproof, as she rescued a pan of cookies from the oven just about one minute too late.

Probably there is no mother of a small son and daughter who has not struggled with the same problem in terms of different playthings or the same ones. But the truth is that these back-yard incidents are of supreme importance in the eyes of the children. They are not something to be swept aside and settled by a wave of the hand. What Mother calls quarreling children regard as a settlement of affairs in their world.

If the activities and complications of the playground are not the practicing of life principles, then neither are our relations with the grocer or dressmaker.

Mollie and Dave would have been fortunate if Mother had stopped to talk with them about some simple rules of play and some ideals of conduct. They might have remembered the day with greater hapiness had they lunched on graham crackers instead of homemade cookies, because Mother believed play contacts were important enough to be discussed seriously.

Play is the child's life. There is no dividing line over which he steps from the experiences of play into the field of living. Play is living. Play affairs are world affairs.

Sometimes what seem like quarrels and fights may be only a healthy exercise of moral principles. It may be that mothers would witness less physical combat if they took more time to help even small children settle things with reason and intelligence.

Children do not necessarily have to slap and push and shriek in making their adjustments to life. In truth, it is likely that there has been a serious fault in training if the normal child feels that he must tattle or kick things over or grab in order to hold his own.

Many a parent has never taken time to consider that there is a reason behind every scrap on the playground, and many a child has never been taught that there is a law to govern such incidents and a sane way to react. The sooner all children are taught this at home and in kindergarten the sooner will poise and self-control begin to dominate play affairs in the backyard.

VALUE OF EDUCATION

A study made recently by the U. S. Bureau of Education shows that all of the people in this country who have performed distinguished service and received high honors there was: One person out of each 150,000 who had no schooling; one person out of each 37,500 with a common school education; on person out of each 1,724 with a high school education; one person out of each 187 with a college education. The study shows the comparative chances of no schooling and with the diffeernt grades of education. Parents who give their children a common school education give them four times the chance to become a leader and receive distinction that the child with no schooling has. Those who give their children a high school education give them 87 times the chance, and the parents who sacrifice and give their children a college education give them more than 800 times the chance of the child without schooling.

Parents should think of this now—and next Monday see that their children are in school.

POLITICS THIS WEEK

Labor Day over and the Senate reconvened in Washington. "Sweet summer's gone away."

The first thing on the program is the resolution of Senator Elmer Thomas, Democrat of Oklahoma, to limit tariff revision chiefly to agricultural rates. It is whispered in political circles that some Democrats are likely to help defeat the resolution so that the Republicans must continue to hold the hot cake we know now as the Republican Senate bill. On the other hand some Republicans show an inclination to drop the unpleasant thing, and these may rejoice to see the resolution passed. Certainly if the resolution passes, the G. O. P. may say, "We have kept our promise to Agriculture," and the Democrats may pridefully point out to the Western voters that they have certain greedy tariff hogs. This would seem to leave no one very disappointed.

Whether sugar senators have the political strength to retain the obnoxious sugar schedule in a purely agricultural bill is questionable.

Sprinkle talcum powder generously on grease spots in clothing, rugs, etc., rub it in, let it stay on as long as possible, then brush it off. It may take several applications if the spots are large.

As An Agriculturalist Sees Farm Board's Job

The new Agricultural Marketing Act approaches farm relief from a materially different point of view from that of former bills before Congress in recent years, says Dean H. L. Russell of Wisconsin University College of Agriculture in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"It contains a new idea, fraught with the greatest possibilities—the organization of a Federal Farm Board," he says. "It has been possible for farm cooperatives to borrow from Federal-aided institutions before, and at a materially lower rate than city business men had to pay for working capital, but this is the first set-up made by the government in which a commission has been carefully chosen to give undivided attention to an effort to solve the problems of a farm group.

"It is hard to conceive of a higher degree of responsibility than must be assumed by this commission. No board ever created by congressional action has been clothed with as wide plenary powers. It is authorized not only to advise but to execute, to plan and put its plans into effective action, to buy and hold, to dump, to dip into the Federal treasury to accomplish its ends with what would be almost unlimited resources to any private commercial concern. The board's only job is to succeed, and no governmental agency even during the war time emergency had a wider latitude.

"Many will think the farm relief program will be universally applicable to the individual land owner or operator. Such procedure is far from the case. Aid is to be extended through cooperative organizations by making it possible for such groups to obtain cash advances to hold crops so as to permit of more orderly marketing.

"While the primary relation is with cooperatives, the individual or unorganized farmer will also profit by the activities of his organized fellows. If a stabilized program of merchandising is able to eliminate the surpluses that exert such depressing influence on prices the general price relation should be improved. If this occurs the individual farmer should also benefit.

"It is here the government is proposing a novel attempt in economics. Through stabilization corporations for each commodity it is proposed to make possible the handling of the surplus so as to lessen its disturbing influence on prices. With non-perishable products such a program is, of course, conceivably possible, but one wonders what would happen if a stabilization corporation had to handle a perishable crop in great quantities.

"Is it going to be possible for a stabilization corporation to stabilize? It would be one thing if it had merely to stabilize the American situation, but often that situation is complicated with world conditions. Perhaps the very fact that such a stabilization corporation is in position to function may have a steadying effect on the market.

"Markets respond to psychological stimuli as do individuals. The very fact that the government has now definitely stepped into the breach with all of its resources available to make the new plan work will exert undoubtedly a strong stabilizing effect.

"It would be presumptuous to forecast what the ultimate effect of the new act will be. It can, however, be definitely stated that in the present plan much of the philosophy that had been so drastically criticized as economically unsound has been eliminated. The existing plan is worth trying. It will undoubtedly cost the Federal treasury no inconsiderable amounts of money, but if it produces the hoped-for result it will have been well worth while."

There is more truth than poetry in about everything, but an optimist enjoys the poetry and tries to make the truth less disagreeable.

If every resident of this community would make it a practice to buy at home everything their own town could supply, what a difference it would make in local spirit and prosperity. Did you ever think of it from this standpoint?

An increase in the death rate in Indiana is noted by the department of commerce. The 1928 rate was 1,274.9 for each 100,000 of population as against 1,196.1 in 1927. The greatest increases were in the rates on diseases of the heart, cerebral hemorrhage and softening, nephritis and diabetes mellitus. Increases were shown also for influenza, pneumonia and lethargic encephalitis. The death rate from all accidental causes increased from 83.6 to 85.6, the greatest increase being for automobile accidents. Significant among the decreases in rates from 1927 to 1928 were those from diphtheria, whooping cough and acute anterior poliomyelitis. Machinery accidents showed a slight decrease.

How ready are some people to make trouble. A few days since a lady had an editor arrested for slander. It seems that the lady had lost her husband (by death,) and the poor newspaper man, thinking to do the family a great kindness, wrote an article on the man's life, in which he stated that Mr. Blank had gone to a better home. What would have been the outcome if he had written that he had gone to the other place?

If asked to name the churches and creeds exisiting in America the average man could enumerate 15 or 20, by thinking hard—a list beginning alphabetically with Adventists and ranging through the well established sects to Universalists. He would miss the mark by approximately 200, for by the most authoritative figures obtainable there are at least 216 distinct religious bodies now active in the United States. There are 19 divisions of Methodism now functioning, Baptist bodies number 18. Presbyterianism has 9 different bodies of adherents, and there are 22 kinds of Lutheran churches, 17 major bodies of Mennonites, and 7 divisions of Eastern Orthodox churches.

Mrs. Chas. Rice, of Fort Wayne, was in town Sunday calling on friends.

R. W. Brodbeck and family, of Huntington, were over Sunday guests in the Wm. Miller home, west of town.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Keesler, accompanied by their son, Henry and wife, of Auburn, spent Sunday and Monday with the former's sister, Mrs. N. L. Smith and husband at Williamsfield, Ohio.

AVILLA GIRL ACCOSTED BY MORON

Miss Bessie Sucher, age 16, daughter of Mrs. Will Ray of Avilla, is at her home at Avilla, recovering from nervous shock and bruises sustained when she was attacked last Friday night by an unknown man. She was taken to Kendallville for treatment shortly after the accident. It is thought that the moron was one with the Fitch carnival company which showed at Avilla last week. Every effort is being made to locate the party as only a faint desccription could be given.

The girl was attacked shortly after 8:15 o'clock near the town hall. After following her for a block, he suddenly grabbed her in the shadow of the town hall. Grabbing her about the neck, he attempted to choke her .Despite his threats that he would kill her if she resisted him, the girl screamed at the top of her voice. During the height of the struggle, which lasted for several minutes, Floyd Reith and family of Kendallville, turned the corner and the lights of their automobile flared on the couple. Hearing the screams of the girl, Mr. Reith rushed to her rescue, but the assailant fled and evaded capture.

MRS. C. L. WOODCOX DIES FOLLOWING BIRTH OF CHILD

Mrs. C. L. Woodcox, formerly Miss Vesta Marvin, of Garrett, passed away at her home in Youngstown, Ohio, early Sunday morning after an illnes of five weeks which followed the birth of a child. The body was brought to Garrett on train No. 15 Monday morning.

Mrs. Woodcox for two weeks after the birth of the child was in a very serious condition, but became a little better. It was thought she would recover until Saturday morning when her condition became very bad again. Pneumonia was the immediate cause of her death.

Mrs. Woodcox was born in Garrett June 11, 1899, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Marvin. After graduating from the high school in 1917 and attending International Business College at Fort Wayne she was employed in the accounting department of the Baltimore & Ohio. She and Mr. Woodcox, who is a Baltimore & Ohio yard master, were married June 7, 1928, and she went to Youngstown to join him last April. She was a member of the Eastern Stars and of the Sigma Phi Gamma sorority.

Surviving besides the husband, the baby daughter, Jacqueline, and the sister, are a brother, Howard Marvin of Detroit, and two step children, Richard Wopdcox of Garrett and Margaret Ellen Woodcox of Youngstown.

The funeral was held at the Weaver home on South Cowen street Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. The Rev. Bechdolt officiating.

LARGE CROWD HEAR QUARTET SUNDAY

It is an evident fact that things worth while, still have a pull on the people of this community as in others. Perhaps the largest crowd to a morning service, was that on Sunday, when the Pontiac Male Quartet gave one of their sacred concerts at the high school gymnasium.

A good turnout of the surrounding community boosted the record attendance and everyone appreciated the fine spirit of the men who composd the quartet.

Rev. J. N. Scholes gave a splendid talk of about ten minutes which made a fine contribution to the service. More such services should be planned and create more interest in the things worth while in our local community.

To some the service seemed to be more of an entertainment an thus more or less unnecessary noise among the children and whispering among the adults prevailed, which marred the service for those who wanted to hear.

The gymnasium was the only place to accomodate the crowd, but at the same time it detracted from the worshipful attitude.

The offering amounted to $23.90.

LIGHTNING CAUSES HEAVY FARM LOSS

Thursday night of last week, about 10:30, lightning struck a barn on the B. E. Soule farm, 3 miles south-east of Spencerville, the former Zaner farm, and set a blaze going that caused a total loss of the structure.

The building was 60x12, and contained about sixty-five tons of hay and farm machinery.

The live stock was in pasture fields and hence escaped cremation.

The loss is estimated at eight thousand dollars, partially covered with insurance.

Mr. Soule wishes to thank those who assisted in saving the property to the extent they did.

SWING BREAKING INJURES GIRL

Lenna Fern Myers met with quite an accident last week at the C. R. Grounds home, just west of Rehoboth. She was swinging, when the ropes broke she fell striking her head on the cement walk. She was rendered unconscious for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Myers arrived at the same time the Auburn doctor arrived, and they were much worried over her condition, fearing a fractured skull. She has improved, however, so as to start to school. A severe scalp wound over the right ear was the result of the accident. No stitches were taken.

Indiana inventors last week were granted twenty-three patents by the United States Patent Office, according to statistics compiled by Clarence A. O'Brien, Washington patent attorney. The grants which were distributed generally through the state, represent a wide diversity of inventive genius.

Where Manchurian War Clouds Are Heavy

Swedes Return to Homeland From Russia

What is believed to be the largest wholesale return of "prodigal sons" ever recorded took place recently in Europe. About two hundred years ago a group of dissatisfied Swedes left their homeland and trekked to South Russia to make their future homes. Here the colony thrived and flourished to more than a thousand. However, since Russia turned Red the colonists, who had kept their identity without mixing a drop of Russian blood in their veins, began to get disgusted with the way things were going in their adopted land, so recently they decided to return to the land of their fathers and they went back in one huge train, whose arrival in Sweden is here shown with Red Cross nurses meeting it.

Lesson for September 15

TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD

GOLDEN TEXT—The entrance of thy words giveth light.
LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 8:1-18.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Studying God's Word.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Studying God's Word.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Finding Joy in God's Word.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Call for Trained Teachers.

This lesson is a fine illustration of the rightful place of God's Word in the life of a nation. The only certain cure for national ills is a return to God and obedience to His Word.

I. The Word of God Being Read (vv. 1-3).

1. The eager assembly (v. 1).

The people gathered themselves together and requested Ezra to bring the book of the law.

2. A representative assembly (v. 2).

It was made up of men, women and children. The men did not leave the spiritual affairs to the women, neither were the children left at home. The Spirit of God can speak through God's Word to the whole family sitting in the pew.

The lesson lasted for five or six hours, from morning until midday.

II. The People's Attitude Toward God's Word (vv. 4-6).

1. Due reverence shown (vv. 4, 5).

When Ezra opened the law, all the people stood up out of respect for God's Word.

2. They joined heartily in the prayer (v. 6).

As Ezra led them in prayer, they joined heartily in saying, "Amen, Amen," bowing their faces to the ground.

III. God's Word Being Interpreted (vv. 7, 8).

The attitude of the people toward God's Word largely depends upon the minister. Proper dignity and solemnity should be manifested by the minister when reading the Holy Scriptures.

1. He stood up where the people could see him (v. 5).

2. He read distinctly (v. 8).

3. He caused the people to understand the reading (v. 8).

IV. The Effect of Applying God's Word to the Life of the People (vv. 9-18).

1. Conviction of sin (v. 9).

The Word of God is quick and powerful (Heb. 4:12). It brings conviction of sin (Acts 2:37). The divine method of convicting men of sin is to have God's Word applied by the Holy Ghost.

2. Weeping turned into joy (vv. 10-12).

When sins have been perceived and confessed, there is forgiveness. God desires forgiven sinners to enter into the joy of forgiveness. Continued mourning will not atone for sins that are past, unfits one for present tasks, and dishonors a pardoning God. Besides, joy has a salutary effect on one's entire being. "The joy of the Lord is your strength" (v. 10).

3. Blessings were shared with others (vv. 10-12).

True joy manifests itself in giving to others; pure religion goes out to minister to the poor (Jas. 1:27).

4. The people obeyed (vv. 13-18).

From the reading of the Scriptures, they found that the Feast of Tabernacles had long been neglected. They proceeded to keep this sacred feast in a way that had not been observed since the days of Joshua (v. 17). In the keeping of this feast they dwelt in booths, thus typifying their pilgrim character and bringing to remembrance the days of their wilderness journey.

V. Separation from the Ungodly (Neh. 13:1-3).

As soon as they had heard the Word of God, they separated themselves from the mixed multitude.

VI. The House of Worship Was Cleared and Order Restored (Neh. 13:4-14).

No nation or people can be strong which neglects the worship of the true God.

VII. Restoration of the Sabbath (Neh. 13:15-22).

Israel had long violated the Sabbath. To ignore the essential law of the Sabbath is national suicide. Unnumbered evils follow in the wake of the desecration of God's Holy day.

VIII. Restoration of God's Law of Marriage (Neh. 13:23-31).

When those who had intermarried with the heathen were brought face to face with their sin, they separated themselves from their ungodly companions.

Magnetic Power of God

God's word of old, given through His prophet Isaiah, was for the multitudes without the gate, and remained now as ever: "I am found of them that sought me not." Strait is the gate indeed, but it is ever an open gate; and the Heaven behind is too full of love divine for any barrier to constrain it. Many an erring human soul has been drawn to the gate unawares, despite its folly of blindness, by the sheer magnetic force of God's unfailing love within.

VIVID PLANTINGS NEAR FOUNDATION

Add Greatly to Pleasing Exterior and Cover Detail.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Shrubs and other plantings near the foundation brickwork of a house add greatly to a pleasing exterior. They soften the building lines, conceal ugly or uninteresting details, add color, and, if spaced and arranged to advantage, beautify the entire yard or front lawn. Home demonstration agents in many states, working with farm women on general home improvement, have given considerable attention to the possibilities of improving the exteriors of rural homes. As a result, it has often been possible to identify the homes of members of home demonstration clubs because of the charm obtained through well-selected shrubbery, window or porch boxes of bright flowers, hanging fern baskets, and other inexpensive, easily procured decorative plants. Flower shows and lawn and garden competitions have done much to awaken interest in attractive surroundings, and an indirect result of this interest is often a greater interest in her own personal appearance, on the part of the farm woman whose home setting has been improved.

This photograph, taken by the United States Department of Agriculture in Hertford county, North Carolina, shows a number of these features suggested by the extension agent. The low shrubs near the brickwork have been used to screen the porch foundations without interfering with the effect of the gay flower boxes that take the place of guard rails on the veranda. Reasonable care will keep this exterior planting in pleasing condition all through the growing season.

Eggplant With Sausage Cakes New Combination

Here's a good combination of flavors and for some people, a new way of using eggplant. The bureau of home economics suggests this method of preparing it:

1 large eggplant
1 lb. sausage meat
¾ tsp. salt

Wash and pare the eggplant and cut it into cubes. Form the meat into flat cakes and brown on both sides in a heavy skillet. Remove the meat, pour off the excess fat, add the eggplant and salt, and let the eggplant cook in the fat for about ten minutes. Then put the eggplant in a shallow baking dish, place the sausage cakes over it, cover, and cook in a medium oven for about 30 minutes, or until the eggplant is tender. Serve from the dish in which cooked.

Covering Creosote Stains

Creosote stains on walls are hard to do anything with and it is pretty hard to keep them from showing through after a time. About the only thing one can do is to cover them with two thin coats of shellac, then size and paper or paint over them in the usual way. Two thin coats are better than one heavy one, as the tendency for the shellac to peel is not so great.

DOMESTIC RABBIT GOOD YEAR ROUND

Different From Cottontail With Its Limited Season.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Relatively few housewives in the eastern part of the United States are acquainted with the delicious flavor of domestic rabbit meat. Most of them have been accustomed to think of rabbit in terms of the cottontail rabbit, which is available only during a short open hunting season, or of the jack rabbit, which is generally considered more of a pest than an article of diet. Domestic hutch-raised rabbits may be eaten the year round, and there are now hundreds of domestic rabbit farms throughout the country where the animals are being raised for the market. The rabbit-raising industry is most flourishing in the West, particularly in California, but increasing interest in it is developing in the Eastern states also.

Hutch-raised rabbits are carefully bred and fed for table use. They eat rolled cereals, alfalfa hay, and leafy vegetables. The nature of their food makes the meat sweet, tender and excellently flavored. It can be better compared with chicken than with wild rabbit. Rabbits raised in small hutches or on fur farms are cleanly in habits and can be produced under sanitary conditions.

Just as with poultry or with various cuts of meat, young, tender rabbits may be fried or roasted, while the older ones require longer, slow cooking. The bureau of home economics has co-operated with the bureau of biological survey in conducting experiments in the various methods of preparing domestic rabbit meat for the table and makes the following recommendations:

Young, tender rabbits may be fried or broiled, or if just a little larger than the frying or broiling stage, smothered according to the method Southern cooks use for chicken. The older, larger rabbits may also be used for short orders by parboiling whole, then cutting into pieces suitable for serving, and frying in batter. Or they may be simmered and served with dumplings or used in chop suey or salad in the same way as chicken. Recipes will be furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture upon request.

Fresh Tomatoes Served in Many Different Ways

While fresh tomatoes are in season, one may fry innumerable good ways of serving them without having to duplicate the dishes one prepares in winter time with canned tomatoes. Tomatoes every other day at least, all summer long, differently served, will assure the family of an abundance of vitamines and a certainty of appetizing flavor in the menus. Try these broiled tomatoes on toast with bacon for lunch on a warm day. The recipe is from the bureau of home economics.

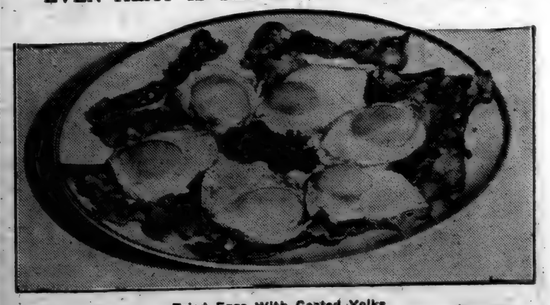
5 firm ripe tomatoes
½ lb. sliced bacon
Butter
Salt
Pepper
8 slices buttered toast

Cook the bacon until crisp in a skillet or under the flame of the broiling oven. Drain on paper. Wash the tomatoes and remove a thin slice from the stem end. Cut the tomatoes in half and put them in a shallow pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and dot with butter. Cook in the oven until softened and then place them under the flame of the broiling oven until browned. Remove carefully and put on the golden-brown, buttered toast. Arrange the bacon around the toast; garnish with parsley and serve at once.

To Keep Silver Neatly

It is easier to keep your flat silver put away in an orderly fashion if the spoons, knives and forks each have their own compartments. Some of the new chests of drawers have, as an interesting innovation, small drawers at the top in triangular arrangement to hold flat silver. These take the place of the usual large, single silver drawer.

EVEN HEAT IS SECRET OF FRYING EGGS



Fried Eggs With Coated Yolks.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Moderate, even heat is the secret of frying eggs so that they are tender and tasty, as it is of cooking all egg dishes. While any well-flavored fat may be used for frying eggs, ham and bacon drippings are prime favorites. Moderate temperature is likewise the secret of cooking ham and bacon. Do not let the fat become so hot as to smoke and produce scorched flavors in the drippings and disagreeable odors in the kitchen, warns the bureau of home economics. Whatever kind of fat is used, have it moderately hot when the eggs are slipped into it, and cook slowly and carefully over a low fire. The eggs may be turned so as to cook them on both sides, or some of the hot fat may be dipped up and poured over the yolks until a coating is formed. When the white is delicately jellied the eggs are cooked enough. The white should not become tough.

An egg fried in a little butter makes an excellent hot toasted open-faced sandwich. After the egg is slipped onto the toast, pour over it the melted butter from the skillet. Cooked until firm throughout, an egg fried in butter can be shredded fine to make a palatable garnish for soup, spinach, or other dishes.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By The Baroness Orczy

WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. The Scarlet Pimpernel is really Sir Percy Blakeney, popular London dandy. The failure of Lauzet, revolutionary chief of the section in which the Scarlet Pimpernel has been operating, to prevent the escape of the Tournon-d' Agenays brings the condemnation of the government upon him. He causes the arrest of the Desese family on a charge of treason. Lauzet announces that the prisoners are to be taken to Paris under a feeble escort, hoping to lure the Scarlet Pimpernel into an attack on the coach.

"Now," he said very earnestly to him, "you know just what you are going to do? You realize the importance of the mission which is being intrusted to you?"

The officer nodded in reply. He was a young man and ambitious. The task which had been allotted to him had fired his enthusiasm. Indeed, in these days, the capture of that elusive English spy known as the Scarlet Pimpernel was a goal for which every young officer of gendarmerie was wont to strive; not only because of the substantial monetary reward in prospect, but because of the glory attached to the destruction of so bitter an enemy of revolutionary France.

"I will tell you, citizen," the young man said to Chauvelin, "how I have finally laid my plans, and you shall tell me if you approve. About a kilometer and a half before the road emerges out of the wood, the ground rises gradually, and there are one or two sharp bends in the road until it reaches the crest of the hill. That part of the forest is very lonely, and at a point just before the ground begins to rise I intend to push my mount on for a meter or two ahead of the men, and pretend to examine the leaders of the team. After a while I will call 'halt' and make as if I thought there was something wrong with the traces. The driver is such a lout that he and I will embark on a long argument as to what he should do to remedy the defect, and in the course of the argument I will contrive to slip a small piece of flint which I have in my pocket under the hoof of one of the coach horses."

"You don't think one of your men will see you doing that—and perhaps wonder?"

"Oh, I can be careful. It is done in a moment. Then we shall get on the road again, and five minutes later that same coach horse will be dead lame. Another halt for examination, this time near the crest of the hill. The lout of a driver will never discover what is amiss. I shall make as if the hurt was serious, and set myself the task of tending it. I thought then, subject to your approval, of ordering the troopers to dismount. I have provided them with good wine and certain special rations in their knapsacks. At a word from me they will rest by the roadside, seemingly heedless and unconcerned, but really very wide awake and keen on the scent. The diligence will the while be at a standstill, with doors shut and curtains closely drawn, but the six men whom we have stowed inside the coach are keen on their work, well armed and, like hungry wolves, eager to get their teeth into the enemies of France. They will be on the alert, their hands on their pistols, ready to spring up and out of the coach at the first sign of an attack. Now, what think you of that setting, citizen," the young officer concluded, "for luring the English spies into a fight? Their methods are usually furtive, but this time they will have to meet us in a hand-to-hand combat, and, if they fall into our trap, I know that we can deal with them."

"I can but pronounce your plan admirable, citizen captain," Chauvelin replied approvingly. "You have my best wishes for your success. In the meanwhile citizen Lauzet and I will be anxiously waiting for news. We'll make a start soon after you, and strike the bridle path through the forest. This gives us a short cut which will bring us to Epone just in time to hear your news. If you have been attacked, send me a courier thither as soon as you have the English spies securely bound and gagged inside your coach."

"I'll not fail you, citizen," the young captain rejoined eagerly.

Lauzet, who had stood by, anxious and silent, whilst this colloquy was going on, shrugged his shoulders with a show of philosophy.

"And at worst," he said, "if that meddlesome Scarlet Pimpernel should think prudence the better part of valor, if he should scent a trap and carefully avoid it, we would always have the satisfaction of sending the Desese family to the guillotine."

"The English spies," Chauvelin rejoined dryly, "will not scent a trap, nor will they give up the attempt to rescue the Desese family. This is just a case to rouse their ire against us, and if it prove successful, one to flatter their vanity and redound to their credit in their own country. No," he went on thoughtfully, "I have no fear that the Scarlet Pimpernel will evade us this time. He will attack, I know. The only question is, when he does are we sufficiently prepared to defeat him?"

"With the half-dozen excellent men whom I have picked up here in Mantes," the young officer retorted, "I shall have nine under my command, and we are prepared for the attack. It is the English spies who will be surprised, we who will hold the advantage, even as to numbers, for the Scarlet Pimpernel can only work with two or three followers, and we shall outnumber them three to one."

"Then good luck attend you, citizen captain," Chauvelin said at the last. "You are in a fair way of rendering your country a signal service; see that you let not fame and fortune evade you in the end. Remember that you will have to deal with one of the most astute as well as most daring adventurers of our times, who has baffled men that were cleverer and at least as ambitious as yourself. Stay," the Terrorist added, and placed his thin, claw-like hand as if in warning on the other man's arm, "it is impossible, even for me who knows him as he is and who has seen him in scores of disguises, to give you any accurate description of his personality; but one thing you can bear in mind is that he is tall above the average; tall, even for an Englishman, and his height is the one thing about him that he cannot disguise. So beware of every man who is taller than yourself, citizen captain, however innocent he may appear, take the precaution to detain him. Mistrust every tall man, for one of them is of a surety the Scarlet Pimpernel."

He finally reminded the young captain to send him a courier with the welcome news as soon as possible. "Citizen Lauzet and I," he concluded, "will ride by the bridle path and await you at Epone. I shall be devoured with anxiety until I hear from you."

The men were not nervous, not at first. They were merely excited, knowing what awaited them, both during the journey and afterward by way of reward. If they were successful there would be for every man engaged in the undertaking a sufficiency to provide for himself and his family for the rest of his life. The capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel! Half a dozen magic words in truth, and they had spurred Citizen Captain Raffet and his squad with boundless enthusiasm. They felt no discomfort either from tearing wind or driving rain. With eyes fixed before them they rode on, striving to pierce the mist-laden distance where the enemy of France was even now lurking, intent on that adventure which would be his last.

It was long past five o'clock when the diligence with its escort reached the edge of the forest. What little daylight there had been all afternoon was already beginning to wane; the sky was of a leaden color, heavily laden with rain clouds, save way behind in the west, where a few fiery, crimson streaks cut through the clouds like sharp incisions, there, where the setting sun still lingered in the autumn sky.

Dodo Easy Victim of Greed and Ignorance

The dodo, often spoken of as a prehistoric bird, is said to have been in existence during the time of Charles I. But it has since been extinct a matter of 200 years, which gives force to the tag, "as extinct as the dodo."

The bird was known only in Mauritius, and soon after the Dutch colonization in 1598 its proverbial fate fell upon it. It was a large fowl. It could not fly, and even at walking or running it was slow and unwieldy. To top these handicaps to its self-preservation, the dodo was, unfortunately for itself, good to eat. Its destruction came quickly. Though the colonizers might have remembered that you can't eat your dodo and have it, and taken steps to insure its continuance, hungry men are not far-sighted. Moreover, the destruction of the dodo was no doubt hastened by the dogs, cats, and swine which accompanied man in his migrations.

Nature Will Out

The gods were once disputing whether it was possible for a living being to change its nature. Jupiter said "Yes," but Venus said "No." So, to try the question, Jupiter turned a cat into a maiden, and gave her to a young man for a wife. The wedding was duly performed, and the young couple sat down to the wedding feast. "See," said Jupiter to Venus, "how becomingly she behaves. Who could tell that yesterday she was but a cat? Surely her nature is changed." "Wait a minute," replied Venus, and let loose a mouse into the room. No sooner did the bride see this than she jumped up from her seat and tried to pounce upon the mouse. "Ah, you see," said Venus, "nature will out."—Aesop.

Passport Annoyances

Few things that governments do are as silly and generally annoying as the handling of passports.—Woman's Home Companion.

DOTS, PLAIDS, CHECKS POPULAR; CONTRASTS STRESSED FOR FALL

AN ATTRACTIVE SPORTS COSTUME

WOMEN sensitive to the subtle changes which mark the progress of fashion are choosing polka dots, stripes, plaids and checks rather than floral prints for fall. Weaves of every description lay stress on these patternings.

Such interesting novelties are highlighted as plaid velvets, plaid satins and plaid taffetas. Jacket suits of plaid velvet with tailored satin for the blouse, are among the joys in prospect, also for smart semiformal daytime dresses of either plaid satin or taffeta. Satin plaided in blended colors being much newer than taffeta one naturally feels a more spontaneous urge to make it first choice. Satin-back silk moire overprinted with a variation of a plaid makes its appearance among dressy fabrics.

For sports wear jersey, flannel, crepe and sheer woolens also reflect the influence of dotted, plaided and striped themes. Younger matrons and girls are especially keen about jacket suits made up of patterned sports fabrics which accounts for the attractive sports costume of a printed crepe of dot motif which youthful and ever-smiling Barbara Kent wears "between acts" when her presence is not demanded before the movie camera. A jacket suit of this character is well tuned to autumn needs.

A further point of interest stressed in this attractive suit is the use of bows. To live up to the mode of the moment one cannot escape bows. The jacket in the top picture fastens with bow ties—two of them. Bows which tie are especially featured in connection with yokes, the necklines of the new frocks often being thus stylized.

Then, too, the blouse which ties at the left hip with a soft bow occurs throughout advance displays. Whole flocks of little bows are used for trimming the new modes, which answers the call for "dressmaker" touches even on semi-tailored garments.

Referring again to stripes, plaids and dots not only do they flourish in the very fabrics which fashion the dress or ensemble, but they often add an accessory touch. That is the hat, the scarf, the bag, subscribes to their design. According to all reports fabric hats which contribute to the ensemble costume are diverting the talent of French milliners to a new line of endeavor, and for these types very novel weaves are employed.

When solid color and gay print meet each other half way, the result is a striking contrast, which is exactly what fashion has set out to accomplish for the coming season.

The frock in the picture below eloquently bespeaks the trend to contrasts which is so emphasized in incoming modes. This fetching model has a red and blue printed top, which is ingeniously seamed to a navy blue rayon skirt.

Instances of half-in-half fabric treatments are repeated throughout the advance style program. A favorite maneuver is to join a circular flounce of plain fabric to a long slender, fitted princess top of gay colored print completing the idea with a graceful cape collar of the plain.

In this connection it may be well to remark upon the increasing interest shown for dresses which adopt molded princess lines at the top which develop into smartly contrasting flares about the knees. There is no doubt about it the dawn of an entirely different silhouette is at hand.

CONTRAST IN COLOR AND FABRIC

As to aforementioned color contrasts which feature print versus plain, perhaps in no direction is this vogue so persistent as in the fall jacket-suits and ensembles. The new materials especially encourage such fabric manipulation as a plaid velvet skirt and jacket with a satin waist coat or a striped jersey blouse with a tweed-like jersey suit. Perfectly stunning frocks work printed plaid satin together with plain, for plaid and stripes expressed in terms of satin are the last word in the fabric realm.

For dressy afternoon wear a blouse of the new metal dotted chiffon contrasts handsomely with a black velvet suit. Georgette semi-fitted frocks are frequently enriched with flare and even plaited flounces of transparent velvet in the new daytime modes.

SOME PEAS!

Locust Samson had been born and reared in the backwoods, and was a grown man before he made his first visit to the city. He went to a hotel for dinner and, as an appetizer, was served a dish of large olives. Locust looked them over carefully and then motioned for the waiter.

"Ah don' wants ter bothah you," he said in an awe-struck voice, "but ah'd shoah like to see de pods dem peas come in."—Open Road.

SMALL BILL

Hubby—What have you got to pay for that canary bird?

Wife—Oh, the bill for that kind of bird is very small.

Brave Boy

"I cannot sing the old songs,"
She sang, with face awry;
"And since you can't," said brother,
"I wish you wouldn't try."

Jury No Place for Him

Judge—Why are you so sure this man is disqualified for jury service when you haven't even asked him a question concerning his views?

Lawyer for the Defense—The fact that he looks actually intelligent ought to convince you that he doesn't belong on a jury, your honor.

The Big Expense

His Son-in-Law-Elect—What do you consider the heaviest item of your household expenses?

Old Longwed—According to my wife's expense account "sundries" cost me more than all the rest put together.

Valuations

"Aren't you sorry for a man who has to pay alimony?"

"Not if the woman is homely," answered Miss Cayenne. "Whatever the alimony may be, the man is likely to feel that he is getting off cheap enough."—Washington Star.

WHAT STOPPED HIM?

She—Don't you dare kiss me—or I'll slap your face.

He—Don't think it's fear stops me.

New Responsibilities

This world is rather funny
As legacies redouble.
With every bunch of money
You get a bunch of trouble.

The Price of Peace

"Pa, what's hush money?" asked the kid.

"It's the ten you give a wife so she can go buy what she wants and quit gabbing about how abused she is," growled his dad.

Mental Dyspepsia

Gertie—Poor Bertie! I'm afraid he suffers from matrimonial dyspepsia.

Reginald—What's that?

Gertie—Oh, you know—his wife doesn't agree with him.

Makes It Different

"No, I cannot train you for the stage, you have no voice."

"But I would willingly have trained and paid three times the fees."

"What? Say that again. Your voice sounds better already."—Der Wahre Jakob.

Puzzled

"I've come to the conclusion that women are puzzles."

"So have I; in fact, I've had to give several of them up."

HOME EDUCATION

The Child's First School is the Family"—Froebel.
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

FREEDOM NECESSARY FOR GROWTH

(Elsie F. Kartack)

The apartment below me was rented. I realized this as I opened the lower hall door, for these words greeted me, "Daddy will slap you, John, if you touch his cigarettes again."

"A child!" I exclaimed to myself, "cooped up in that three-room apartment."

It was several days before I saw John. He stood on a chair looking out of the window trying to find something to interest him. His downcast little face lit up at my smile and he tried to hold me with some baby exclamations. I judged from the glance that I gave him that he was less than two years old and had just mastered the art of walking—at the age when everything is new and interesting, the age when his own powers were just becoming known to him. I passed on my way with my heart full of pity for the child.

"But why," you may ask, "was this child to be pitied? Was he not the child of parents who could provide him with the proper food and clothing to make him comfortable and even give him many of the luxuries of life?"

Yes, but could you live with me a few days and hear, as one does hear living in such close proximity with neighbors, you would understand why, provided, of course, that you understood the needs of little children. From the time when I return from my work at four until I retire, I hear the same statement, with variations, that I heard the day that they moved in. "Daddy is going to slap you if you touch that," or "Take your fingers off," or "Stop bothering us," or "Go away."

With life just beginning, with everything new and interesting, a child must touch something, must investigate, must do something to develop his new-found powers. In a three-room apartment there is not much room to develop even the muscles of his little body without getting in someone's way, to say nothing of developing his intellectual powers through investigation, without trespassing upon some of the property of his parents.

Even the radio seems to have more rights than he, for its voice is heard all the time, disturbing the child's rest, wrecking his disposition. In the evening when there is company, there is no place far enough from the chatter and the radio, in the small quarters, to allow him to sleep!

Occasionally the door into the hall is left ajar and the the child escapes, raises his voice to the limit and kicks up his heels for pure joy, like a colt that has been long tied in the barn. But it is a short-lived respite, for he is quickly caught and brot back with "You know you must not make a noise here." For it is a rule that anyone with a noisy child cannot remain.

Would not a wise and understanding mother wish to sacrfiice her select neighborhood and janitor service for a little house on the outskirts where her child could have a yard in which to play? Would she not willingly sacrifice her sense of ease and comfort and elegance for a home less pretentious but more roomy so that her child might have a place to keep his toys and to play with them unmolested in the daytime and where he could sleep undisturbed at night?

HUBBY'S GOOD POINTS

A PSYCHOLOGIST, speaking on that important matter of getting along with people, says that we should "bring out each other's centers of attraction and not harp on the areas of repulsion."

That's so true that it's worth reducing to plain language, and it means simply this: In everybody we know we find centers of attraction and areas of repulsion—the things we like about them and the things we don't—usually the things we have in common with them and those in which we are not sympathetic; in other words, perhaps those matters on which they agree with us and those on which they do not!

Now, if there are sufficient "centers of attraction" to make us like them, then we want to get along with them—husbands included. And the way to get along with them is to bring out their "good points," so to speak.

What the psychologist means by bringing out centers of attraction and not harping on areas of repulsion is just this: If you marry a man who shares your taste for books, but has a positive aversion to music, make the most of your common interest, but don't drag him to highbrow concerts. If your husband is a perfect lamb except at the card table, where slight provocation drives him into a violent temper, it would be wise, unless you are an expert and could not possibly give him cause for irritation to avoid being his partner at bridge. If he is the kind of man who can't be a passenger in an automobile without seeing faults in every move the driver makes, particularly if that driver is his wife and the car is his own, a wise woman would do her driving when he is not in the car.

If anyone dares to remark that this advice is merely affirming the obvious, that all that I have mentioned is only common sense and the situations such that only a fool would take the course which is sure to make trouble for herself—then I call upon the thousands of women who constantly find themselves doing just that to stand up and defend me! There seems to be an evil jinx that leads many wives into deliberately creating situations that will bring out the worst side of their husbands' natures, or anyway what the psychologist calls the "areas of repulsion," that emphasize the differences in their tastes or viewpoints or dispositions, so causing friction where there might be harmony and creating reefs and shallows for their marriage ship.

The worst part about touring, for a city-bred man, is the terrible coffee you encounter. There is as much difference in coffee as there is between a sport writer's slang and the editorial page.

There goes a sedan loaded with everything but the chandeliers. And a big car carrying the dog. Can't see any sense to that.

Bees are so smart. I wonder why they have so much trouble flying out of an automobile. They fly in easily enough.

Why We Do What We Do

by M. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE FALL FOR FLATTERY

THE story of the fox and the crow is one of the best known of Aesop's fables. A crow, having stolen a bit of meat, the fox spoke to the crow thus: "How handsome you are! And I have heard that the beauty of your voice is equal to that of your form and feathers. Will you not sing for me, so that I may judge whether this is true?" The crow was so pleased that she opened her mouth to sing and dropped the meat which the fox immediately ate.

From ancient times it was known how human beings fall for flattery. This trait has been the subject of much satire. Now and then we find a person who flatters himself into the belief that he is not subject to flattery. It is very doubtful if any normal human being is entirely immune to flattery. It is all in the way the dish is served.

Flattery coming from a superior or from one whose opinion or affections we cherish will be that much more effective for the simple reason that we like to believe the statement as true even when we know that it is false and mere flattery.

We like flattery for the same reason that we hate to be scolded or have our faults spread abroad. It is quite significant that we speak of a conceited person as having a swelled head or of "swelling with pride." Pride and flattery are expansive. They "blow up" the individual just as the opposite "takes the wind out of one's sails" and the ego collapses like a toy balloon with a hole in it.

We fall for flattery because of innate conceit, because we like to hear nice things about ourselves, because we are only too eager to believe good things concerning our own personality, because we are self-centered, and being social animals we like to get the praise of our fellows.

THE GOLDEN RULE

CONFUCIUS, by his teachings endeavored to assure peace and prosperity to the empire of China. He proclaimed a golden rule which was, "Whatsoever you do not wish done to you, do it not to another." If you do not want to be robbed, do not steal. If you do not want to be murdered, do not kill. In other words, let everybody alone and they will let you alone. You will receive just what you give. This negative precept, which was the spirit of all the teachings of the sage of China, failed to bring a national security sufficient to assure the prosperity and peace Confucius so greatly desired. In the very nature of the case it could not, for it advocated "isolation" as the most important principle of life.

L. A. Barrett.

Any theory of life that is to stand the test of time and bring ultimate peace and prosperity must be positive and not negative in character. We have such a philosophy of life taught by the World's Greatest Teacher whose golden rule was just the opposite of the one by Confucius, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." If you wish to receive kindness, express kindness to others. "Give to the world the best you have and the best will come back to you."

A rule of life applicable to individuals is likewise applicable to communities and to nations. In our international relations for many years we have been struggling for peace. We fought the greatest war in modern times thinking we would attain it, but we discover that we do not possess it. The experiences encountered in this struggle have taught us some lessons. Certainly we discovered that peace cannot be obtained by any rule or contract which eliminates human relations. A negative attitude toward life will never assure peace. "Do not fire at an enemy if you do not wish to be fired upon," will never bring peace. We have been endeavoring to have peace by spending large sums upon armies and navies with no definite result. Why not try a theory of life which was advocated by the world's greatest teacher? Why not emphasize in our international attitude the same spirit we wish expressed toward ourselves? Suppose we spend less upon preparations for war and more upon methods that will bring about a feeling of good will. Why not substitute for a negative attitude a constructive program that will remove suspicion and stimulate mutual trust, confidence and dependence? If half the money spent upon armaments had been spent upon creating good will we would have had an international peace long ago.

THE GREAT BIG MAN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE TALK about the great big things:
The great big pile of gold,
The great big men, financial kings,
The great big jobs they hold.
Well, son, I've seen some great big men,
But, when I came to call,
The big men weren't talking then
The great big things at all.

The man who had the great big mill
That had the great big trade,
I found, my boy, was making still
The little things he made;
And men who made the big machines
To stand the great big test
Were spending time and spending means
To make each part the best.

The man who looks for great big things,
Just great big things to do,
To no endeavor ever brings
The thing that puts it through.
The man who nothing leaves to guess,
Who every part will scan,
Will make the great, the big success,
For he's a great big man.

Mother's Cook Book

Being a parent used to be one of the most simple, natural and inevitable developments in the world. But nowadays, one has no business to be married, unless, sleeping and waking, one is conscious of the responsibility.—Abraham Flexner.

THE SCHOOL LUNCH BOX

FOR many weeks in the year some mothers find the lunch box for the children is an added burden to the morning duties. Milk and sandwiches are the usual wholesome contents of the child's lunch box. But sandwiches may become very monotonous, if the fillings and breads are not varied.

Dried fruits offer a change from routine fillings and they combine well with peanut butter, cream cheese and cottage cheese and the sandwiches keep fresh and moist longer than those with drier fillings.

The special sandwich loaf is a convenience, as all the slices are the same size. In using the home made loaf, care must be taken to put together adjacent slices or they will not fit. All bread should be at least twenty-four hours old to cut easily. Many lik to spread the butter on the loaf, then cut. Whole wheat bread, graham, bran and steamed brown breads combine well with dates, raisins and figs in the filling.

Have a bowl of softened butter, that is, butter which has been allowed to stand in a warm room to soften, or which has been creamed. If the rounding loaf of home made bread is used, spread the loaf with the butter, and the next slice with the filling. It is far better to leave the crusts on bread given children as they need both the browned crusty edges because of their wholesomeness and it promotes the chewing habit which is so vital to healthy teeth and gums as well as good digestion. The following are a few fillings using the date which will be found most agreeable to the children:

Date and Cheese Sandwiches.

Take one-pound loaf of bread which will cut into twenty-four slices. Use one cream cheese or half cupful of cottage cheese. To the cream cheese add one to two tablespoonfuls of cream. Cut twenty-four dates into quarters lengthwise, spread one slice of bread with softened butter and the next with cheese. Into the cheese press four of the quarters of dates, cover with the buttered slice.

Cream cheese with candied or maraschino cherries in the same amount as the dates, makes a very tasty sandwich.

MANCHURIA

Bridge of Chinese Eastern Railway Over the Sungari.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

MANCHURIA, whose important east-west railway, the Chinese Eastern, has been the bone of contention between China and Russia, is an empire in itself. The state of Texas along with New York and Pennsylvania might be fitted into Manchuria and still leave enough room for New Jersey. In this domain of vast size is a mixed population of Chinese, Koreans, Japanese and Russians which numbers between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000. So near to China's swarming deltas and Japan's overcrowded islands, it is still a land of great open spaces. This is a significant fact in Manchuria politics. For a while Japan and China competed by sending in streams of immigrants; but in late years the Chinese stream has become dominant owing to its lower scale of living.

This northern dependency of China is shaped like a giant jaw tooth whose roots touch the Great Wall where it reaches the sea and whose crown forms the south bank of the Amur river. This tooth is the wedge which separates Russia and Mongolia on the one side and Japanese Korea and the narrow strip of Russian territory along the Sea of Japan on the other. It is a land where empires meet, and, having met, build railroads.

Manchuria is better served in the matter of railway lines than any other part of China. After the treaty of Portsmouth, which ended the Russo-Japanese war, the railways were divided. Japan took over matters in the root of the tooth and Russia those in the crown. So it stood until a few weeks ago when the Chinese ousted Russian railway officials and seized the line. Japan still maintains her own rights in the leased territory surrounding Port Arthur and Dairen and along the railway concession running north almost to Harbin.

Dairen, Manchuria's chief seaport, has been largely Japanese built and resembles other cities of Japan except that it is worked out on a more modern and magnificent scale. Its docks and harbor equipment are comparable with the great seaports of the world.

Harbin, the metropolis of the north, is purely Russian. It lies on the banks of the Sungari river at the point of change from trans-Siberian trains to the southern connections with Peiping and Tokyo. Harbin now shelters great numbers of exiles from the old regime in Russia.

Mukden the Focal Point.

Mukden, the provincial capital, lies in the plains of central Manchuria and is the focal point of three empires. Here the Chinese and Japanese and Europeans each have their distinct cities, three in one. Modern Japanese business and residential blocks surround the railway station where the traveler from Chosen (Korea) or Peiping alights. A disreputable vehicle with lines reminiscent of old Russia bears the tourist through a straggling European quarter to the gates of the high-walled Chinese city two miles away. Japanese, Russians and Chinese meet but do not mingle.

The Japanese quarter is a splendid example of colonial efficiency. Streets are straight, broad and hard paved. Bazaars are filled with the latest products from Japanese farms and factories—luscious yellow persimmons, dainty tea sets, and gorgeous flowered cotton kimono cloth done up in one-garment bolts. There are hospitals, schools and police stations, electric lighted and presided over by the latest products of the imperial educational system. Over the railway station is an excellent European style hotel, complete with brass beds and tile baths.

A short drive in the rickety Russian droskie and all is changed. The air grows heavier with strange odors. Gray brick Russian houses straggle along a bumpy road bordered by open drains, with millet and sweet potato fields stretching beyond. Occasional recently built Chinese structures give the appearance of new patches on an ancient garment.

This is the so-called international settlement and is well named. Wretched looking white Russian refugees abound. Korean women smoke their pipes in half-open doorways. Occasionally European consular compounds form islands of respectability; the American consulate, occupying a series of large and gaudy temple buildings, being particularly imposing, while a stately Georgian structure upholds the dignity of Great Britain.

Suddenly the carriage winds through a towered and tortuously curved gateway in the wall of the Chinese city. Uneasy smells increase into a distinct malodorous certainty. One-storied gray brick, gray tiled houses line a deeply rutted roadway. Blue cotton clothes are worn with the monotony of uniforms. Cheerful, unwashed yellow faces flow past in continuous streams. Perpetual and strident bargaining fills the air. Coat balls, sweet cakes, fly swatters and boiling tea water are hawked with shrill cries and ringing bells.

Given Up to Trade.

Such is the ancient Manchu capital from which the dynastic throne was moved to Peiping in the Seventeenth century, after the Manchu conquest of China. The huge palace of the successors of Genghis Khan still dominates the city with its gaudy emptiness, and tombs of Manchu rulers with columned halls and curving eves brood in lonely magnificence in forests outside the city walls.

These few heirlooms from a historic past lie like soiled jewels in the mud-colored monotony of a dirty commercial city. Modern Mukden is wholly absorbed in trade. Lying in the center of a rich agricultural plain, it forms the meeting point of two great railway systems. One, running east and west, connects Tokyo and Chosen (Korea) with Peiping; the other north and south joins Port Arthur and Dairen to the Trans-Siberian railway. A monument to its commercial importance as well as to fallen soldiers is the modest war memorial of the Japanese heroes who fell in the historic battle of Mukden during the Russo-Japanese war.

Although in the same latitude as Chicago and Boston, Mukden has a rather severe climate of the so-called "continental" type. Winters are long and cold; summers short but torrid. The hot season, however, ripens surrounding miles of beans and giant sorghum, making Mukden the bean cake and bean oil market as well as the alcohol distilling center of North China. Cold winters bring a season of intense activity in the fur market. Buyers from the New York fur houses bargain with traders from the North for all sizes and grades of skins from dog to marten and from Siberian squirrel to Manchurian tiger.

Surrounding coal mines furnish abundant supplies for a bustling railway center. On the other hand water is comparatively scarce for a large part of the year. The relative disproportion between these two elements is probably responsible for the grimy complexion of Manchuria's somber but seething capital.

Land of the Soy Bean.

Manchuria, like new England, is the land of the bean, this time the soy bean. Beans, bean oil, and bean cake, or leavings from the oil presses, are chief exports.

The soy bean's rise from obscurity, only 20 years ago, to its present importance, is a wonder of modern commerce. Today its products, manufactured by the wholesale at Mukden, are shipped all over the world. Not only does the soy bean provide a sauce which is the worcestershire of China, but it also masquerades as cheese, candy, fertilizer, flour, and oil for lighting and lubricating.

The Japanese use it widely as the basis of confectionery. In this form it is highly palatable and the Japanese consider their candies and pastries more wholesome than ours—indeed they are appalled by the quantity of sugar which Americans consume.

Dairen, just north of Port Arthur, on the Liaotung peninsula, exported in one year nearly 150,000 tons of bean oil, and most of this came direct to the United States. Many of the ultimate consumers thereof probably were no more aware that soy bean oil was the basis of a delicious mayonnaise dressing than that hair-seal oil was an important ingredient of the bonbons they ate after dinner.

The region generally referred to as Manchuria really comprises three provinces of China, which are Taitsikhar, Kirin and Liaotung. The latter, which also is known as Shing-King or Fengtien, is the most southerly and gives its name to the peninsula where Port Arthur and the Japanese reservation are located. It was here that the encroachments of Russia, in 1898, brought on her war with Japan.

Chinese in Manchuria are, as a rule, not native sons. They have immigrated hither from all parts of China, driven from their homes by war and famine. The recent shortage of food and political turmoil in Shantung have sent millions of farmers and laborers from that province alone.

A DOSE OF HER OWN MEDICINE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

HESTER POOL laid her hand on her son's shoulder and, bending down, looked anxiously into his face as he sat leaning his head upon his hand.

"What's the matter, dear?" she asked. She knew it could not be any kind of a sick feeling that was bothering her boy; he was never sick, nor had an ailment of any kind since he was ten and came down with the measles. No, it was not sickness, so it must be trouble, and she wished to share it, if doing so would make it easier for him.

Jerry slowly threw his head back and looked with his clear, honest hazel eyes into his mother's blue ones, a long look as if he were weighing the matter. Then pulling her gently by the hand he drew her down upon his lap. To see them thus you would never have dreamed that Jerry had once been so small that Hester could cuddle him in her arms, such a little body as she was now and he such a great one. Splendid described Jerry Pool—splendid of health and stature and character, a man in a thousand. Nobody knew this, however, so well as Hester herself.

"Well, I'm going to tell you, mother," he said. "It is Eve."

Hester stirred.

"Eve Radnor?"

"Yes."

There was a silence with ever widening circles of thought, as after a stone drops into water. At last Hester spoke.

"Won't she have you?"

Jerry drew a long breath.

"That's just where the trouble lies. She will neither have me nor let me go. It has gone on like this for three years and I am just about crazy. I—I think a lot of Eve." His throat clicked as he repressed a sob. "I don't know what makes her act so. She seems to like me, at least she doesn't show any signs of wanting to give me up. I hate to think she is playing with me when all the time there is somebody else—"

Hester sighed and arose from her knees. She stood beside him with her hand fussing with his rich dark hair. In her heart was a rising resentment against the woman who could not appreciate the excellence of her son. With all her beauty and grace Jerry was too good for Eve Radnor. Eve was not the wife Hester would have chosen for her son, but if he wanted her he must have her. Things went deep with Jerry, they had always gone deep with him. He had never loved anybody but Eve and never would love again in that wonderful way. If Eve stepped out of his life he would change from the joyous, adorable, dependable personality that was now his. Hester foresaw this change, which only comes from a severe heart shaking and resolved to prevent it if she could.

"Well," Jerry started up, "this won't buy any rag dolls for my babies." It was a jocular expression of his and never failed to make his mother smile. I must be getting to work, little motherkin." He put his arm about her and kissed her, seized his hat and tried to go away whistling as usual.

And as usual Hester tried to do her morning's work, but her mind was busy and her heart heavy. She sighed many times and the culmination came when she dropped a blue teacup and broke it.

"What shall I do?" she asked herself. "Go to the girl and talk it out with her? No, I don't believe that would do any good. I wish I could think of some way of bringing her to a decision. If she refused Jerry outright it would be better than what she is doing now. I believe I know where the real trouble lies; there isn't any competition for Eve in this heart game she's playing. Jerry is hers for life and that is all there is to it. If there was some other girl as good looking or if he'd show some interest in some one—but there isn't anybody he could be made to look at in this town but Eve."

At that moment the door bell rang. Hester went to the door, opened it and saw standing before her a radiant young being in smart traveling clothes with a bag in her hand.

"Mrs. Pool! Do you remember me? I'm Lucy Latimer!" she cried.

The daughter of one of Hester's oldest and dearest friends, a girl whom she had not seen in three years and who had changed from a long-legged schoolgirl into a glowing young beauty. Inspiration came to Hester even as she held out her arms.

Lucy was on her way to visit a friend in the Berkshires and had only stopped for an overnight's stay with Mrs. Pool at her mother's request. How to keep her longer—long enough for Eve to see her—that was the problem with which Hester immediately began to struggle.

Really it was Jerry's invitation added to hers that resulted in Lucy's consent to remain three days. She had only to write to her friend explaining the delay.

That afternoon Hester took Lucy and showed her to several friends. They met Eve and the girls were introduced.

"Are you staying at Mrs. Pool's?" Eve asked.

"Yes. Jerry and she simply wouldn't let me go," Lucy laughed.

That evening Hester gave a party for Lucy. Her invitations rallied in all the young people whom both she and Jerry knew. Ice cream and cake furnished refreshments and a phonograph furnished fox trots and other dances, executed on the hardwood floors from which Lucy and Jerry had snatched the rugs. Jerry stayed home from the office and he and Lucy did errands in his roadster. As a consequence Mrs. Appley called up: "Who is that charming young girl Jerry's riding round with? I saw them talking to Eva Radnor." Talking to Eva Radnor! Thank heavens.

The party was a great success. Jerry as host had to dance often with Lucy though she was besieged with partners. Never had any one looked so gloriously dazzling as Lucy with her flaming hair and rose-pink cheeks and sparkling eyes. And the gown she had brought out of her traveling bag, mere wisp of embroidered georgette though it was, had not its counterpart in any dress there. Eve, dark, cool, slim, was thrust into the background at once—and stayed there. Hester watching her was almost sorry for her.

"Eve's getting a dose of her own medicine," she overheard two girls say. "She has always made the rest of us feel like 30 cents with her clothes and her looks. I wonder how she likes to stand back and see Jerry devote himself to another girl?"

Once Hester's heart missed a beat. Could it be that Jerry was as fascinated as he appeared to be with lovely Lucy?

Next day just before she left Lucy took Hester into her confidence.

"I've enjoyed this visit more than the one I am going to make at the Burrells," she said. "I shall be on review there, for you see I'm—I'm going to marry their son. Rupert is having my ring made to order. I told Jerry the very first thing."

So Jerry had known all the time! Well—

When after dinner Jerry made ready and went out, Hester guessed that he was going to Eve's. Maybe he would have something definite to tell her when he came back. She decided to wait up.

He came in quietly, came to her and kissed her.

"Eve and I are going to be married in three weeks," he said. "She sent for me to come tonight and I knew that I'd get an answer of some kind. Still, I can't think what's changed her so quickly."

Hester looked at him. No! He did not know. But she knew. She laughed softly.

Yallingup Caves One of Australia's Wonders

Yallingup, the site of the noted Yallingup caves, is usually referred to as West Australia's wonderland. As one approaches this resort from Busselton the view that greets the eye is that of sea and country. The hills about are covered with green bushes of all shades, while the beach is very unusual because of the little bars of sand which have been formed, inside of which are pools of translucent water, breast-high, clear, warm. The water as it breaks on the creamy sand is a clear blue-green, leaving a rainbow effect as it recedes. The sand and sea seem constantly to be changing color; for now the sand is pink and the water blue; a moment later the sand is mauve and the water pink.

From the rocks along the shore one can see the fish swimming in the translucent water of the pools. One need seldom complain of ill luck, for the fish can be had for the asking. A bit of octopus almost invariably gets a response.

However, it is the wonderful caves found here which make Yallingup famous. The story is told how some twenty-five years ago a young man was riding through the scrub when his horse put his foot on the edge of a hole and just escaped a fall. The rider was naturally curious to inspect the opening, and, jumping off the animal, lowered himself into it. He took with him a handful of "black boy," which is a tiny little tree, highly resinous and producing an effective light.

The man found himself, after a drop of 30 feet, in a veritable dreamland. He saw stretching before him a new world of stalactites and stalagmites, looking like gracefully draped shawls hanging from the roof. These formations have come about from the continuously dripping water through the sandstone. When lighted from behind they are magnificent to look upon, being of soft cream color, with golden brown streaks through them.—New York Times.

The Golf Widow

George Von Elm, golf champion, said at a Newport luncheon:

"Golf widows are always complaining about their golf-mad husbands. Well, I heard a good one on a golf widow the other night.

"Her husband brought a friend home to dinner after a day on the links, and the two men naturally talked golf. When dinner was over the golf widow went upstairs to put her little ones to bed. She came down in about an hour, and as she walked into the dining room she heard her husband say something about 'a hole in one.'

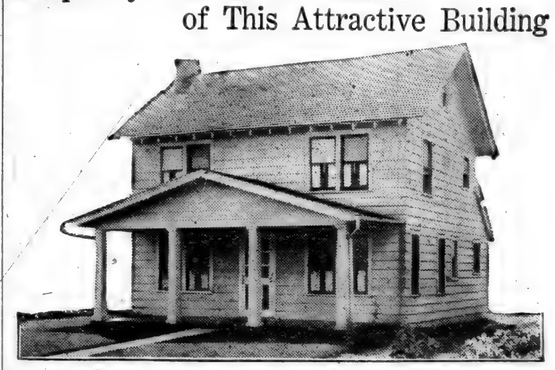
"'Good gracious,' she moaned, 'are you still talking about golf?'

"'No, dear,' said the husband, 'I'm talking about socks.'"

Or Playmate

Betty Parkins, age four, was being taught the names of the birds frequenting the garden. One kind she was told was the cardinal or red bird and its mate. At a later time seeing one of the birds she said: "Mother, is that a red bird or its playmate?"

Simplicity One Good Feature of This Attractive Building



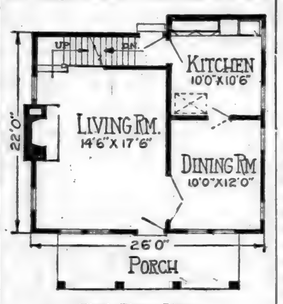
So many houses are being built without porches these days that many will welcome a design offering an ample front porch with all the summer evening comforts that it suggests as an outdoor living room almost as large as the indoor living room itself.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Simplicity is one of the good features of the home building design shown in the accompanying illustration. But what will be most interesting to the prospective home builder is the fact that this house can be built for a minimum sum.

The house is not large, being 22 feet deep and 26 feet wide. It contains five large rooms. How these rooms are arranged and the sizes of each are shown in the floor plan reproduced with the exterior view.



First Floor Plan.

This house is of a simple construction set on a concrete foundation with clapboard siding. It is what is known as a two-gable house. The wide terraced porch with the artistic pitch of porch roof and the exposed roof rafters give it an attractive exterior appearance.

The exterior arrangement is rather unusual. The entry door leads into one corner of the living room, which is 14 feet 6 inches by 17 feet 6 inches. This room occupies one end of the house. At the other is a dining room at the front and the kitchen directly back of it. An open stairway running out of the rear of the living room leads to the second floor where there are two bedrooms and bathroom. The size of these bedrooms will appeal to a great many prospective home builders as one is 11 feet by 17 feet 6 inches and the other is 10 feet by 14 feet 6 inches. Both are corner rooms. Because of the pitch of the roof there is an unusual amount of closet space on the second floor.

For the small family this is an exceptionally good design.

Green and White Good Colors for Bathroom

The bathroom, like the kitchen, has suffered in the past from stereotyped color schemes.

It is a fairly safe wager that out of ten houses nine have bathrooms tiled or painted in white, with an occasional spot of blue in rug, towels or curtains. Blue and white, while an excellent and refreshing color combination, has its limitations, chief of which is its commonplaceness. Green and white, yellow and white, blue and cream are just as appropriate and much more distinctive.

In planning the bathroom it is desirable to consider high gloss enamel and board for the walls, especially when tile of the desired color and quality is beyond the family pocketbook.

Wall board can be had in tile design, and high gloss enamel, with its infinite color range, is washable and impervious to steam and heat. It looks well, wears well and costs but little—three items of importance to the builder of a modern small home. If tile can be had, however, apply the same principles of decoration as when paint is used.

Tile or wall board is used as a dado, reaching about half way up the wall. The rest of the wall is painted or enameled. The woodwork usually is finished with high gloss enamel. This gives considerable latitude in selecting a color scheme. Should a white dado be preferred, the wall above might be painted pale green.

White woodwork, to match the fixtures, is ordinarily used. A bright-colored rag rug is always attractive in the bathroom, and, instead of the usual white curtains, some of green and white gingham might be used to advantage.

An attractive bathroom is one whose walls are painted pale gray and whose curtains and other accessories show tones of red, orange or yellow. One of the most attractive bathrooms in recent model houses was one in which the wall board tiling was used. This and the woodwork were painted white.

The walls above were painted deep cream, with a stenciled border of conventional flower design in rose, blue and green separating the dado and the walls. Chintz curtains, repeating these colors, hung at the window, and on the floor, which was painted blue, was a cheerful little braided rug.

One of the most interesting experiments in modern homes and modern decoration is the varied use of color. It is as though homemakers had suddenly discovered that their most helpful and faithful ally in the creation of a beautiful and distinctive home is color, which costs little and contributes much.

How Both Ends of Paint Brush Work

Everybody knows that a paint brush is made up of two main parts—the bristles that spread the paint and the handle that the painter grasps. What may not be so apparent is the wisdom of knowing in any painting job just what is going on both the handle end and on the bristle end.

At the bristle end of the brush we have the materials for the work to be done, the white-lead, linseed oil and tinting colors. These must be mixed and tinted to the individual taste and applied in such a manner as to insure a satisfactory and lasting job, and it is in this end of the work that the competent painter proves his worth, and in the long run pays for himself.

Some people upon deciding to have a room decorated or a house painted, think first of how cheaply the job can be done instead of taking into consideration the fact that in the long run the painter who charges a little more and guarantees a perfect job is by far the cheapest painter of all.

Good painters, men of reputation, are forever on the lookout for new ideas in decoration, for means of doing the work so that it will last longer. And although as a result they may charge more they will invariably stand back of the work after it has been done.

Therefore although almost everybody can handle a paint brush after a fashion it is well to bear in mind that a brush has two ends, and that to obtain the best results the quality of the materials and the reputation of the painter must both be given first consideration before price enters into the painting plans.

Four Points Necessary to Perfect Architecture

Architectural perfection in a building is based upon four general requirements, and the more complete the fulfillment of these requirements the more certain it is to be architecturally good, C. Julian Oberwarth declares in Architectural Progress.

"The first of these is utility, or fulfillment of the purpose for which it was intended," says Mr. Oberwarth. "The second is expression, or the way the design suggests the purpose, materials, construction and general plan arrangement. The third is soundness of construction, or the durability of the materials, knowledge and ingenuity in their uses and engineering perfection in assembling; and the fourth is beauty of design.

"Each of these requisites of good architecture is dependent upon the success of the others, and unless all four have been taken care of in a successful manner the building is not an architectural success."

POULTRY

CULLING METHODS QUITE IMPORTANT

Much Money Lost Each Year by Unskilled Manner.

All the good methods in building a profitable poultry flock may be followed but if culling is not practiced, the results are disappointing.

"Culling is one of the most discussed phases of poultry work," says C. F. Parrish, poultry extension specialist at the North Carolina State college. "There is a great deal of money lost each year on unskilled and ill-timed culling. Most poultrymen are elastic in their culling practices, leaving weaklings, short and round backed birds, deformed or undersized chicks with the hope that these may develop into profitable birds. This is bad. Such birds are always costly. Culling must start with the baby chicks and space may be saved and disease eliminated if the baby chicks are rigidly culled."

This culling needs to be followed on through the growing stage and when the pullets are transferred to the laying house in the fall, the good poultryman will pull out the weaklings that may have been overlooked earlier. If egg production drops suddenly, it may be a case of poor feed or disease but when birds have gone eight months and have not laid, it means that they are from low-producing stock and should be disposed of.

The laying flock should be culled at least once each month, says Mr. Parrish. Then when egg prices drop in the spring, another rigid culling should take place with only the best hens in the flock kept in the laying house. The virtue of this plan is that the hens are marketed as they become culls and no birds are kept that are not paying their way in egg production. In such cases, also, the hens are not all dumped on the market when prices may be low.

To cull properly, Mr. Parrish suggests giving attention to the comb, health, eyes, molt, pelvic bones, flexibility of the abdomen, shank and beak, vent color and weight.

Rape Sometimes Used as Green Poultry Feed

Rape is sometimes used as green feed for poultry and the field will probably be all right as a goose pasture. In the fence corners and possibly throughout the field, there will be more or less other green plants and pasture grasses which will serve to vary the ration.

Some poultrymen have cut rape and used it for green feed for penned flocks on limited ranges. They plant it in drills and do not cut below the crown so the green feed can be harvested several times during the summer.

Geese will thrive on almost any kind of pasture grass that a cow will eat and will eat almost any grass or vegetable or growing plant that chickens will eat. Most goose breeders do not use rape for pasture, however, but keep the geese on clover pasture land or on low grassy areas not used for crops.

Profitable to Market Cockerels as Broilers

Those who have been advocating putting the cockerels off as broilers rather than keeping them longer in order to get more weight on them will be interested in the findings of the New Hampshire Agricultural college. After numerous experiments, they have satisfied themselves that it takes but seven to eight pounds of feed to produce a broiler weighing two pounds, while it takes anywhere from 12 to 20 pounds of feed for each succeeding pound up to six pounds. It is self-evident then that it does not pay market poultry men to hold their cockerels to get the six pounds in weight.

The poultry editor has always been advising you to get rid of your cockerels long before they eat their heads off, so to speak.

Gains for Chicks

Chicks make the cheapest and most rapid gains when they are young. It is therefore essential that an ample amount of good wholesome food be kept constantly before the birds. Mash hoppers should be of sufficient size so that a large majority of the chicks can eat at the same time, thereby avoiding the constant fighting and crowding for room to eat. The outdoor mash hopper of adequate size is very desirable for developing the young stock. All feeding utensils should be kept clean.

Grasshopper Control

Turkeys are a great aid in keeping grasshoppers under control. They require little feed and little investment in the way of buildings. Their need of a wide, free range makes it somewhat difficult to grow them in thickly settled countries. Grown turkeys are extremely hardy, but young poults need considerable care. A little water on the feathers, cold feet, a bit of spoiled food, or even one louse, will kill them at this stage. Poults should be watched until well feathered.

Dispose of All Surplus Fowls

No Profit in Holding Cockerels Longer Than Twelve Weeks.

All surplus males, indeed all of the cockerels whether they are to be raised or not, should be removed from the company of the pullets before they are old enough to become bothersome. On most farms it is the custom to sell the males at the age when they weigh about 2 pounds each. Chicks that are hatched before the first of April bring good prices at the 2-pound stage. This should be by the time they are 10 or 12 weeks old, or earlier. Many grow good broilers of 2 pounds in eight weeks, sometimes in six.

No Profit in Holding.

There is no profit in holding the cockerels longer than 12 weeks, unless they are to be kept for breeding purposes, or to supply a special market. I know of a number of poultry men who supply motorists chicken lunches and dinners during the summer and early fall. These men make a good profit by holding the cockerels to a later date, sometimes to the age of four or five months, because they can dispose of them at a large price to the traveling public, says a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. Poultry men who are located on main-traveled roads should consider this method of making larger profit from their flocks. It is a field of endeavor not yet overcrowded.

Cockerels to be kept for breeders should be removed to a separate house and range. If there happens to be but one good range available, let the pullets have it. It is of more importance to them than it could possibly be to the cockerels. However, it is a good plan to take good care of the males. Remember, they are responsible, jointly with the females, for the future welfare of the flock.

Grow Good Pullets.

There is one last rule that poultry men should observe in endeavoring to grow good pullets. Be careful in changing them to the laying quarters. I would house the birds just before they start laying or as soon as a few eggs are found. Do not delay the matter, as they learn to hide the eggs in out-of-the-way places; also, and most important of all, never house the cockerels with the pullets. It is time enough to introduce males when hatching eggs are needed a year later.

Fattening Turkeys on Range Is Proper Plan

In getting the turkeys ready for market it is a good thing to begin feeding a little night and morning about the middle of September.

The feed should be very light at first and the amount gradually increased until about ten days before marketing, when they should be given all they will consume three times a day.

In the beginning equal parts of wheat, oats and corn may be given, but the proportion of corn should be gradually increased until the last of October, when they should be fed on corn alone.

As a usual thing, results are not satisfactory where the birds are confined during the fattening period.

Advantages of Broccoli Over Cauliflower Plant

Broccoli, says a "Vegetorial," in the Journal of the Market Garden Field station, Massachusetts Agricultural college, has two distinct advantages over cauliflower, which it closely resembles. The grower is almost certain of a crop of broccoli even under rather adverse circumstances. Then, too, after the terminal head of broccoli has been removed, side shoots continue to develop, which carries the crop through a long season, from July to freezing weather. The vegetable is increasing in popularity in this country. The variety, Christmas Calabrese, is a satisfactory one to plant.

Plants Not Forced Will Endure Low Temperature

Garden vegetables such as cabbage, tomatoes, etc., will endure lower temperatures and greater extremes of drouth without injury, after transplanting, if grown more slowly in the forcing bed than is customary. Such vegetables grown in a seedbed of sandy soil, low in plantfood, watered sparingly and ventilated freely, have large fibrous root systems, short, stocky, firm, woody stems and a concentrated sap of low freezing point.

Vegetables grown in a seedbed of rich soil, highly manured, abundantly watered and in a high temperature with little ventilation, have scanty root systems.

Feeding Soy Bean Hay

Soy bean hay may be fed to dairy and beef cattle and sheep and, to a certain extent, take the place of linseed meal or other similar concentrates used for balancing the grain ration. To illustrate, a ration for a dairy cow composed of 20 pounds soy bean hay, five pounds ground corn, four pounds ground oats and one pound linseed meal, contains as much digestible protein as 20 pounds sudan grass, four pounds corn, and three pounds linseed meal.

Ethylene Gas Speeds Ripening of Tomato

Found to Be Effective Accelerator by Growers.

Tomato growers who wish to hasten the ripening of their crop to take advantage of early markets will find treatment with ethylene gas an effective accelerator, according to Dr. R. H. Harvey, agricultural botanist, University Farm, St. Paul, inventor of this process which has recently been granted a patent. Many wholesalers and commercial growers now are using the ethylene method of ripening with notable success.

All that is necessary in the way of special equipment is a suitable room or chamber and a tank of ethylene gas equipped with a simple flow meter. The meter, plus enough gas to treat several carlonds of tomatoes, will cost only about $30. The gas cost is negligible, ranging from about 40 cents to $1.00 a carload. The room or chamber should be closed off so as to make it practically gas tight. An ordinary plastered room, or cellar room, will work satisfactorily, providing cracks around windows are closed with adhesive tape and if it has a fairly tight fitting door. Some means should also be available for maintaining a temperature of from 65 to 80 degrees Fahrenheit.

Tomatoes should be picked when they are beginning to turn or when they are fairly well along toward maturity. In no case should they be picked so green that more than four days is required to ripen them by the gas process, Doctor Harvey says. They may be placed in the ripening chamber in baskets, crates, or other containers.

Storage Buildings Above Ground Are Now Favored

Most new common storage buildings for apples are being built above ground with insulated walls and ceilings. The floor is usually left as earth to keep fruit from shriveling in storage. Slatted floor racks of barrels are often used over the earth. Intake openings are cut at intervals of 10 to 12 feet around the building just above the floor level. These openings are usually 18 by 20 inches or larger to permit easy intake of air without too much loss from friction. Many storages in the past were built with intake openings too small to let in the cool air quickly at favorable times for ventilation and cooling. The total area of the intake openings is usually in proportion to one square foot of intake space to 700 cubic feet of storage volume. Stacks for outlets are built up through the roof. These are usually 3 by 4 feet or larger to permit free movement of air. They are placed about 20 feet apart the length of the building. The outlets are usually designed to figure at least one square foot of area to each 1,200 cubic feet of storage volume. It is a good fault to make them a little oversize.

Growing and Fattening of Hogs During Summer

The growing and fattening of hogs in the summer time without the use of some good pasture crop is usually an uneconomical practice. A saving of from 15 to 25 per cent of the total amount of grain and supplements may be expected through the use of forage. It may even be possible in some cases with an abundance of legume forage to obtain fairly satisfactory gains for a time on forage alone, but the greatest returns will be obtained when grain is fed in addition to the forage at the rate of three or four pounds per day for each 100 pounds live weight. When the grain feed is very much limited on pasture, naturally less grain will be used in making the early gains, but as in the experiment cited above, eventually a total of more grain may be required to finish the hogs and the time required will be longer.

News Gathering Both Simple and Effective

Life in the highly sophisticated South Sea isles is by no means as newsless as one might hazard by measuring the number of miles separating them from Fleet street (writes a globe-trotting correspondent). The Papeete planters have bestowed the pleasing name of coconut wireless on the means by which their wives and daughters keep up with all the news that really matters. Every sun-up the native maids meet at the market-place and pool the previous day's domestic log while they do the forthcoming day's shopping. These reporters bring back their gleanings to the housewife news editors, who publish to their yawning spouses, over the breakfast coffee, "All the News That's Fit to Print" (and a great deal that isn't). In consequence, what every family does not know about every other family can positively be sprawled across the head of a pin.

When Authors Are Rich

Upton Sinclair, the novelist and radical, was complaining about the poor pay accorded to authors.

"When I hear that an author is rich," he said, "I always think of Sinnickson.

"I met Sinnickson, the famous novelist, in my youth.

"'Yes, oh, yes, I am a rich man,' he told me.

"'How did you acquire your fortune, Mr. Sinnickson, if I may ask?'

"'At a single stroke,' said Sinnickson.

"'Of your pen?' said I.

"'No; of my paralytic aunt,' said he."

Human Mineral

A large deposit of vermiculite, a recently discovered mineral, has been found near Libby, Mont., by a prospector. This substance, flaky and mica-like in appearance, is unique in that it exhibits human characteristics when brought into contact with heat. Upon introduction to a flame the mineral commences to twist and writhe as if making an agonized attempt to escape the burn, meanwhile giving off drops of water apparently perspiration caused by its violent effort and the heat.

Soy Bean Human Food

By a new process perfected by Dr. L. Berczeller of Vienna, Austria, soy beans may be made into a meal for human food. The patented process makes the bean of the Orient palatable and preserves it. It may be used by bakeries, confectioners, canners, sausage makers and health food producers, and is said to be especially effective in preparations for diabetics.

H. P. Douglas, an English naval officer, has, by means of a contrivance known as the sonic depth finder, devised a way to locate sunken treasure. FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

Four Large Ponds being Added to Riverside Hatchery

The State hatchery in Riverside Park is being enlarged at present by the addition of 4 ponds, each of an average size of about an acre. When completed the hatchery will have 30 ponds, and be one of the largest of the kind in the country. The combined number of ponds at all State hatcheries, including the ponds above mentioned, will then have been increased to 77. This is an increase of 48 in the number of ponds constructed since 1919, the year in which the Department of Conservation was established.

SCHEDULE MADE BY COUNTY NURSE FOR THE MONTH OF SEPTEMBER

The executive committee of the DeKalb County Red Cross held its monthly meeting in the Red Cross office of the court house Tuesday morning. The new public health nurse, Miss Edna Grabiel, R. N., began her work in the county on that date. It was decided that the present health activities of the county Red Cross would be continued and would be carried out along the plans that have been so successful in the years past with the school health program under the direction of the Red Cross and County Nurse.

Miss Grabiel has outlined the schedule for September. It is similar to the schedule of last year. In order to distribute the nursing program somewhat evenly over the different parts of the county, and for the sake of convenience, the territory will be divided into districts and a week of each month will be spent in each district. The following will be the grouping of townships into districts:

No. 1.—Union, Concord, Newville and Spencer.

No. 2.—Franklin, Troy, Wilmington and Stafford.

No. 3. — Fairfield, Smithfield, Grant and Richland.

No. 4. — Keyser, Jackson and Butler.

Miss Grabiel's first week in the county will be spent in getting acquainted with the county and meeting the local and health and school officials. As soon as the county schools begin, the school inspection program will commence. The schedule beginning September 9th is as follows:

Sept. 9, Fairfield township, No. 7 and 6; Sept. 10, Ashley; Sept. 11, Waterloo; Sept. 12, Corunna; Sept. 13, West Richland; Sept. 14, Office; Sept. 16, Butler township, No. 6, Jackson township No. 9 and 4; Sept. 17, Jackson township No. 5, 6 and 8; Sept. 18, Garrett Central; Sept. 19, A. M., Garrett parochial, P. M., North Ward; Sept. 20, St Johns; Sept. 21, Office; Sept. 23, A. M. Spencerville, P. M., St. Joe; Sept. 24, Newville township, Sept. 25, A. M., Riley school P. M., DeSoto school, Auburn; Sept. 26, Regional conference of Red Cross chapters, Huntington; Sept. 27, Harrison school, Auburn, Sept. 28, Office, and Sept. 30, Troy township, No. 1 and 2.

Miss Grabiel states thaat she is pleased in finding the health work of county so well organized She is especially pleased with the national recognition that the health program which was carried out in Waterloo last year is receiving. "The Red Cross Courier" of Sept. 2, 1929 has published a lengthy article telling of the Waterloo health contest. It is quite an honor for one of the schools of DeKalb County to receive such recognition for its school health program.

A number of the teachers are already planning health projects for their schools this year. The "Health Crusade" as a project has been carried on in some of the schools for quite a number of years and teachers are already ordering their supplies from the local tuberculosis association for this year's "Health Crusade."

BANKING FINDS THE WAY TO SAFER ERA

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS,
American Bankers Association

In considering the banking situation throughout the country, the fact should be kept in mind that while one bank in ten failed during the past eight years, it is far more important that nine banks out of ten, operating in the same general field, serving the same communities and meeting almost identically the same problems, weathered the economic storm of readjustment successfully. This achievement cannot be ascribed to any element of luck, but rather to consistent adherence to sound banking principles and profitable practices. Through worthy and efficient management they met the issues and problems confronting them, squarely and successfully.

Banking is regarded as the keystone of our entire business structure, hence bank failures are rightly regarded as intolerable public calamities that must absolutely be prevented. The three major objectives of all inter-bank organizations, whether local, county, district, state or national, are to make banking safer for all concerned and, through increased efficiency in bank management and supervision, to lessen or eliminate all forms of losses so that greater rewards may accrue to banking and better service to the public. There is definite evidence throughout the country of a strong and growing spirit of cooperation among bankers and banking organizations, which is resulting more and more in strengthening the work of all.

Clearinghouse associations among banks in city, county or district groups undoubtedly constitute the chief line of defense against bad banking practices. They have demonstrated that they are the principal factor in bringing about reformation in banking regulations, improvements in banking methods and the observance of sound banking principles. For many years the primary purpose of a clearinghouse association was the clearance of checks, but today it is the clearance of banking ideas and the solution of banking problems. Clearinghouses supply the local machinery essential for setting up and putting in practice necessary standards and uniformities. There are now 435 clearinghouse associations in cities, towns, counties and groups of counties in the United States.

Men today are more intelligently group-minded than ever before. Banking is combining the best elements of competition with sound group action. By virtue of this combination, individual thought has much wider possibilities of expression. In general, group action has not stifled but has stimulated individual thinking and initiative. Better inter-bank organization and relationships afforded by clearinghouses would have undoubtedly saved many institutions that have suffered failure in the past. The clearinghouse activities of the American Bankers Association are conducted for the purpose of encouraging ever widening cooperation along fundamental principles and practices among banks through clearinghouse associations. Bankers in every city, county or district can, through the agency of a clearinghouse, promote better, safer and more profitable banking and also serve their communities better.

There never was a time when successful bankers were so alert to the value of team work for putting the entire banking structure in prime condition. Sound bank management is the order of the day. Constructive cooperation is more than a sentiment, it is an economic necessity, a matter of enlightened self-interest, and successful bankers more and more are utilizing the agency of constructive group action in developing and establishing necessary standards and uniformities in banking practices. Each year banking is becoming more of a science and attaining higher professional standards.

Dr. Shook arrived and administered to her, but without avail. She was removed to the Walter funeral home.

Funeral arrangements are made for Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the M. E. Church.

Obituary will appear next week.

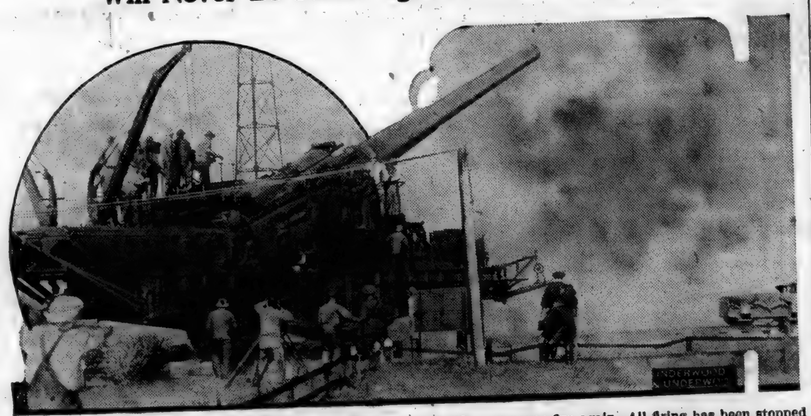
Will Never Be Fired Again Unless in Warfare



This huge 14-inch mobile army gun at Fort MacArthur, Calif., may never fire again. All firing has been stopped at the Los Angeles harbor fortress due to complaints that the big guns at the stronghold were causing damage to adjacent homes. Congressman W. Frank James of Michigan, of the house committee on military affairs, after conferring with Col. Robert F. Woods, commandant of the post, may appeal for resumption of firing of lesser size guns, but the 14-inch guns will never be fired except in case of war.

Rumors of another White House romance are current in Washington, this time joining Miss Alice Davis, the attractive daughter of the former secretary of war and now governor of the Philippines, Dwight F. Lesson for September 22

MALACHI FORETELLS A NEW DAY

GOLDEN TEXT—Behold, I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.

LESSON TEXT—Malachi 3:1-12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Promise of God's Blessing.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Promise of God's Blessing.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Our Part in Bringing in a Better Day.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Preparing the Way of the Lord.

The subject of today's lesson is broader than the printed text. In order to teach this lesson effectively the entire book should be surveyed. The prophet pointed out the sins of a corrupt priesthood, mixed marriages, and failure to pay tithes.

I. The Base Ingratitude of Israel (1:1-5).

God approached them with the tender affirmation, "I have loved you." It was the burden of the prophet to declare this fact unto them (v. 1). So worldly were the people that they failed to discern God's good hand upon them. Israel's attitude toward God is shown in the skeptical question, "Wherein hast thou loved us" (v. 2)? Malachi answers this question by showing God's choice of Jacob and his passing by of Esau, his destruction of Edom and his saving of Israel.

II. God's Severe Indictment (1:6-2:17; 3:7-15).

1. Against the priests (1:6-2:9).

They were guilty of:

(1) Profanity (1:6). Their profanity consisted in despising the name of God. To fail to honor God is to be profane. To use His name in any unreal way is to be thus guilty.

(2) Sacrilege (1:7, 8).

Their sacrilegious act was in offering polluted bread and blemished sacrifices. To bring such offerings to an earthly ruler would be a gross insult.

(3) Greed (1:10).

They were not willing to open the doors of God's house without pay.

(4) Weariness (1:12, 13). Because of the absence of love, the routine of priestly duties became irksome. God threatened them with severe punishment unless they would take His rebukes to heart.

(5) Not teaching the law to the people (2:1-9). Those set apart to teach God's law to the people have a great responsibility and God will most assuredly demand an accounting.

2. Against the people (2:10-17; 3:7-15).

(1) For ungodly marriages (2:11, 12). God's purpose in the prohibition of mixed marriages was that He might raise up a holy seed (v. 15). The marriage of the believer with the unbeliever today brings confusion into the fold of God and turns aside His purpose.

(2) For divorce (2:13-16). Divorce in Israel was the source of great sorrow—even the tears of the wronged women covering the altar (v. 13).

(3) Public wrongs (3:5, 6).

a. Sorcery—magic arts. This includes the practice of occult sciences.

b. Adultery. This is a sin of wider extent than to the parties directly concerned. It is a canker which gnaws at the very heart of society. Unfaithfulness to the marriage relation should be regarded as a public sin.

c. False swearing.

d. Oppression of the hireling, widow and fatherless.

e. Turning aside the stranger from his rights.

(4) Withholding tithes (3:7-12). Failure to pay tithes is robbery of God. His claim upon Israel was the tenth, plus free-will offerings. Our responsibility is to give as God prospers us (I Cor. 16:1).

(5) Blasphemy (3:13-15). They openly spoke against God, saying that it was profitless to serve Him.

III. The Awful Judgment Which Shall Befall the Nation (3:1-5; 4:1-6).

1. By whom executed (v. 1).

It is to be done by the Lord. All judgment has been committed unto the Son of God (Jno. 5:22, 30, cf. Acts 17:30, 31). When Christ comes in power and glory to render judgment, He will distinguish between the righteous and the wicked, rewarding them according to their deeds.

2. The time of (3:2-4:1).

It will be at the second coming of Christ. John the Baptist was the forerunner of His first coming. Elijah will be the forerunner of His second coming.

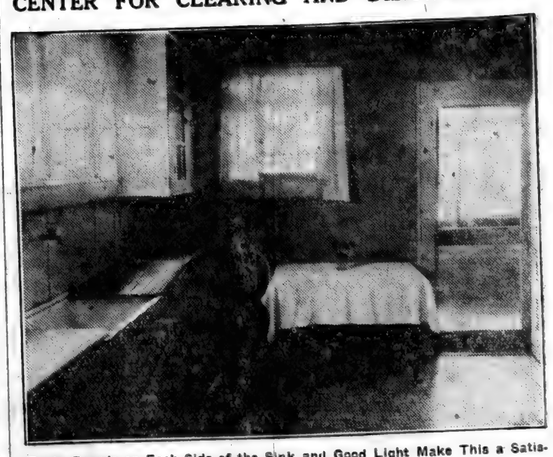
3. The result (3:3, 4, 16-18; 4:1, 2).

For the righteous it will be a day of healing and salvation; for the wicked a day of burning and destruction.

More Sorrow, More Joy

The more sorrow the more joy. If we have loads of sorrow, then the Lord's power will turn them into tons of joy. Then the bitterer the trouble the sweeter the pleasures; the swinging of the pendulum far to the left will cause it to go all the farther to the right. The remembrance of the grief shall heighten the flavor to the delight: and the brilliance of the diamond shall be the more clearly seen because of the black foil behind it.—Spurgeon.

CENTER FOR CLEARING AND DISHWASHING



Drain Boards on Each Side of the Sink and Good Light Make This a Satisfactory Dishwashing Center.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Drainboards on each side of the sink and good light above it make dishwashing easy and convenient. This is especially true if the dish closet is so placed that the china may be put away without extra steps after it has been washed and wiped. In this corner of a Louisiana farm home, photographed by the United States Department of Agriculture, all these points are exemplified. The sink arrangement is so neat and compact, with its tidy cupboards below the drainboards, and the extra end window makes it so light and pleasant, that the housewife evidently enjoys her individual lunch here, for she has put a cloth over the table and a vase of flowers on it. The little table might be set for two or four persons for any light meal which did not seem formal enough to make it worth while to carry food and dishes all the way to the larger dining room. The kitchen opens onto a screened entrance porch, which is pleasant enough to use for preparing vegetables, ironing, or other work in warm weather. Linoleum on the floor is easy to keep clean and comfortable under foot.

In planning any kitchen, if the various activities that are to be carried on in it are kept constantly in mind, it is possible to arrange definite work centers which save steps and contribute to efficiency. The preparation of foods, cooking, serving, and clearing away and dishwashing, are four activities that follow each other every day and several times a day in most kitchens. Compact centers for these jobs are therefore desirable. While the sink may be part of the raw food preparation center in conjunction with a work table, it is principally as in the illustration, the place where soiled dishes are stacked and washed. While not seen in the picture, the garbage can should be close at hand, and on shelves or hooks—in this case in the lower cupboards—can be kept the articles needed for dishwashing, such as the dishpan, mop, sink brush, soap shaker, washing powder, or other cleaning agents, and dish drainer. Cloths and towels that have been used are generally hung in the air, and kept in a drawer when clean. Double boilers, the coffee pot, pitchers and other utensils that must be filled with water before being used are kept near the sink, also strainers and colanders which will be used there.

LARGE FAMILIES DRINK LESS MILK

Few Persons Use an Average of 1.62 Pints Daily.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A survey of milk consumption by 7,500 Washington families having children of junior high school age shows that the larger families in this group drink less milk per person than is drunk in the smaller families, announces the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

The bureau's survey covered twelve junior high schools and two upper grades in four elementary schools in the District of Columbia. The average per capita consumption for 7,500 families having children in these grades was found to be 1.05 pints of milk and milk equivalent of cream per day. Separated as to white and colored groups, the per capita consumption by white families is 1.15 pints per day, and by colored families .84 pints per day.

The figures show that of the total group 195 families composed of only two persons drink an average of 1.68 pints per person daily; 933 families of three persons drink 1.38 pints per person daily; 1,507 families of four persons drink on the average 1.24 pints per person; 1,479 families of five persons, 1.1 pints per person; 1,197 families of six persons, .98 pints per person, and so on in lesser amounts as the size of family increases.

This decreased consumption in proportion to the size of the family is more pronounced in families which have a relatively large number of children than in families which have a relatively large number of adults, and the conclusion is drawn that financial conditions of the family are largely responsible for this situation. In many cases, however, it is believed that the smaller consumption in the larger families is due to a lack of appreciation of milk in the diet.

Pressure Cookers Best for All Nonacid Foods

Research and practical experience have demonstrated, says Dr. A. F. Woods, director of scientific work, United States Department of Agriculture, that nonacid food products, like aspargus, beans, corn, peas, beets, spinach, meats and fish, cannot be canned safely by processing in boiling water, but must be sterilized under pressure with approved time and temperature.

Pressure cookers are now standard equipment and are readily available at small cost. The department does not recommend any particular make, although attention is called to the importance of having the pressure kettle equipped with thermometer and pressure gauge for proper control.

"There is now no excuse," says Doctor Woods, "for continuing to take risks involved in canning nonacid foods without adequate pressure cooking. All recommendations by the Department of Agriculture will hereafter make this clear and emphatic."

SWEET PICKLES ARE EASILY MADE

Either Homemade or Commercial Dill Useful.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If you prefer a crisp, sweet cucumber pickle to a dill pickle you can convert the latter into the former very easily. Either homemade or commercial dill pickles may be used. The advantage of beginning with the dill pickles is that very little time is necessary for completing the sweet pickles if the right size is used.

These sweet cucumber pickles are made in rings, and come out clear, crisp and transparent. They are very attractive to serve with salad or cold meat or as an appetizer. The following recipe is furnished by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Sweet Cucumber Pickles.

60 firm dill pickles
12 peeled garlic buttons
3 pints cider vinegar
1 pint tarragon vinegar
¼ cup whole allspice
½ cup whole black pepper or 6 hot red peppers pods
10 lbs. granulated sugar
1 lb. brown sugar
1 cup olive oil

The dill pickles may be made previously according to the directions in Farmers' Bulletin 1438-F. Cut them in cross slices one-half inch thick, and drain in a colander overnight. In a 3-gallon stone crock with a lid, pack the pickles in layers, using two garlic buttons to each layer. Boil together the vinegar, sugar, and spices for 15 minutes, watching carefully that this does not boil over. Pour at once over the pickles. Next morning stir thoroughly and add the olive oil. Cover the jar. Stir the pickle well each day for ten days. It is then ready to serve. If the pickle is to be kept for any length of time it should be sealed in jars made sterile by boiling. Use pint jars so that when once opened the contents may be quickly used up.

A Clean Sweep

A new broom sweeps clean, but so will an old broom if properly cared for. Careless treatment will wear out a broom more quickly than frequent and prolonged sessions of sweeping.

Occasional washing will help to keep your broom in good condition. Prepare a pail of hot soap suds and dip the broom end in and out quickly so as not to soak the bristles. Shake off as much of the moisture as you can, then hang it in the open air until it is dry.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

BY THE BARONESS ORCZY

WNU Service
Copyright Baroness Orczy

STORY FROM THE START

The Scarlet Pimpernel, known during the French revolution as the most intrepid adventurer in Europe, is an Englishman. At a house party given by Sir Percy Blakeney the latest adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel, the rescue of the Tournon-d' Agenays, is being related by Sir Andrew Ffoulkes. The Scarlet Pimpernel is really Sir Percy Blakeney, popular London dandy. The failure of Lauzet, revolutionary chief of the section in which the Scarlet Pimpernel has been operating, to prevent the escape of the Tournon-d' Agenays brings the condemnation of the government upon him. He causes the arrest of the Deseze family on a charge of treason. Lauzet announces that the prisoners are to be taken to Paris under a feeble escort, hoping to lure the Scarlet Pimpernel into an attack on the coach. The coach starts out and final arrangements are made for the capture of the Englishman.

The men now were keenly on the alert, their eyes searching the dim light that glimmered through the forest trees, their ears attuned to the slightest sound that rose above the patter of their horses' hoofs or the grinding of the coach wheels over the muddy road. The forest between Mezieres and Epone is four kilometers long; the road which intersects it plunges down into the valley and then rises up again with one or two sharp bends to the crest of the hill, after which, within the space of two hundred yards, the forest trees quickly become sparse and the open country lies spread out like a map with, on the right, the ribbon of the Seine winding its way along to St. Germain and Paris.

It was in the forest that the enemy would lurk. Out in the open he would find no cover, and could be sighted a couple of kilometers all around and more; if he attempted one of his audacious tricks. The light, which became more and more fitful as the sun sank lower in the west, made observation difficult; the thicket to right and left of the road looked like a dark, impenetrable wall, from behind which, mayhap, dozens of pairs of eyes were peering, ready to attack. The men who were riding by the side of the coach felt queer sensations at the roots of their hair; their hands, moist and hot, clung convulsively to the reins, and the glances which they cast about them became furtive and laden with fear.

But those who were inside the diligence had no superstitious terrors to contend with. The aristos were huddled up together in the far corner of the vehicle, and the men had spread themselves out, three a side, as comfortably as they could. A couple of bottles of excellent wine had been welcome supplement to their rations and put additional heart into them. One of them had produced a pack of greasy, well-worn cards from his pocket with which to while away the time.

A quarter of an hour later the captain in command called a halt; the jolting vehicle came to a standstill with a jerk, and there was much scrambling and creaking and jingling while the driver got down from his seat to see what was amiss. Nothing much, apparently, for a minute or two later the diligence was once more on its way. But only for a brief period. Soon there was an appreciable slackening of speed, then a halt. More shouting and swearing, creaking and scrambling. The men inside marveled what was amiss. It was as much as their life was worth to put their heads out of the window or even to draw one of the tattered blinds to one side in order to peep. But they quickly put cards and wine away; it was better to be prepared for the word of command which might come now at any moment.

They strained their ears to listen and, one by one, a word or two, a movement, a sound, told them what was happening. Their comrades outside were ordered to dismount, to take it easy, to sit down by the roadside and rest. It seems one of the draft horses had gone lame. The men who were inside sighed with a longing for rest, too, a desire to stretch their cramped limbs, but they did not murmur. They were waiting for the word of command that would release them from their inactivity. Until then there was nothing to do but wait. No doubt this halt by the roadside was just a part of the great scheme for luring the English adventurers to the attack. Grimly and in silence the six picked men inside the coach drew their pistols from their wallets, saw that they were primed and in order, then laid them across their knees with their fingers on the triggers, in readiness for the Englishmen when they came.

CHAPTER V

Dissension

It was not everybody at Moisson who sympathized with the Deseze family when they were arrested. There were all the envious, the dissatisfied, the ambitious, as well as the rag-tag and bobtail of the district, who had linked their fortunes with the revolutionary government and who looked for their own advancement by loudly proclaiming their loyalty to its decrees. For such as these the Deseze family, with their well-known integrity, their wealth, and unostentatious piety, were just a set of aristos that the principles of the glorious revolution condemned as traitors to the state and to the people.

And on market day Moisson was always full of people; they were noisy and they were aggressive, and while the sympathizers with the Deseze family, after they had waved a last farewell toward the fast-disappearing diligence, went quietly about their business or returned silently to their homes, the others thought this a good opportunity for airing some of those sentiments which would be reported in influential quarters if any government spy happened to be within earshot.

In spite of the persistent bad weather men congregated in and about the market place during the intervals of business and lustily discussed the chief event of the day. There was much talk of Citizen Lauzet, whom every one had known as a young out-at-elbows ragamuffin in the employ of Hector Deseze, and who now had power of life and death over the very man who had been his master.

There Was Much Talk of Citizen Lauzet.

Be it noted that Lauzet appeared to have few friends amongst the crowd of drovers and shepherds and the farmers who came in with their produce from their outlying homesteads. With advancement in life had come arrogance in the man and a perpetual desire to assert his authority over those with whom he had fraternized in the past. Those, however, who had their homes in the immediate neighborhood of Mantes dared not say much, for Lauzet was feared almost as much as he was detested; but the strangers who had come into Moisson with their cattle and their produce were free enough with their tongue. Rumor had gone far afield about this arrest of the Deseze family, and many there were who asserted that mysterious undercurrents were at work in this affair, undercurrents that would draw Citizen Lauzet up on the crest of a tidal wave to the giddy heights of incredible fortune.

Skates of Bones Used in Ancient Britain

Skates were not always made of iron or steel. According to Fitzstephen's "History of England," it was customary for young men in the Twelfth century to fasten the leg bones of animals under their feet by means of thongs and slide on the ice, pushing themselves along by means of an iron-shod pole. Specimens of the primitive skates have been found from time to time in the marshy fields near London.

Just who invented skating is not known. Holland, with its extensive water surfaces, is sometimes looked upon as the birthplace of the sport. But the Twelfth-century bone implements are said to indicate that there were some followers of the sport in England before the Dutch spread it abroad in the Thirteenth century. In Twelfth-century England the skaters on bone are said to have jousted at each other as in a tournament.

A Review of Reviews

Measuring backward by the breadth of one or more centuries, 1928 was notable for the number of its memorial observances.

Men of letters seem to have claimed most of such attention during the past 12 months, while music, art, philosophy, statecraft and exploration each have been singly represented in the list. By means of general observance, or by more or less restricted attention, the people have been brought to recall the achievements of John Bunyan, Ibsen, Jules Verne, Tolstoy, George Meredith, Edmund Burke, William Tyndale, Captain Cook, Francisco Goya, Dante, Gabriel Rossetti, Franz Schubert and Oliver Goldsmith.

METALLIC EFFECTS FOR FALL; TWEEDS IN HIGHEST FAVOR

IN REGARD to many of the new fabrics and knitted weaves, of them it cannot be said "gold and silver have I none." On the contrary, there is a very considerable presence of metallic effects throughout fall modes. Even many of the sports woolens and jersey cloths and other materials which go to make up the more stunning daytime ensembles display discreet interweavings of gold and silver threads and patternings.

Rich in Its Markings of Gold and Silver.

It is the gold and silver markings which traverse the handsome knitted silk blouse pictured above which give it an out-of-the-ordinary look. Its very soft blue shade takes kindly to the metal interweavings which have been worked in an attractive conventional patterning.

The "glittering note" manifests itself in many ingenious ways, not only in the very weave of the material itself, but in various applied effects. For instance, the vogue for "starred" designs done with tiny gold or silver nailheads has been revived. Many of the early fall afternoon dresses show the bodice worked with nailheads, perhaps sprinkled over the major surface, with elaborated borderings worked out with wee glittering disks.

Many a dressy costume blouse adopts for its medium a handsome silk and metal brocade. Then, too, the blouse of tissue gold or silver cloth has received fashion's seal of approval.

Gold polka-dotted net has been mentioned quite often in connection with all new autumn and winter woolens. Quite an outstanding feature, and one of much charm, is the presence of white in "last-word" worsteds, especially tweeds.

Wonderfully effective are the 1929 tweeds which are nubbed or flecked, or perhaps plaided, checked, chevron or herringbone-striped with white or in some instances light yellow. To heighten their charm, costumes and wraps of these tweeds are intriguingly furred with white or eggshell caracul, if not with white fox, or perhaps showy badger or fitch.

As one stands at the threshold of autumn, not only does one's fancy but one's need turn in the direction of a suitable and practical wrap. To this call the sports coat expressed in terms of tweed gives immediate answer. To prove it we are showing, below, a photo of Kathryn Crawford, a shining light among Universal players, who wears this stunning black-and-white plaided tweed coat when she takes her morning walks.

One cannot select anything smarter than black and white, according to the verdict of French stylists, unless it be brown and white, for browns of every degree lead in the new color card. Brown tweeds, brown knitted novelties, brown velvet, brown satin, all give a beautifully brown aspect to the new autumn modes.

If you are wanting to know what colors come next in the list of featured new colors, dark green and wine shades is the answer. Tweed cloakings, especially, make a fascinating play on these ultra-smart shades. Often a basic green or red is blended with harmonizing tones with a soft, hazy colorfulness that is most beguiling.

the theme of the evening gown. Many evening ensembles are created of sheer metal with velvet.

The type of costume high-lighted for early autumn tea and bridge and dinner party is developed in three pieces, jacket, skirt and bodice, with the latter of sheer metal tissue, so that without the jacket the dress tunes to indoor occasion. Later on it may successfully be worn with its velvet jacket or wrap.

Evening ensembles also subscribe to the velvet and sheer metallic alliance. Luxurious costumes feature both the dress and its coat lining of sheer metal, with velvet for the wrap proper.

Ditto, ditto for tweed, says the mode, and with increasing emphasis.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

Some People Are Born With Gills

WE NO longer tell friends from enemies by smell; but we often pick them by the shape of their nose. Man's nose is not so striking as the elephant's, or even the long-nosed monkey's, but it features his face and is one of his most human and superfluous elements. As it is a new acquisition, it begun with mammals, it appears late in fetal life and develops fully only after birth. Its shape and size are hereditary and are distinguishing traits of race. But it has no more to do with brain power than the handkerchief that wipes it.

As the olfactory nerves alone are connected with the hemispheres of the human brain, it is inferred that the brain itself arose in connection with the sense of smell; the original brain was a smelling organ.

In mammals generally, the smell sense is the most highly developed of all senses. In monkeys, it has already begun to diminish. Some mammals have five pairs of ridges supporting the olfactory organs; some hoofed animals have eight; apes usually have three. Man has from two to five pairs.

The nose in the human embryo is at first a pair of pits or pockets in the skin—the condition in fishes. The external nose appears much later.

The ear also begins as a pocket, in the first gill-cleft. This sinks into the head until its outer opening is closed by the tympanum or eardrum. A rare anomaly is an individual with two, or even three, external ear openings; these represent the second and third gill-clefts. In some fishes the opening remains; their ear is primarily a balancing organ. Our equilibrium sense organ is also located in the inner ear; if our semilunar canals are destroyed, we cannot balance ourselves.

We turn our head toward sounds or cup our hands behind our ears; our ancestors turned their ears.

Our eyes are compound and are made up of the same three parts that are found in fishes' eyes. First, a cluster of skin cells dig in to form the lens; skin grows over this, becomes transparent, and forms the cornea. Next, a growth from the neural tube reaches out and ends in a cup around the lens. This cup becomes the retina; the stalk which joins cup with tube, the optic nerve. Cells from the middle germ layer now enter the cup and form the transparent matter of the eyeball. The middle layer also supplies skin structure; it is subject to the horny change of old age. Hence "cataract" of the eye; the lens has become covered with a scale.

The Asiatic's eye is not oblique. The "slit" appearance is due to the low nasal bridge supporting the upper lid; the lid thus folds and appears "Mongolian." This "oblique" eye is not uncommon in white children at birth; when the bridge develops slowly it may persist for months, even into adult life.

The tears which wash our eyes—otherwise as dirty as our faces—come from lachrymal glands in the upper outer corner of each eye. Some have additional tear glands at the sides of the eyes, as have reptiles.

Our skin is a double structure. The outside, or epidermis, is ectoderm; the inside, or dermis, is derived from the mesoderm. The fetal skin at first is translucent and not unlike that of fishes. During the third month, the epidermis begins to become horny, as it is in adult life. It is significant that if we lose a third of our skin by fire, acid, boiling liquid, or flaying, we lose our life.

Color of skin is an inherited trait and is due to grains of brown or yellow-red pigment in the dermis. Entire absence of pigment in skin, hair, and eyes is a developmental defect and results in albinos. Albinism is an inherited trait and is found in many animals. White blackbirds are as common as white black men. Pigment is probably due to secretion of an endocrine gland.

To form a better grasping surface, the skin of man's, monkeys', and many other mammals' hands and feet is thrown into minute ridges, especially prominent on the finger tips. These ridges form loops, spirals, and arches. In no two individuals on earth do they make exactly the same pattern. Hence their unique importance as marks of identification.

At the fourth month, the embryo begins to show a fine silky hair coat or lanugo (down). This begins to be replaced, even before birth, by a second coat of different character. The lanugo may persist as "down" on the face of girls and women, or even all over the body, as on the so-called dog-faced people of the menageries. The lanugo probably represents our adult ancestral condition. But no satisfactory theory has yet been advanced to account for the fact that man is the least hairy of the primates.

Hair does not grow on our bodies in haphazard fashion, but in lines and sets of three, four, or five, each set being the hairs that grew beneath one scale of our reptilian ancestors.

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

CLASSIC AND MODERN CLOCKS

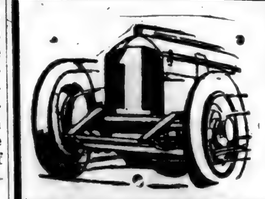
The early clockmakers were great artists but poor mechanics. The best timepieces three centuries or more ago were masterpieces of design, but would scarcely have served a modern commuter. Skilled craftsmen spent years in decorating cases of clocks and watches which today are preserved in museums as works of art. The actual timekeeping quality of these timepieces judged by modern standards seems very crude.

It comes as a surprise to find that the alarm clock appeared more than three centuries ago. A beautiful timepiece made in Germany about 1600, indicated the time on a horizontal face while the movementt of the hand served to strike an alarm. The owners of this remarkable clock must have overslept frequently for the mechanism was far from reliable.

Beautiful clocks were made for a surprising variety of purposes even in the early days of the timekeepers' art. There were elaborate clocks for the table or mantelpiece; designs for the coach or carriage; others to be auspended from the ceiling. Most of the clocks were of the standing sort with exceedingly elaborate cases.

Long before the appearance of the familiar grandfather's clock of the last century, the homes of the rich boasted of beautiful timepieces often several feet in height, which were conspicious pieces of furniture. They were usually made of metals and in elaborate designs. The work, was of course, all done by hand, the hand-wrought faces represented an immense amount of labor.

One may regret the passing of these beautiful old clocks, but the modern timepiece is far more dependable and democratic. Today every one owns one or more timepieces, far more dependable than the most elaborate clocks of the rich in the past. Meanwhile, the designing of clocks has of late years become a fine art. More attention is paid to making timepieces which exactly suit modern conditions. Clocks are now designed to harmonize with the decorative style of the particluar room it adorns. A well furnished and aristically-decorated home today has several timepieces, one or more for every room, which exactly suit its setting.



They're way ahead in the race as far as value, economy and quality are concerned. You can't go wrong when you buy a used car the "Certified" way at this store.

"it really saves me lots of time"

MARGARET had often told me how her Electric Range enabled her to prepare better meals with less time in the kitchen. How she could put her dinner in the oven and leave it there to cook, while she went out shopping, or visiting.

"The electric company told me of how much more delicious my meals would be with Electric Cookery—and how it would be more convenient and cleaner to work with.

"But you have no idea the change it has made in my kitchen. I didn't think it possible myself until I tried it. It really does save me lots and lots of time and does more than I ever expected of it. DRIVER'S SAFETY LESSON No. 1

PREPARED BY THE Hoosier State Automobile Association

LUCK DESERTED HIM YESTERDAY

The jury was out fifteen minutes.

"Guilty, Your Honor," spoke the foreman.

"Two to fourteen years at the Indiana Reformatory at Pendleton." Quote the Judge.

And another headless, reckless driver learned his lesson. The pity is that this sort of lesson is all too few. The headless driver, so called, to all appearance is a normal human being. He has a knob on the end of his neck that looks like a head, but looks deceive—it functions like a radio when the batteries need recharging.

According to the Accident Prevention Department of the Hoosier State Automobile Association, he is THE menace to the motoring public, takes all the pleausre and safety out of driving for the careful motorist, spoils traffic Cops' temper and makes Railroad Engineers and Interurban Motormen turn prematurely gray.

The only cure for the "headless driver" is not ordinary education. Excepting only burying his faults with him, the only lesson that society can give him is hard labor behind the bars for manslaughter before he commits something more serious. He ought to be made ineligible forever by law to operate a motor vehicle—even from the back seat.

WHAT AILS THAT CHILD!

(By Lorena Daniel Solberg)

Ordinarily, Patty Lou is such a happy, contented, affectionate child, so when all-of-a-sudden she became ill-humored, bellicose, antagonistic to everyone and everything, we couldn't understand what the trouble was.

We had been away for a six weeks' visit and she had been so delighted to be home again, so happy to see her daddy and little neighbor-playmates. And she had such fun telling all about the cows and chickens and about sleeping on the train! Everyone was so glad to see her! She was the happiest little three-year-old anyone could imagine. Even after being at home for more than two weeks, she was still repeating, "Let's not ever go away any more."

Then suddenly, she started whining, a thing unusual for her. I immediately attempted to correct that, but, instead of responding, she became positively belligerent. She was hostile even toward her daddy whom she adores. Discipline had no effect whatsoever. So, Daddy and I held a consultation.

"Spoiled. Utterly spoiled. Too much attention while away. Got to conquer her." These were Daddy's convictions.

Having been a teacher of the wee people for a number of years, I knew the value of analysis. Perhaps she was spoiled—that certainly was the way she acted—but why the sudden attack?

So I answered, "Well—perhaps. Let's check up on her other likely causes.

"Daily habits? Good. Stomach? No apparent reason for trouble. Sleep? Normal. Clothing Comfortable. Shoes (so often thecause of irritability?) O. K. Spoiled? — Perhaps.

"Could anything have happened to irritate her seriously? Have you crossed her or perhaps wounded her the last day or so?" I asked. "Little people are sensitive and you know how broken-hearted she is when you scold. Sometimes she even takes play-spanks seriously."

"That shouldn't cause a two days' demonstration," he replied. "Besides, I have been so busy in the garden this week-end that I have hardly seen her."

"Same with me," I answered. "I'v been so busy I've scarcely said a word to her except when she required discipline. Perhaps she is 'at outs' with her playmates."

"No, the Crawleys and the Roberts are all away for a few days."

"Oh! I have it!" I exclaimed. "She was petted and fussed over while we were away and petted and loved when we got back. She was radiantly happy to be home and everyone just as happy to have her. Then came the anti-climax. Suddenly, her beloved Daddy doesn't even see her, the children go away and Mother doesn't say a word to her except to scold. I've been scolding and punishing her because she was lonesome."

The next day, Patty Lou "helped" Mother with the dishes and pulled the clothes out of the wringer when Mother washed; there was a wonderful romp, then songs and a story and time for "just lovin'." The remedy was more effective than castor-oil for tummy-aches, and when Daddy came home that night it was a shiny-eyed, happy Patty Lou who ran to meet him and tell him confidentially that "Mother was a vera, vera nice lady."

The difference between success and defeat is generally the difference between the man who stays defeated and the one who refuses to stay that way.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"NEGRO" AND "NIGGER"

"NEGRO," our name for the colored American, as well as the entire Ethiopian race, originated with the Spaniards who first applied it to the earliest colored men who appeared on the Mediterranean or were discovered on their native shores by Spanish explorers. "Negro" is simply Spanish for "black."

Also the term "nigger" used interchangeably with "negro," particularly in the South, though it is regarded sometimes as derogatory or a more or less contemptuously slang term, is in fact inoffensive and a good legitimate word. It is derived from the Latin "niger," meaning black.

THE GREAT BIG MAN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE TALK about the great big things:
The great big pile of gold,
The great big men, financial kings,
The great big jobs they hold.
Well, son, I've seen some great big men,
But, when I came to call,
The big men weren't talking then
The great big things at all.

The man who had the great big mill
That had the great big trade,
I found, my boy, was making still
The little things he made;
And men who made the big machines
To stand the great big test
Were spending time and spending means
To make each part the best.

The man who looks for great big things,
Just great big things to do,
To no endeavor ever brings
The thing that puts it through.
The man who nothing leaves to guess,
Who every part will scan,
Will make the great, the big success,
For he's a great big man.

Mother's Cook Book

Being a parent used to be one of the most simple, natural and inevitable developments in the world. But nowadays, one has no business to be married, unless, sleeping and waking, one is conscious of the responsibility.—Abraham Flexner.

THE SCHOOL LUNCH BOX

FOR many weeks in the year some mothers find the lunch box for the children is an added burden to the morning duties. Milk and sandwiches are the usual wholesome contents of the child's lunch box. But sandwiches may become very monotonous, if the fillings and breads are not varied.

Dried fruits offer a change from routine fillings and they combine well with peanut butter, cream cheese and cottage cheese and the sandwiches keep fresh and moist longer than those with drier fillings.

The special sandwich loaf is a convenience, as all the slices are the same size. In using the home made loaf, care must be taken to put together adjacent slices or they will not fit. All bread should be at least twenty-four hours old to cut easily. Many like to spread the butter on the loaf, then cut. Whole wheat bread, graham, bran and steamed brown breads combine well with dates, raisins and figs in the filling.

Have a bowl of softened butter, that is, butter which has been allowed to stand in a warm room to soften, or which has been creamed. If the rounding loaf of home made bread is used, spread the loaf with the butter, and the next slice with the filling. It is far better to leave the crusts on bread given children as they need both the browned crusty edges because of their wholesomeness and it promotes the chewing habit which is so vital to healthy teeth and gums as well as good digestion. The following are a few fillings using the date which will be found most agreeable to the children:

Date and Cheese Sandwiches.

Take one-pound loaf of bread which will cut into twenty-four slices. Use one cream cheese or half cupful of cottage cheese. To the cream cheese add one to two tablespoonfuls of cream. Cut twenty-four dates into quarters lengthwise, spread one slice of bread with softened butter and the next with cheese. Into the cheese press four of the quarters of dates, cover with the buttered slice.

Cream cheese with candied or maraschino cherries in the same amount as the dates, makes a very tasty sandwich.

Vacation Trips

Bizarre Float in the Carnival at Nice.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WHEN millions of Americans leave for three days, three weeks, or three months at the beach or the lakes, on the farm or in the mountains, they are hitting an age-old trail.

Laps, of Lapland, and the Bakhtiari, of West Persia, take the vacation trail to a cool summer climate, and it is called a migration because they have to go. The Athenian gentleman went to Olympia and called his recreation interval the Olympic games. In China and India popular thought satisfies the vacation impulse by religious pilgrimages. Some people, not yet entirely accustomed to pleasure for pleasure's sake, go to health springs, "bads," or spas, but it is a vacation, nevertheless, and a salutary one.

Olympic games of ancient Greece were probably the first vacation excursions. Before their organization, 800 years before the birth of Christ, traveling was risky. The mountains might invite in summer, but if a man loved life, he stayed in his own little kingdom, though he cooked and boiled and baked in the sun. In Greece, for one month following the first full moon after June 21, every four years, a general peace proclamation went out through the states of Greece, permitting contestants and hordes of excursionists to go safely to the beautiful vale of Olympia.

Rome marked its conquests not with lead plates or flagpoles, but bath houses. Many of the innumerable health springs of Europe, gathering places for multitudes for the cure of disease and the enjoyment of rest or sport, boast of Roman origin at the hands of the "amphibian legionnaires." The site of Bath in England attracted one of the largest Roman settlements by its famous springs. "Bad" in German means "bath," and towns with "bad" before or after the names are almost as frequent as "Main Streets" in America. This word "spa," for health spring resort, has its origin in the Belgian town Spa, once the most famous in Europe.

Resorts of Royalty.

The prince of Wales goes in for outdoor life on a Canadian ranch; the king of Spain summers at San Sebastian, the Spanish counterpart to Biarritz; whereas Peter the Great of Russia, and monarchs of Austria and Sweden, soaked in and drank chemically-scented water in Spa. King George, of England, goes to the seashore or to the Scottish moors for a vacation, but his ancestral namesakes went to the pumphouse of Bath.

In the hills west of Peiping (Peking) are the ruins of one of the most beautiful summer resorts the world has seen, the summer palace of Manchu emperors. The Jade fountain, a fine large spring, has been the site of summer palaces for Chinese sovereigns since the Tenth century. But the most beautiful was that built by the poet emperor in 1061. Jesuit priests described to him the beauties of Versailles palace and he wove some of the designs into his own plans. A Jesuit supervised the development of the palace enclosure. Here the emperor took his ease on a royal barge floating on a sapphire lake in the midst of which rose an artificial mountain girded with marble bastions.

Climbing Fujiyama is the cherished Japanese idea of a vacation. Although the numerous hot springs of the nation attract thousands annually, Mount Fuji is their mecca. Every true Japanese expects to climb it once in his lifetime. It is sacred to both Shinto and Buddhist believers; to the former it is the beautiful goddess "causing flowers to bloom brightly," to the latter it is the folded bud of the sacred lotus. The desire to climb the perfect snow-white cone of Fuji has given rise to vacation lotteries throughout Japan. The lucky ticket gives its holder sufficient funds to ascend the supreme altar and salute the sun as it turns the sea of cotton, as the Japanese call the cloud roof, into a fleece of gold.

Lucky are the Mohammedan pilgrims bound for Mecca when their shifting calendar brings the hottest time for this journey into the spring, for that is the most delightful season in the desert.

Playgrounds by the Sea.

Each nation has its Atlantic City. Peruvians go down to Barranca on the Pacific the French in Algeria go to Tlemcen in the hills back from the Mediterranean, Athens listens to French operettas in Phaleron on the bay, where galleys of ancient Athens were sheltered. Egyptians desert the muddy Nile for Ramleh, a few miles from Alexandria and on the edge of the delta's fan. The Lido, an island near Venice, is the famous ocean resort of Italy; and the east shore of the Baltic is one vast bathing beach during the brief summer which that region enjoys.

One of the best known of the world's playgrounds is the Riviera—that sun-drenched shore of the Mediterranean, where France and Italy meet. Nice, chief town of the Riviera, is often cavilled at as too boisterous, too crowded, but it continues despite all that to be the capital of Europe's winter playground. Cannes draws to its villas and hotels those of quieter tastes. Mentone lures its invalids, while all the other scores of resorts along this sun-bathed Mediterranean coast draw to themselves appropriate groups of those in search of pleasure, rest, or health. But Nice is the meeting place for all as well as the place of temporary residence for thousands who find this bustling city and well-equipped resort, rolled into one, exactly to their liking.

Nice's gaiety rises in crescendo to the carnival which takes place just before the beginning of Lent each spring. This more or less historic celebration, a type for numerous festivals around the world, began as a modest fiesta many years ago. It became an organized celebration in 1871, and has drawn increasing crowds since. It must be admitted, too, that it has grown in rowdyism. There are quiet-loving souls who leave Nice for the carnival just as there are those who flock there for it. The celebration centers about the battle of flowers in the Promenade des Anglais. There are parades that feature the ludicrous as well as the beautiful, and the inevitable dominos, masques, street songs, street dances, horns and confetti.

Many English in Nice.

There is a considerable English colony at Nice. It dates back many years as one might surmise when he learns that the Promenade des Anglais has borne its name since 1821. Some of the earliest of the seekers of winter sunshine from the British Isles were in the modest Riviera town that year when an unusual cold snap ruined the orange crop. They clubbed together and gave the unemployed natives work by building a road along the seashore—the Promenade des Anglais. A wag has said that this roadway was built by the unemployed and has been used by the unemployed ever since. The chief boulevard and shopping street in Nice is the Avenue de la Victoire. With its smart shops and smartly-dressed shoppers, it is a typical Parisian boulevard in miniature form.

New Nice, with its wide streets and bright buildings, has grown over a large area, almost obscuring quaint Old Nice. One finds the old town in a seemingly compressed quarter across a little torrent from the newer city, between the stream and a bluff-like promontory, Castle Hill, which was the acropolis of the earliest settlement. On one side of the stream are narrow, crooked streets, houses centuries old and here and there ruined palaces. It is a medieval-looking place, but is inhabited by thoroughly modern mechanics, tram drivers and other less opulent inhabitants of the city. On the other side of the stream lies the new city with its avenues and promenades, theaters and casinos, sweeping up hill inland to a zone of hotels, palaces and villas.

Although many criticize Nice for its modernity and its too-rapid growth, all agree that its setting on a spacious, sparkling bay enfolded by green and lavender hills, is superb. To see the city and its surroundings at their best one should ride over the famous Grande Corniche road. From Nice it climbs to a high shelf (the name means "great cornice or shelf") on the island hills overlooking the entire region both seaward and off to the snow-capped alps. Napoleon built the road between 1805 and 1812 to facilitate military expeditions toward Italy. Now it is given over almost entirely to pleasure traffic. Over it "during the season" whiz char-a-bancs and motor buses and private cars. After warm weather brings an end to the season this road of incomparable views is almost deserted.

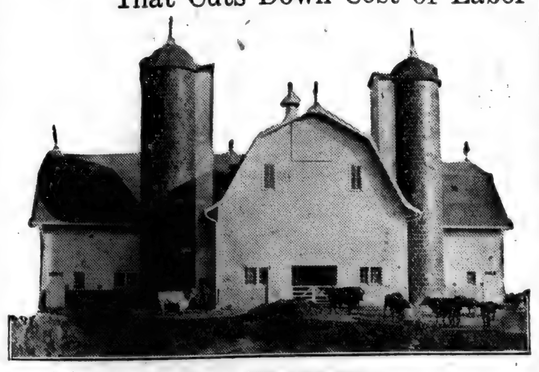
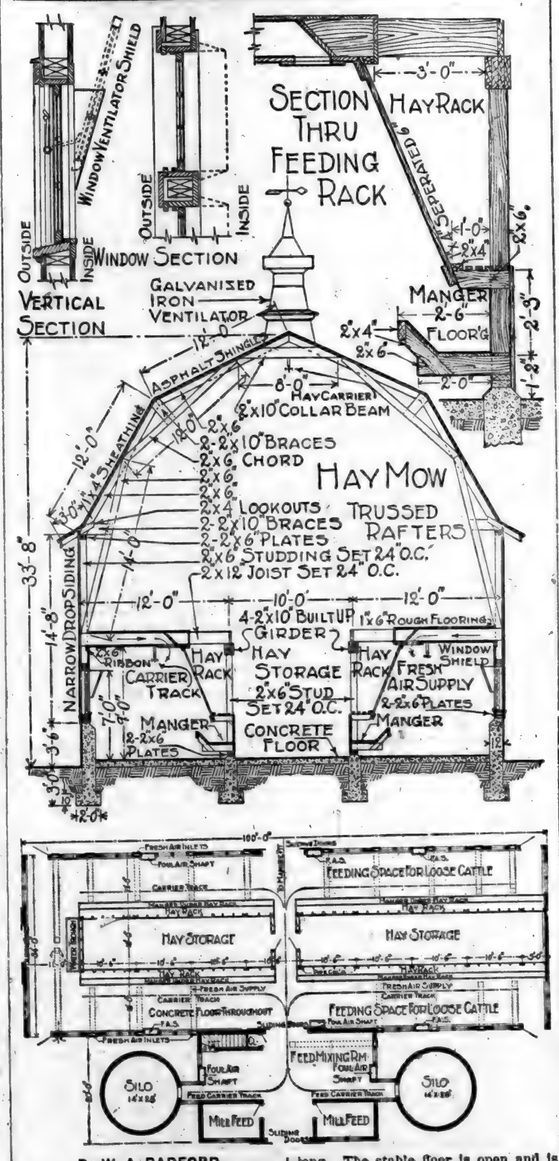
Beef Cattle Feeding Plant That Cuts Down Cost of Labor





By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

With fat cattle selling, when this was written, at $17.00 per hundred, the raising and feeding of beef animals is most profitable. However, the feeding operations on the farm will bring a greater return where there is equipment to cut the labor cost and to house the animals so that the feed they consume be used to the best advantage.

Herewith is reproduced an exterior view of a modern beef feeding plant. Also there are floor plans showing how the exterior is arranged and a cross-section giving some of the details of construction.

The barn is "T" shaped. The main structure is 34 feet wide and 100 feet long. The stable floor is open and is provided with hay racks and mangers running through the center. These racks are built up so that hay is stored in the racks, making an abundant supply constantly available to the animals.

At the front of the barn are the feed storage and mixing rooms with twin silos, one on either side. These silos are 14 feet in diameter and 28 feet high. They are connected with the feed room by an enclosed chute to which overhead carrier tracks run. These tracks extend into the stable and are so located that silage is carried to the mangers on either side of the hay storage racks.

The barn is of tight weather-proof construction and is equipped with a suction ventilation system. It provides a warm comfortable place for the feeder stock to stay in the winter time. Comfortable animals use their food to put on weight and fat instead of to provide heat to protect them from the cold as is the case when they are in the open during the severe winter time.

Simple Method Given to Test Heating Plant

A simple test which any home owner can make when his new home is turned over to him by the contractor will show whether the heating system is functioning as it should, that is, if the circulation of vapor, steam or water is uniform and positive to all parts of the radiator heating system.

The test is this: Start a fire under the boiler and then see if all the radiators heat up uniformly and promptly. There should not be more than from three to five minutes' difference between the time the radiator farthest from the heating plant warms up and the time that the radiator nearest the boiler warms up.

The home owner should inspect his new plant to see that all dampers are true and tight. The heater base must be tight and grounded to the floor so that no air leakage into the ash pit can occur at this point.

Narrow Flooring Best to Prevent Shrinkage

As a rule, the narrower any kind of floor is the better it will be, provided good workmanship is used and materials are all right in themselves.

The reason for this is that the shrinkage across a narrow piece is less than it is for a wide one, and that the cupping of the wider piece due to drying out of the wood is greater than in the narrower piece.

Special Varnish Needed for All Outside Work

A special grade of varnish, which costs a little more than the ordinary variety, is needed for outside work around a home. This varnish is made so that it will resist the ravages of the weather. The varnish must be able to withstand heat and cold in order that it will protect the wood and not turn white.

OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA IS BIG HELP TO ELDERLY PEOPLE

In 1885, Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today!

Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it.

Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.

Today, this same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any drugstore

POULTRY FACTS

LAYING HOUSES IN NEED OF CLEANING

Scrape and Scrub Various Utensils Made Use Of.

Information to poultrymen concerning fall cleaning of poultry houses is given in a statement just issued by Hoyt M. Wells, poultryman for the Colorado Agricultural college.

"The laying house for the pullets should be given a thorough cleaning," says Wells. "All dropping boards, roosts, nesting boxes, feeders and drinking containers ought to be scraped and scrubbed with a good disinfectant. Roosts may be painted with a carbolineum product to control red mites. Old litter should be removed from the floor, and if the floor is wooden or concrete, it should be scraped and sprayed with a good disinfectant.

"White-washing walls and ceiling will give greater sanitation and provide more light in the house in wintertime. White-wash may be applied best with a force spray pump."

This mixture gives good results: Slack lump lime with water to the consistency of cream. Take five quarts of this, add one pint of good coal tar disinfectant and one quart of kerosene, stir thoroughly, and add an equal amount of water. Strain the whitewash through a fine screen or a piece of burlap before using it in the sprayer.

"Window lights should be cleaned and broken ones replaced. Sweep down all muslin curtains, and replace with new muslin those that are too dirty or torn.

"This is the best time of the year to repair the roof, or put on a new one. Check over all seams on patent roofing for leaks.

"A good deep litter should be put in the laying house next, and new nesting material in the nest boxes. Remove old litter and replace with bright, clean straw every four weeks or oftener, if necessary."

Scratching Found Not Essential to Fowls

Three flocks of Rhode Island Reds and three White Leghorns at the University of Illinois indicated that hens do as well when fed grain in boxes as when they are obliged to scratch for it in deep litter. This method has the advantage of being much cleaner and more sanitary.

One lot of each breed was fed dry mash in hoppers and scratch grain morning and night in straw litter. A second lot received dry mash in hoppers, but the grain was fed twice daily in shallow troughs. For the third lot the scratch grain was ground and mixed with the mash and the whole ration self-fed in hoppers.

No high records were made, but the egg yields were not affected materially by the methods of feeding. The test ran for 41 weeks.

The grain mixture was shelled corn, 70 pounds and oats, 30 pounds. The mash was made up of 17 pounds each of ground corn, ground oats, wheat bran and flour middlings, 25 pounds of dried buttermilk, 5 pounds of bonemeal and 2 pounds of salt.

Poultry Facts

Shut up the broody hens each night.

Infertile eggs do not spoil as readily as fertile eggs do.

• • •

Eggs are a food which is quickly and easily digested.

• • •

Cleanliness is next to Godliness. In the chicken business it spells success or failure.

• • •

A little extra feeding now may give you more late summer and fall eggs. Hens won't eat much in the real hot weather, and a bit of extra weight put on them now will help them to lay later on.

• • •

Don't forget the water pans. Eggs are not produced without a constant supply.

• • •

For the gosling a mixture of corn meal, bran and ground oats mixed with the table scraps and moistened with milk or water to a crumbly consistency is satisfactory.

• • •

Records kept by poultry flock owners show that culling of flocks and marketing of unprofitable layers and surplus broilers are highly profitable practices.

• • •

Eggs from hens have a higher rate of hatchability than those from pullets, and produce larger and more vigorous chicks.

• • •

Charcoal is good for turkey poults—sweetens up their digestion. It's a good idea to keep a pan of it where the poults can help themselves.

• • •

If there are mites in the poultry house keep the chicks outside. The mites can live for six months to a year without the chicks, but the chicks can't live six days with the mites.

Insecticides Do Not Kill Insects

Certain Types of "Trick" Preparations Should Be Guarded Against.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thousands of pounds of insecticides, fungicides and disinfectants are sold annually in complete harmony with the insecticide act as enforced by the food, drug and insecticide administration, United States Department of Agriculture, but certain types of "trick" preparations are also being offered for sale and should be guarded against, say federal officials.

Many Are Warned.

Farmers, suburban dwellers, housewives, and others, are warned by the administration against buying preparations to be added to feed and drinking water which their makers say will control external parasites on poultry and other animals consuming them.

Neither should anyone be misled by the theoretically plausible claims made for preparations designed to be absorbed by the sap of trees to control fungous diseases and to kill insects on and in the trees.

Preparations to be hung in the home to drive away all household pests, purify the air and to prevent disease are also branded as useless by the officials.

One of the misbranded preparations sold to control lice, mites, ticks and fleas on poultry and other animals by being taken into the system with the food and drinking water, officials of the administration found could be bought for 18 cents a gallon. This preparation, retailed in small containers, netted the producer $64 a gallon. Neither this mixture nor any of the many similar mixtures could produce the results claimed for them.

Control Diseases.

Liquids, powders, and capsules to be placed in a hole in the tree, under the bark, or in the soil, and paints to be applied to the trunk of the tree, have been examined for their alleged powers to control fungous diseases and to kill insects when, according to the advertising literature, the substances are taken up by the sap and carried to all parts of the tree.

Not only is the value of these "remedies" very questionable, the administration reports, but many of them actually harm the trees. They may cause serious damage to shade and orchard trees, and in case of the latter, endanger the crop through failure to control insects and diseases.

Housewives are especially cautioned not to believe the glittering promises made for attractive little cases containing a chemical, which, when merely hung in a room, will drive away or kill moths, ants, roaches, flies, and mosquitoes, and at the same time disinfect the room, purify the air, and prevent disease.

Increased Production With Egg Prices High

Poultrymen, by careful attention to the breeding and management of their laying flocks, have effected a definite change in the egg market. According to H. L. Shrader of the United States Department of Agriculture, this is evident as to both seasonal and annual production.

"The market receipts of fresh laid eggs during the late summer and fall months have been increasing the last few years," he comments. "This means that the pullets are being hatched and are maturing earlier, but it also denotes improved efficiency, because the birds are laying more eggs when prices are highest."

From the standpoint of the consumer this tendency is of definite value. "Already we have noticed," Mr. Shrader says, "that the increased production in the season when eggs were formerly scarce has prevented prices from soaring to extremely high levels."

Spoiling of Silage in Winter Can Be Lessened

Spoiling of silage during the winter can be lessened by treating the inner walls of the silo with a solution which keeps out air. The mixture consists of one pound salt, two tablespoonfuls of alum, one teaspoonful of lye and four gallons of water, plus enough cement to make it the consistency of paste.

In some cases, the inside of the silo doors are lined with paper or the cracks filled with clay to keep out air.

Another scheme is to sow oats or cane at the top of the silo. These grains sprout quickly in the warm silage and the matted growth serves as an insulator excluding the air.

Supers Should Be Added Often as Bees Require

Supers should be added just as often as the bees require this extra storage space for honey. Usually the beekeepers find it necessary to add the first super during the latter part of June. The second super is usually added along about the end of the first week in July. From then on till the end of the season the supers should be added rather frequently. If it is a poor season for honey production, then it may not be necessary to add any supers.

Dehorning Cattle Is Favored for Feeders

Bruises Detract Greatly From Appearance of Carcass.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Feeder cattle having horns do not feed out so well as dehorned cattle," say W. H. Black and V. V. Parr of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin 1600-F, Dehorning, Castrating, Branding and Making Beef Cattle, just published for free distribution by the department. "Badly bruised carcasses," they go on to say, "are usually found in shipments of horned cattle. Bruises detract greatly from the appearance of the carcasses, thus lowering their sale value. Besides the damage done to meat, the hide is frequently damaged. Dehorned cattle usually bring from 25 to 75 cents a hundredweight more than horned cattle of similar quality and condition."

The authors also make recommendations as to castration, spaying, branding and earmarking of beef cattle. The bulletin also includes simple plans for construction of dehorning and branding chutes, including a chute with a movable side, known as a "squeeze," for holding the animal securely.

On the range it is common to brand calves while still small enough to be handled by ropes, but the authors suggest the advisability of constructing corrals with a chute adapted for working with yearling or older cattle, and a smaller chute for handling calves. Under such an arrangement it is possible to dehorn, castrate or spay, and brand the animals at a single operation.

For dehorning, the authors mention the application of caustic to stop the growth of the horns on calves, and saws and dehorning clippers for more mature cattle. They mention precautions for preventing infestation of wounds by screw worm flies.

Farmers' Bulletin 1600-F is a revision and expansion of, and supersedes Farmers' Bulletin 949. It is written in simple and condensed style, and illustrated. It may be obtained free on application to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Health and Vigor Are Important in Culling

At least once during the summer or early fall the poultry flock should be culled to get rid of the birds that are not paying for their keep. Health and vigor are of first importance in culling poultry. Hens in good laying condition have bright red combs and wattles. Good layers have combs that are very waxy in texture. In yellow-shanked breeds, the beak and shanks of the heavy layers are ordinarily pale yellow or white. The pubic bones of a good layer are thin and flexible and when the hen is in laying condition they are wide apart. The skin of a good layer is soft, pliable, and of good texture and the back is wide and long. Another important point is the time of molting. Poor layers usually molt earlier than good ones. Heavy layers generally do not begin to molt before September or October. Culling not only improves the breeding quality of the flock, but if done early enough will save feeding costs and spread the marketing of surplus hens over a longer period than if the culled hens are all marketed late in the fall.

Agricultural Squibs

The woodland enhances the value of the entire farm property.

• • •

Potato aphids may be controlled in the field by the use of contact sprays.

• • •

Of course it costs more per acre to get high yields, but then it costs less per bushel or pound.

• • •

The white grub, pilfering offspring of the ordinary, blundering June bug, is due again next year.

• • •

The Japanese barberry does not carry rust, hence it is perfectly safe to plant for shrubbery clumps.

• • •

Sodium chlorate has proved to be a successful method for the eradication of wild morning glory and Canada thistle.

• • •

Practically all of the coal-tar preparations put on the market as fly repellents are effective for several hours after the application has been made.

• • •

High protein wheat usually commands a premium. The premium may be secured by farmers under condition they know the protein content of their wheat.

• • •

Stop smut losses in wheat by treating the seed with copper carbonate dust. The poison chemical disinfects the seed by killing the smut spores that may be clinging to it.

• • •

The wheat weevil will be one of the farm problems for next winter, for there are thousands of bushels of wheat going into the bins on the farm. The season has been such that the common weevils have had an opportunity to lay their eggs on the grain while standing in the fields.

Traffic cop gets summons

Even he can't get away with it

"DON'T try to put anything over on Nature," is the way a cop would express it. "Sooner or later she'll get you. Give you a ticket and lay you up in a place where you'd rather not be. Even cops can't get away with it. Like everyone else, if they don't pay attention to the warnings they get a summons that lands them in the doctor's office.

"What the doctor advises is Nujol. Says Nujol will regulate you just like you regulate traffic. Keep things from getting in a jam. And the doctor is right. Just ask the healthiest men on the Force. If they need Nujol—with all the exercise they get—what about the fellows that roll by in their cars?

First Poet Laureate

The first poet laureate of England was John Kay, who was appointed to that position by Edward IV, according to Arvine's Encyclopedia. The only composition that Kay left to posterity is a prose English translation of a Latin history of the siege of Rhodes. In the title, addressed to King Edward, Kay styled himself "hys humble poet laureate."—New York Times.

Wishing to Be Unselfish

One of the faculty members of Indiana university entertained relatives recently with a chicken dinner. Mrs. Blank explained to her children that they must let their cousin have the liver that day and not be selfish. Returning to the kitchen after a brief absence, she met her five-year-old daughter coming out of the kitchen. Later she missed the liver and asking the child about it received the astonishing reply:

"Yes, mother, I ate it so I wouldn't be selfish."—Indianapolis News.

Gerald Martin Kills Intruder

Started Into Home When 13 Year Old Boy Acts in Self Defense, Victim Dies in Hospital Five Hours Later.

A strange man who acted like a crazy person was shot and killed by thirteen year old Gerald Martin at the Martin home two and a half miles north and east of St Joe early Tuesday morning.

The shooting occurred when the stranger threatened to enter the Martin home. The boy seized a shotgun that was standing in the kitchen and fired it at close range. The charge entered the man's left shoulder. He died about five hours later, at 10:15, at the Dr. J. A. Sanders' hospital in Auburn.

Mrs. Vessie Martin, a widow, was at home with her two sons, Woodrow, 16, and Gerald. She afterward told Sheriff John C. Armstrong and Prosecuting Attorney Richard W. Sharpless, the circumstances. She was awakened, she said, about 2 o'clock by the loud barking of the dog. She looked out the downstairs window, but could see no one and went back to bed. The dog continued to bark and Mrs. Martin again got out of bed. She went upstairs and asked Woodrow if he could see anyone. He looked, but at the time there was no one in sight.

Would Not Talk

Mrs. Martin returned downstairs and a few minutes later Woodrow came down and reported he had seen a man in the yard, near the front door on the north side of the house. Mrs. Martin asked him what he wanted and he made no answer. She ordered him off the premises and Woodrow also told him to leave. He walked out of the yard, the dog following him, and disappeared in the road, going south.

At daybreak Woodrow and Gerald went down the road to see if they could find the man. They returned and told their mother the man was coming back. When he arrived he picked up a good sized stick and chased the dog. Mrs. Maritn warned him away, but he walked onto the back porch, still holding the stick. Mrs. Martin ran from the house, shouting for help. Gerald was behind her in the kitchen doorway. When the intruder started into the house Gerald picked up the shotgun and shot at him. Mortally wounded, the man staggered through the yard and across the road, falling in the ditch just west of the house.

In the meantime, before the shooting Woodrow Martin had run to George Strong's home for help and then he went to the Wm. Staman home to telephone the sheriff. Mr. Armstrong and his deputy, Art Zimmerman, started for the scene at once. When they arrived, within a half hour after the shooting, the man was unconscious and was still lying in the ditch, his clothing blood-soaked. A number of neighbors were standing about. The officers put the wounded man in their automobile and rushed him to the hospital. It was apparent that he was fatally hurt.

Boy Was Excited

At school time Gerald went to St. Joe for his daily classes. He is a pupil in the seventh grade. His mother went to the home of Mrs. Hattie Widney near St. Joe, where she is employed. She was interviewed there by the proscutor and the sheriff. She expressed regret at the affair, but she said Gerald was excited and was afraid of the strange man. She insisted she did not tell the boy to use the gun and did not know he intended to do so. She said the man said nothing whatever, either before he was shot or afterward.

The stranger seemed to be about fifty years old and the sheriff believes he had been in some institution, having probably escaped. He had a considerable growth of whiskers. He wore two pairs of blue denim overalls, a blue work shirt, a blue pin-striped coat and a gray slouch hat. He was about five feet, six inches in height and wighed about 180 pounds.

The body was removed to Coroner John R. Clark's morgue and Mr. Clark will hold an inquest. His mother's story indicates that he acted in self-defense and to protect his mother.

The executive committee, composed of the president, Grace Dilley; vice president, Cora Curie; recording secretary, Mae Miser; corresponding secretary, Golden High; treasurer, Avis Staman; critic, Lora Leighty and parliamentarian, Jennie Sechler, served a very delicious dinner at 6:30, after which the business meeting was held.

The meeting was called to order by the president, followed by reading of the Club Collect by Mrs. Jennie Sechler; music by the quartet composd of Avis Staman, Lora Leighty, Cora Curie and Jennie Sechler and a piano duet by Cora Curie and Lora Leighty, which all thoroughly enjoyed.

Mrs. Golden High and Mrs. Mae Miser conducted a very interesting lesson on the Nation's Capitol.

The secretary's report was read followed by the responses to roll call with twenty members giving vacation reminiscenses which proved very interesting, especially the one given by Mrs. Winifred Shook as she recently returned from a trip to Washington, D. C., and other places of interest in the east.

The following visitors, Mrs. Nina Kees, of Butler, Miss Ditmars, Miss Gant, Mrs. Edna Perkins and Mrs. Agnes Monroe, also gave accounts of their vacation.

After the roll call more music by the quartet was enjoyed, then all adjourned expressing their enjoyment of the evening to the committee and hoping to meet September 25th at the home of Golden High at Spencerville.

The Home Bureau Club of Concord Township met Friday, September 20th at the pleasant country home of Mrs. Grace Dilley. Club opened by singing a selection of old fashioned airs.

The president announced that a project meeting would be held at Auburn, October 27th in the assembly room of the Court House, beginning at 9:30.

Mrs. Millie Shull gave a reading entitled, "Take Me Back to Indiana;" round table discussion, "The Old Fashioned School Teacher" also "The Modern School Teacher," which was lead by Mrs. Anna Rickett, this was very interesting to all. A rug demonstration was given by Mrs. Pluma Hamilton, Mrs. Edith Cole and Mrs. Ann Sechler. The roll was called with twenty members responding with "Why I never learned to drive an automobile."

One guest was present, Mrs. Edna Perkins. Delicious refreshments were served by the committee. The October meeting will be held October 18th at the Gymnasium, this being guest night, families.

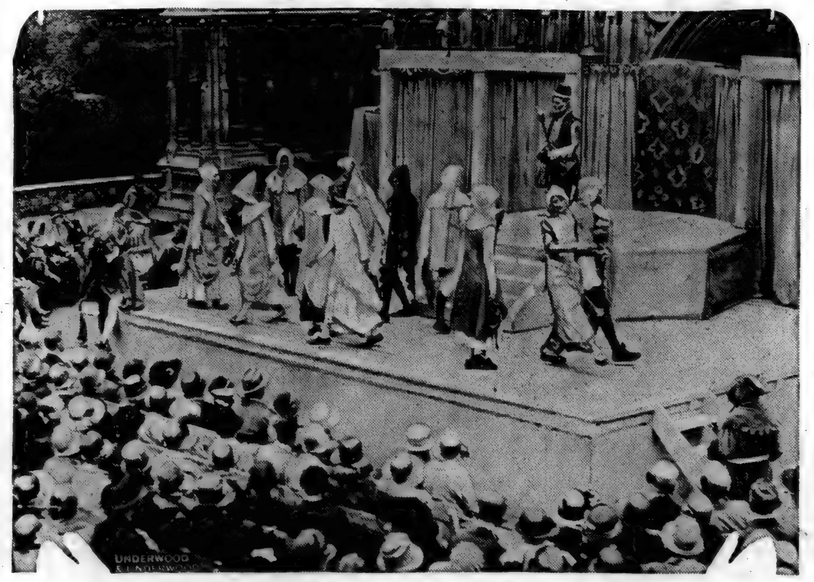
"Everyman" Performed on Porch of a Cathedral



For the first time in the history of England, music and drama were presented in a cathedral on the occasion of the Canterbury Cathedral festival. Plays took place outside the west door and in the chapter house, concerts were held in the nave, serenades in the cloisters, and chamber music in the new chapter house. The photograph shows the folk dancers dancing before "Death" during the performance of the drama "Everyman" outside the great west door.

Lesson for September 29

REVIEW: SIGNIFICANCE OF THE EXILE AND THE RESTORATION

GOLDEN TEXT—The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Stories Retold.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Stories Retold.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Some Great Men of the Period

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Providence in the Exile and the Restoration.

The grade of the class, the aptitude of the scholars and the genius of the teacher are factors which determine the method of review. For adult classes the following suggestions are made:

I.

Study the lessons of the quarter as illustrating the philosophy of history in God's dealings with His people in their captivity and restoration. Assignment of topics should be made at least one week in advance. Only adult scholars should be expected to use this method. The following subjects might be assigned:

Why God Permitted Israel to Go into Exile.

What Changed Views of Life Resulted from the Exile.

The Bearing of the Exile Upon Prophecy.

The Relationship of Divine Chastening to Divine Love.

II. Character Study.

Assign the outstanding heroes of the quarter's lessons to members of the class to have them report. This assignment should be made at least a week in advance. Some of the outstanding characters for consideration are: Ezekiel, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, Zerubbabel and Malachi.

III. Summary of Contents.

This method is usable at all times and can be adapted to most of the grades. The following suggestions are made for carrying out this method:

Lesson for July 7—Before Ezekiel was commissioned as a prophet he was given a vision of the Almighty. After this vision he was given an experimental knowledge of God's Word.

Lesson for July 14—Ezekiel sets forth personal responsibility as bearing on the prophet and upon the people to whom he ministered. Ezekiel's responsibility was to hear God's Word and sound the warning. The people's responsibility was to hear and obey.

Lesson for July 21—Ezekiel is the prophet of hope. He ministered to Israel in captivity. God sent him to show to Israel the fullness of His plan for the world through them.

Lesson for July 28—Because Daniel made the Lord the arbiter of his life, he was able to make known the king's dream, with its interpretation.

Lesson for Aug. 4—While Belshazzar and his lords were engaged in drunken revelry, a mysterious hand recorded divine judgment.

Lesson for Aug. 11—Because of jealousy certain wicked men plotted Daniel's downfall. They trumped up a charge against him on the ground of his foreign religion. Though the foolish decree of the king was executed, Daniel was delivered and his accusers were cast to the lions and destroyed.

Lesson for Aug. 18—Though Israel went into captivity as a chastisement of the Lord, later He restored them.

Lesson for Aug. 25—In the restoration of the people to their own land, the first thing necessary was the provision of a place for the worship of God. As soon as this work was done, violent opposition was in evidence. That which God sets out to do shall be completed.

Lesson for Sept. 1—Through Zerubbabel the people were brought back and established in their own land, but they had gone far away from God. There was now need of a religious leader. Ezra was moved by the Spirit to lead them back to fellowship.

Lesson for Sept. 8—When Nehemiah heard of the distress of his brethren in Jerusalem he took the matter to the Lord in prayer. The Lord gave him favor with the king, who permitted him to go back and build the walls.

Lesson for Sept. 15—The method used in bringing back the people to God was God's Word. Because the Word was made plain, the people repented of their sins.

Lesson for Sept. 22—Malachi as an aid to Nehemiah in effecting reforms pointed out the sins of the people, namely, base ingratitude, a corrupt priesthood, mixed marriages, and robbing God by withholding tithes. He pointed to a Day of Judgment when righteous retribution would be meted out to the wicked and rewards would be given to the faithful.

Jesus Prophesieth His Death

And Jesus went before them. And he took again the 12, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him, saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him unto the Gentiles; and they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; and the third day he shall rise again.—Mark 10, 32 to 34.

ROLLED AND FANCY CHEESE SANDWICH

Different Chopped Vegetables May Be Worked in.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Neufchatel or cream cheese is used in both the rolled and the fancy sandwiches illustrated. The rolled sandwiches are spread with cream cheese mixed with finely chopped watercress. Chow chow, chili sauce, or any other desired pickle mixture might have been used with the cheese in place of the water cress. Another good spread for these sandwiches, suggested by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, consists of equal parts of soft cheese, chopped olives, pimentoes or green peppers, and nuts. Any two of these may be used with the cheese. Add salt and a little lemon juice if liked.

Dainty Afternoon Sandwiches.

The bread for rolled sandwiches should be fresh and elastic in texture, so that it will not crumble or break when rolled. Spread the sandwich mixture on the cut end of the loaf, and then with a very sharp knife, cut off the thinnest possible slice, roll it up, and trim the ends. Use cutters of fancy shapes such as hearts, clovers, stars, and others for the flat sandwiches. In spreading these, do not put filling too near the crust or parts likely to be trimmed off.

Many different chopped vegetables may be worked into cream cheese, seasoned, and used for sandwich spreads. Some of the best liked are parsley, water cress, lettuce, spring onions, chives, radishes, cucumbers, and celery. Onion or lemon juice may be included in the seasoning. These mixtures may also be used in the form of balls or stuffings for green peppers or celery to accompany salads.

COOK CUCUMBERS IN SEVERAL WAYS

They Are Delicious Dipped in Batter and Fried.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cucumbers need not always be eaten raw. They can be cooked in several delicious ways. The bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, suggests serving them stuffed and baked, or dipped in a batter and fried. Crisp sliced or diced uncooked cucumbers are, of course, usually an acceptable addition to any vegetable salad. Try them in liver salad, using four parts of cooked liver to one part of diced cucumber, served on lettuce with mayonnaise. Salmon or tuna fish salad with cucumbers added is also appetizing. Thinly sliced cucumbers spread with mayonnaise and seasoned make a delicious and moist sandwich filling.

Baked Stuffed Cucumbers.

Peel four or five good-sized cucumbers, split them lengthwise, and scoop out the seed portion. Parboil the cucumbers in slightly salted water for fifteen minutes. Drain and stuff the cavities with a mixture of tomatoes cut into pieces, minced onion, and buttered bread crumbs. Place the stuffed cucumbers in a shallow baking dish, add two tablespoonfuls of hot water, and bake in a moderate oven until the cucumbers are tender and the stuffing is delicately browned.

Fried Cucumbers.

4 medium-sized cucumbers	1 cup flour
	1 egg
1 cup milk	¾ tsp. salt

Pare the cucumbers evenly and cut them in slices lengthwise about one-eighth inch thick. Beat the egg slightly, add the milk, and pour this liquid into the flour and salt, stirring until smooth. Dip the slices of cucumber into the cover batter and brown them on both sides in hot fat. Drain on paper and serve hot.

Uncle Sam's Cakes Are Mostly Home Product

Cake making is one field in which the American housewife has not yet surrendered to the commercial baker. The bakers have taken over a large proportion of the bread baking of the country, but the cakes the country eats are predominantly of home manufacture.

The bakers have here a wide opportunity for expansion of their business. Baking specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, however, inform the baker that "not only must he make cake that is good and yet relatively inexpensive, but he must also convince the housewife that the cake made in the bakeshop, like the bread, is as good as that made in the home, and possibly better."

LEARNING TO LIKE RIGHT KIND OF FOODS

Train the Child From the Start to Like the Right Foods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A child's eating habits can be so formed in babyhood under his mother's wise guidance, that he will simply accept as a matter of course, and really like, all the common foods which make up a satisfactory diet. Later in life these tastes and habits in eating will stand him in good stead, for he will instinctively choose the foods that, in combination, serve as a basis for good nutrition. He will have learned to enjoy variety, to try new flavors and textures, and, socially, to be very much more cosmopolitan and at his ease wherever he goes, than the person who was allowed in childhood to eat what he liked and reject what was strange.

The normal, rapidly growing child has a good appetite. He comes to the table eager for his meal, and he eats with zest the food set before him. It must, of course, be appetizingly prepared—there must be an appeal in its appearance, its odor, and its flavor—but if the mother knows her job of preparing suitable food properly, it will be eaten as a matter of course.

The bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, makes these suggestions about the early training of children's food habits: Accustom the child early in his life to a variety of foods, one by one. By the end of the first year the baby should have been given repeatedly eggs and some of the more usual fruits, vegetables and cereals, as supplements to his principal food, milk. Start with small amounts and increase the portion gradually. Allow the baby the chance to learn the flavor and texture of one new food before another one is introduced to him.

He may object to new foods at first. It is not uncommon for a baby to spit out the first few mouthfuls of any food that is strange to him. He has to get used to new tastes, different temperatures, strange textures, and to new eating utensils. Changing the baby's diet from liquid to semi-solid and finally to solid foods must be done step by step. Long before he gives up the bottle or the breast teach the baby to take water, fruit juice, cereal gruel, and strained vegetables from a spoon and then from a cup. Make these gruels and purees thicker in consistency until the child is prepared for the next step—mashed and scraped or finely diced fruits and vegetables. Even the young baby gets hard toast or zwieback to exercise his gums. In this way he gradually learns to chew and swallow foods of different texture and consistency so that by the age of one and one-half or two years he has left baby foods behind him.

Meals for children of any age should come at regular hours and there should be no distractions during the meal. Serve the very young child only one or two foods at a meal; too much variety at once bewilders him.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By The Baroness Orczy

W. N. U. Service

Nay, more! There were many who positively asserted that in some unexplainable way the whole of the Deseze affair was connected with the capture of the English spy who was known throughout France as the Scarlet Pimpernel. This spy had been at work in the district for some time; every one knew that it was he who had dragged those ci-devant traitors and aristos, the Tournon-d'Arenays, out of Citizen Lauzet's clutches, and Citizen Lauzet was now having his revenge. He would capture the Scarlet Pimpernel, catch him in the act of trying to effect the escape of the Deseze family, and thus earn the reward of ten thousand livres offered to any man who would lay that enemy of France by the heels.

Lucky Lauzet! Thus to have the means of earning a sum of money sufficient to keep a man and his family in affluence for the rest of their lives. And besides the money there would be the glory, too! Who could gauge the heights to which a man might rise if he brought about the capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel? Well, Lauzet would do it! Lucky Lauzet! He would certainly do it, asserted some; those sort of men always have all the luck! There were even those who asserted that the Scarlet Pimpernel was already captured and that Lauzet had got him. Lucky, lucky Lauzet!

"You don't suppose," one man declared, "that anything would be known of the affair unless it was already accomplished? Lauzet is not one to talk till after a thing is done. No! No! Believe me, my friends, Lauzet has already got his ten thousand livres in his pocket!"

He was a wizened little old man from over Lanoy way, and now he dolefully shook his head.

"And to think," he went on, "that I might have laid that English spy by the heels myself, if I had had a bit of luck like Lauzet."

A shout of derision greeted this astounding assertion.

"You, papa Sargon?" one of the crowd ejaculated with a loud laugh, "you, laying the English spy by the heels? That is the best joke I've heard for many a day. Will you tell us how that came about?"

And papa Sargon told the tale how he and his wife had a visit from a squad of soldiers who told him that they were after a band of English spies who were known to be in that district. The soldiers asked for a night's shelter, as they were weary after a long day's ride. Papa Sargon had made them comfortable in the big barn behind the cottage; but the next morning, when he went to see how they had fared in the night, he found the barn empty and the soldiers gone. And papa Sargon remained convinced in his own mind that for the better part of a night he had harbored the most bitter enemies of his country, and if he had only guessed who those supposed soldiers were, he might have informed the local commissary of police, and earned ten thousand livres for himself.

Now, this story would not perhaps have been altogether convincing to unprejudiced ears, but such as it was, and with everything that had occurred in Moisson these last few days, it aroused considerable excitement. It went to prove that the Scarlet Pimpernel was not nearly so mysterious or so astute as rumor credited him to be, since he almost fell a victim to papa and mamma Sargon. It also went to prove to the satisfaction of the company present that Citizen Lauzet had been sharper than papa Sargon and, having come across the Scarlet Pimpernel through some lucky accident, he had laid hands on him and was even now conveying him to Paris, where a grateful government would hand him over the promised reward of ten thousand livres.

This notion, which gradually filtrated into the minds of the company, did not tend to make Citizen Lauzet any more popular; and when presently most of that same company adjourned to Leon's for refreshment, there were some among the younger men who wanted to know why they should not have their share in those ten thousand livres. The Scarlet Pimpernel, they argued with more enthusiasm than logic, had been captured in their district. The Deseze family who were in some way connected with the capture were citizens of Moisson; why should not they, citizens of Moisson, too, finger a part of the reward?

It was all wild and illogical, and it would have been impossible for anyone to say definitely who was the prime mover in the ensuing resolution which, by the way, was carried unanimously, that a deputation should set out forthwith for Mantes to interview Citizen Lauzet and demand in the name of justice, and for the benefit of Moisson, some share in the money prize granted by the government for the capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel. Subsequently, both papa Sargon and a drover from Aincourt were held to be chiefly to blame, but as papa Sargon properly remarked, neither he nor the stranger from Aincourt stood to gain anything by the wild goose chase, so why should they have instigated it?

Be that as it may, soon after midday meal, half a score of young stalwarts climbed into the cart of the drover from Aincourt, and the party, full of enthusiasm and of Leon's excellent red wine, set out for Mantes. They had provided themselves with a miscellaneous collection of arms; those who possessed guns brought them along, then they borrowed a couple of pistols from Leon and two more from old Mitau, who had been a soldier in his day. Some of them had sabers, others took sickles or scythes which might be useful; one man had a saw, another took a wood chopper. All these things would be useful should there be a fight over this affair, and most of them hoped that there would be a fight.

The first disappointment came on arrival in Mantes. Here at the commissariat they were informed that Citizen Lauzet had been gone these last two hours. He had ridden away in the company of his friend who had come from Paris some two days previously. The general idea prevalent at the commissariat was that the two men had ridden away in the direction of Paris.

The second disappointment, a corollary of the first, was that the diligence with prisoners and escort had started on its way less than half an hour ago. It seemed in truth as if the plot thickened. Lauzet and his friend from Paris gone, the diligence gone! No one paused for a moment to reflect how this could possibly mean anything in the nature of a plot, but by this time spirits were inflamed. Unaccountably inflamed. Every one was so poor these days; money was so terribly hard to earn; work was so grinding, remuneration so small, that now that the idea of the capture of the English spy with its attendant reward had seized hold of the imagination of these young hotheads, they clung to it tenaciously, grimly, certain that if they acted quickly and wisely, and if no one else got in the way, they would succeed in gaining the golden prize. A competence! Just think on it! And with nothing to do for it but an exciting adventure. And here was Lauzet interfering! Snatching the prize for himself! Lauzet, who already drew a large salary from the state for very little work.

All this had been talked over, sworn over, discussed, commented at great length all the way between Moisson and Mantes, in the rickety cart driven by the drover from Aincourt. He was a wise man, that driver. His advice was both sound and bold. "Why," he asked, pertinently, "should a man like Citizen Lauzet get everything he wants? I say it is because he has a friend over in Paris who comes along and helps him. Because he has money and influence. What? Was there ever anything seen quite so unjust? Where is the English spy, my friends? I ask you. He is in this district. Our district. And what I say is that what's in our district belongs to us. Remember, there's ten thousand livres waiting for every man who takes a hand in the capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel. Ten thousand livres! And Citizen Lauzet, with that stranger from Paris, is even at this hour riding away with it in his pocket."

Easy for Woman to Find Parking Space

It was a busy corner and there were parking spaces for just one car. A gentleman espied the space, counted it his own and proceeded to ease his car into it. To do this he had, it seems, to back, turn, wheel, run forward, shift gears, and attack on the right and left flanks.

While he was going through this very elaborate maneuvering, a woman driver arrived and cleanly usurped the parking space by the absurdly simple method of driving her automobile straight into it without flourishes or trouble.

A moment or so passed and then the gentleman realized for all his strategy the position was lost. "Say, sister . . ." he began, and he was still talking as the woman snapped the door of the car and got lost in the crowd afoot.—Baltimore Sun.

WISE WOMAN

"We can't afford a trip this year, so John is going to spend his vacation at home," sighed Mrs. Black.

"We can't afford one either," snapped Mrs. White, "but you can bet your sweet life we are going to take one anyway. You don't catch me spending two weeks getting up three meals a day and having my husband hanging around the house messing it up faster than I can pick up after him."

Greater Wealth

Two small boys were boasting about the wealth of their respective fathers.

"My father," said one, "has so much money that he doesn't know how to spend it."

"That's nothing," retorted the other, "my father has got so much that my mother doesn't know how to spend it."

Sir Twombly—The very idea. You have the impudence to present a bill for £20 on a coat which has long since gone out of style?

HELP!

"Does your bride know anything about cooking?" asked the old friend, meeting a recent groom.

"Well," he grinned, "I heard her calling up her mother the other day to ask if she had to use soft water for soft-boiled eggs and hard water for the hard-boiled ones."

Japanese Push Battle on Tubercular Plague

Concerned over the increase of tuberculosis in Japan, the authorities are planning an extensive campaign of publicity to educate the public on means of prevention.

April 25 has been used for many years by the Tokyo health bureau as a day for starting health campaigns, and activity this year was centered on tuberculosis. Last year deaths from tuberculosis totaled over 28,000 more than in any other recorded year. The average age of death was 23.6 years for men and 27.7 years for women.

The country was divided into two categories for the study. In cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants the total deaths for men were 9,156 and for women, 9,402. Taking as a whole the rural districts and villages and towns with a population of less than 100,000, deaths among men totaled 4,527 for men and 5,808 for women. The average age of death in the country was found to be slightly higher than in the cities.

Sulphur Found in Craters

Sulphur is being spouted by volcanoes of Chile, according to Don Juan M. Golkovic, a Montenegrin prospector, who claims to have found the richest deposit of pure sulphur in the world. Estimates have placed the quantity found at more than 2,000,000 tons. It is lodged in the slopes of six volcanoes. From the mouths of the craters, about 95 per cent pure sulphur continues to flow, according to the explorer. The find is the result of 30 years of exploration by Golkovic.

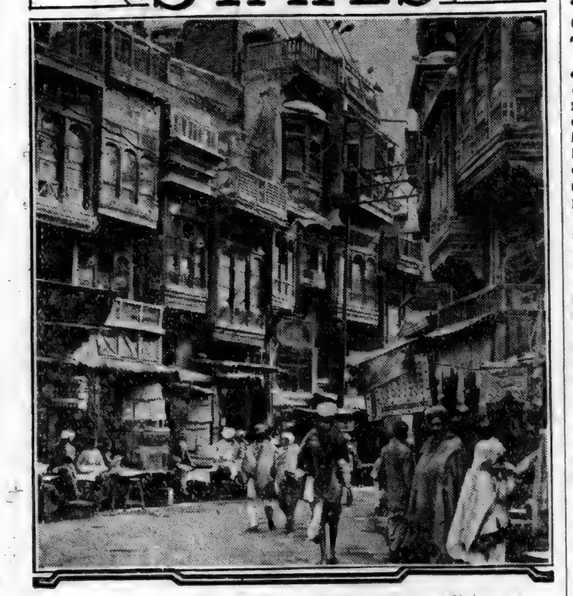
TWO INDIAN STATES



A Few of Lahore's Balconies.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

AMONG the multiplicity of provinces and states in India, two stand out as more familiar than their fellows to Western ears—the Punjab and Hyderabad.

Although the Punjab was one of the last districts to come under British control, it has long been noted for its progressive viewpoint and modern activities. It is a vast agricultural state built upon irrigation, the dry climate of its plains making farming possible only where canals lead Himalyan river waters into the fields.

There are seven of these great streams which flow from mountain snow fields down over the hot, dry plains. Of these the Indus and the Jumna, a branch of the Ganges, form the two outer limits of the province. Between them are the five fingerlike tributaries of the Panjnad, from which the district received its name in the days of ancient conquests. The word Punjab comes from an old Persian compound meaning "five waters."

Punjab province is shaped like a letter "W" whose top extends far into the hill country which forms the north of India, and whose left leg drops into the great desert. Between these two extremes lie the plains for which the province is famous. On their irrigated surface crowd 25,000,000 people.

The Punjab is one of the few parts of India where Mohammedans greatly outnumber the Hindus. It is also the homeland of the Sikhs, that tall and swarthy race who police so much of the British empire. The great variety of racial and religious types in the province, its nearness to the border, and the fact that Simla, India's official summer capital, lies in its hills, combine to give the district great romantic interest.

Historic Lahore, the provincial capital beside the river Ravi, is celebrated among the cities of India for its heat in summer and cold in winter. Early in May government officials retreat to the hills for the duration of the hot season. Amritsar, the holy city of the Sikhs, is built around an artificial lake. Its bazaars are famed for Kashmir shawls and oriental rugs. Either of these two Punjab cities might have sprung full grown from some Eastern fairy tale. Their sky lines give the impression of stage scenery and their streets are perpetual pageants of movement and color.

Delhi and Simla.

Delhi, the capital of the Indian empire, lies in a federal district cut out from Punjab territory. This old city on the River Jumna was capital of the ancient Mogul empire of India and boasts some of the most beautiful mosques and palaces in the world. Like Lahore, however, it is famed for its summer heat, and the English early seek refuge from the sun in the Simla hills. The viceroy and his governmental family conduct their official duties at an elevation of 7,000 feet during the hot season.

It is to beautiful Simla, high amid the pines and cedars of the foothills, that Anglo-India retreats from the heat of the plains. At Simla, wrote Kipling "all things begin and many come to an evil end." High up the mountainside on terrace upon terrace stretch pleasant cottages of the Anglo-Indians. Roads and bridle paths wind among the fir trees beside the English church and cricket grounds. Only troops of monkeys, swinging from tree to tree, speak of India. Simla, to the Englishman, is a bit of home.

This gay resort is a different world from the plains below on which stretch mile upon mile the farming villages that make up the Punjab, stifling hot in summer, freezing cold in winter, depending for their livelihood upon irrigation. Part of this vast region is governed by native rulers, like the Maharajah of Patiala, while part is under direct British control. Both sorts of government have aided in the building of roads and canals and in the establishment of schools to relieve the lot of the dense population crowded between the "five waters."

The Sikhs, number fewer than 9 per cent of the 25,000,000 crowded into this wheat field area of India.

Hyderabad with its 82,700 square miles is the greatest of the Indian states in area. The ruler is the Nizam, and the state is as often referred to as "the Nizam's Dominions" as it is by name.

Politically, Hyderabad is of great importance. The Nizam is the highest ranking Mohammedan prince of India, and his dominions are the heart of Moslem feeling and activity for the whole peninsula. Yet, by one of the strange quirks common in Indian affairs, the 11,000,000 subjects of this ruler are predominantly of the Hindu faith.

Hyderabad Almost Independent.

The state of Hyderabad has a status not easily defined. The British empire, through its aspect, the Indian empire, takes care of all foreign relations, and the Nizam undertakes to furnish certain troops for empire defence; but otherwise the state is almost as independent as Afghanistan or Persia. The public finances of the state have often been in bad shape; but the Nizam's private wealth is tremendous. Doubtless that is to be expected, for before Hyderabad received its present name it was the kingdom of Golconda—a name which has become a synonym for fabulous wealth. From a Golconda diamond mine, it is said, came the Koh-i-nor, perhaps the most famous of the world's huge diamonds.

Hyderabad city, capital of the state, and chief residence of the Nizam, has a population of half a million and is the fourth city of India. Most of the habitations were once mud huts; but many have been rebuilt with brick during the last quarter century. The Nizam's palaces, those of the nobles, and numerous government buildings, all of stone, add to the present substantial appearance of the city. In the exact center of the walled area rise four lofty minarets, spaced in a quadrangle, dominating the sky line. From these towers four broad streets run to the four quarters of the city. Over each, a short way from the towers, is a hugh arch.

The minarets are not connected with a mosque, but at a little distance from them is one of the largest temples of the Moslem world, the Mecca mosque. Under the huge twin domes of this structure 10,000 of the followers of the Prophet may assemble.

In size, the Nizams' dominions are almost exactly equal to Kansas; and as in that state some regions are comparatively dry. Kansas would have to be moved to southern Mexico, however, in order to lie in latitudes corresponding to those of Hyderabad. The country abounds in dry rocky ridges and buttes, especially in the southern part. In that section the streams dry up in summer and water must be impounded in tanks. These small artificial lakes dot the entire countryside. On the black lands of the north and west cotton is grown.

Clear Train-Calling Asked

Started by a school girl, a movement for clearer announcing of trains is under way in Cape Town, South Africa. Spurred by a near-accident to an old lady who, with many others, thought that an announcer had called "All change for Retreat," when he had said "Train for Retreat," the girl called in others to join in a drive for distinct speech about trains. The movement has caused government railways to take up the matter.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

Gives Vagaries of Appendix

THE function of the renal organs or kidneys is to preserve a certain constancy in the blood stream and to eliminate certain noxious elements from the body. To perform this double function, three types of kidneys have been evolved. The developing human embryo, as well as embryos of other mammals, rehearses this story, all three types appearing in prenatal life.

The alimentary canal appears first as a closed tube within the body. It opens later at each end, the upper opening becoming part of the mouth cavity. Below this opening four crevices appear which represent the internal arrangement of the fish-like gill-clefts. Below these crevices a single sac-like structure appears; this divides, and by further subdivisions becomes the right and left lung. From the region of the crevices outgrowths of the alimentary canal develop into thyroid, epithyroid, and thymus glands. From the extreme upper end of the embryonic canal develops a portion of another important gland, the pituitary. The stomach at first is merely an enlargement of the canal. Just below the stomach two outgrowths of the canal develop into the important glands of digestion, pancreas and liver.

Without further details of fetal development it will be worth while to recall certain variations in the systems of digestion, respiration, and circulation, which are significant in light of our animal ancestors.

Our dentition is as well adapted for spinach as for beefsteak, specialized for neither.

Man, apes, and Old world monkeys have thirty-two teeth, eight on each side of each jaw; two incisors, one canine, two bicuspids, three molars. Man's mammalian ancestor had forty-four teeth, three incisors, one canine, three bicuspids, four molars.

Most fishes have teeth in the roof of the mouth as well as in the jaws proper. They do not occur in "sets," but are endlessly shed and reproduced. In the fish embryo the dental germs appear before the jawbones; in the human embryo also. In the infant's mouth is a ridge with from five to seven pairs of cross ridges; they are even more pronounced in the fetus. They disappear with age. Apes have ten pairs of these ridges. In pigs, they are strong enough to crush food. Their presence in man, with an occasional more or less complete third set of teeth, points to fish and reptile days; teeth in the roof of the mouth, endlessly replaced.

Tonsils appear in fetal life as pockets. They shift position and develop into prominent bodies. With adult life they begin to disappear, leaving pockets prone to disease. They are not understood and are never alike.

The cricket's chirp was the first music on earth, but it was instrumental. The first voice was the amphibian's. Frog, bird, cat, dog, and man would be silent without a larynx; without the human larynx there could have been no human speech or Tower of Babel. Ours is a wonderful larynx; let us get such joy as we can from it. Our developing respiratory system suggests fish; in our youth it is a hotbed of infection. Our vocal cords are human only in their high development. But we all have the blind pocket between true and false cords which served as a resonator and so strengthened the roar by which our ancestors frightened their foes and called their mates. In man it varies, but is never so deep as in the gorilla.

The vermiform appendix is the worm its name implies. It is a feeble, narrow, tapering blind alley, opening by a small mouth into the large intestine. At birth, in size and form it is like an ape's. At puberty it begins to shorten; it is about closed in every fourth adult; in every thirtieth adult it is closed throughout. It shrivels up with old age. It may be ten times longer in one brother than in another. It is a true vestige. It is predisposed to disease; appendicitis is a fashionable operation. Only apes in captivity develop appendicitis. For an appendix that functions we must go to the lowest monkeys.

The liver usually has two lobes—it may have none, it may have twelve; it may have two gall bladders—it may have none.

The abdominal viscera in the human embryo are not human in their arrangement. Only later does the mesentery, or sheet of membrane connecting the bowel, become attached to the back wall of the abdomen and so hold it in place and in perpendicular position. Sometimes the mesentery is found arranged as in monkeys.

There are more than mere structural variations in our food canal; there are signs of degeneracy—in teeth, in jaws and throat, and in the large intestine. Changed diet does it. To digest raw food our ancestors had to chew it. They had strong jaws, heavy muscles, sound teeth properly aligned, big throats, and a colon that could digest husks of grain and skins of fruits and vegetables.

The lobes of the lungs vary in number and position. Due to man's upright gait, the heart has come to rest on the diaphragm. In monkeys the azygos lobe of the lung lies between. In man there is always a remnant, of varying size, of this lobe.

EXAMPLE OF PRINTED VELVET; EXPLOITING SPANISH BOLERO

SOME fabrics so hold the interest of the fashionable world, their vogue repeats through more than one season. There are printed velvets, for instance; it cannot be said that they reached the zenith of their glory last winter, perhaps because women did not sufficiently "appreciate a good thing when they saw it." But in the autumn mode printed velvets have assuredly come into their own.

In the high marts of fashion, gowns of transparent rayon printed velvet are about the most featured theme of the immediate hour. These lovely velvet weaves which have brought such fame to the fabric realm have in their patternings captured every rich hue on the autumn and winter color card. Included in their range are radiant browns which reflect the witchery of autumn browns and sunset glow and golden tints in their highlights. The new blueberry tones, wine shades, the popular bright blues, dusky violet tints, pea-green and forest green, all mingle in lovely confusion in these much-featured print and plain velvets.

The rayon transparent velvet of which this winsome gown in the picture is made, is printed in a feather interpretation, which means of course, a mingling of exotic plumage colorings, such as only the soft pile of velvet can portray.

The tendency to adopt princess lines for fall is confirmed in the silhouette which this mode achieves—molded-to-the-figure lines through the use of fine tucking above the normal waistline, the fitted portion extending to below the hips, where a full skirt is shirred on, knitted scarfing are also very popular. Some of these develop a soft bow at one side which falls to the shoulder. Then, too, caps of velvet or in any of the fashionable colors, smartly top frocks of printed design.

The exposition in Barcelona must have been visited by most of the world's great designers, for Spanish influence is everywhere present in the mode. Boleros and sweeping Spanish-like skirts are some of the results of this new movement. Sometimes the bolero is merely suggested, sometimes it appears on one side of the frock, then again, as in the rayon faille dinner gown in the lower illustration, it becomes a real bolero, having the advantage of being removable when, after dinner, the smart young woman wishes to be more decollete for dancing.

Nor is the bolero confined to the evening mode. Indeed no! It especially flourishes in youthful daytime frocks. Picture, if you would vision advance modes, a smartly flaring skirt of dark red rayon crepe, a trim little long-sleeved bolero topping a tuck-in blouse of yellowish batiste, the hipline graced with a black toreador sash, of course deeply fringed with black.

But enough of other Spanish numbers on the style program, sufficient unto the moment is the captivating costume in the picture where even the necklace and earrings milady wears carry a suggestion of old Spain. Their metals and crystals revive the glamorous colors of that land of romance. Indeed, the flair for things a la Espagnole in our modern mode may be Real Bolero Features This Dinner Gown.

At first glance one senses the presence of the girlish cuffs and collars which add such a zestful note to this costume. It's just this way: lingerie cuffs and collars and plentiful lace "fixings," jabots, fichus, capelets collars and such, are the big thought on the new fashion program. The "starched" sets are the dernier cri, some very puritan-like with deep flaring cuffs and prime turnover colors.

Then, continuing to analyze the fetching costume in the upper picture, have you glimpsed the little "rag" of a knitted rayon hat which is this young woman's crowning glory? These petite headpieces have so endeared themselves to American and French women they are acquiring whole collections of them—a hat tuned to the color scheme of each costume. One can have a box full at little expense, for one can make them oneself of various lightweight rayon weaves. Caps of said to begin with colors. Perhaps that is why the costume in the picture is carried out in gay yellow, even to the matching yellow taffeta slippers which add a perfect finesse to this evening ensemble. We might add here that in this matter of color black and red are also playing their part in the fall style-drama, as a result of the Spanishward trend.

Even our hats have gone Spanish, the sailor with its pompons being conspicuously featured. And black lace! Well about the smartest thing in promise is the long-sleeved dinner gown all of black lace. A ravishing new frock recently shown was fashioned of all-over black rayon lace, the skirt berufled true to Spanish tradition, yet withal given a modernized interpretation which at once insured its appeal to the style-wise woman of today.

POULTRY

DAMP FLOORS ARE MENACE TO FOWLS

Owners Who Tolerate Them Are Inviting Big Losses.

Damp floors in poultry houses are inexcusable, in the opinion of E. R. Gross, agricultural engineer at the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment station. Poultrymen who tolerate them are inviting heavy losses in their flocks and a general reduction in the efficiency of the birds that survive.

A dry wooden floor may be made of two layers of boards with building paper between, the top layer to be a good grade of matched flooring, so that it may be kept clean. Many poultrymen find it desirable to keep the floor 12 to 18 inches above the ground and to leave the south foundation wall open for air circulation. The other sides should be closed tight to keep out cold winds.

For a dry concrete floor, either of two methods may be used. The first is as follows: Build the foundation walls; level the ground inside, do not remove any soil; fill in with 6 to 8 inches of coarse sand, gravel, or cinders; and place 3½ to 4 inches of concrete floor on top. In this construction, be sure the foundations are high enough for the fill of cinders and the floor. This raised floor with insulating fill will be dry.

The other method is to lay a two-course concrete floor with a layer of roofing paper between.

Sometimes the floor itself is not the cause of dampness. Then the remedy must be sought in a study of the care of the house ventilation, litter, or sunlight admitted.

Highly Concentrated Foods Hurt Turkeys

The turkey has a rather large digestive system and long intestines, accompanied by an ever-present appetite, so that if birds are compelled to satisfy this appetite on highly concentrated foods, indigestion is almost certain to result.

If this is not immediately relieved death will follow, and usually salts or, better still, castor oil will effect a cure.

Plenty of green food is essential to young turkeys, such as alfalfa (if quite tender), clover, lettuce, chopped onion tops and dandelion leaves. All green food supplied to turkeys should be cut a little way up from the ground to avoid black-head contamination that may chance to lurk in the soil.

Fertile Eggs Reason for Paltry Returns

Nature intends the egg to hatch a chick. To get the best food results from eggs we have to defeat nature's purpose by producing infertile eggs. A fertile egg is just as good as an infertile one if it is used at once, but it won't hold up under summer market conditions.

Sell or confine the roosters as soon as the breeding season is over. The hens will lay just as well without the male in the flock. Using early hatched cockerels is a good breeding practice on the farms. Selling them as soon as your hatching season is over saves a feed bill of from 90 cents to $1.50 each. If you have particularly valuable males, confine them.

Difficult to Decide Sex of Young Poults

It is difficult to be absolutely sure of the sex of young turkey poults. The males will usually "shoot the red" and show development of the fleshy growth on the head a little sooner than the females, and they are also likely to grow more rapidly than the females.

With the Bronze variety of turkeys the sex can also be detected by the plumage color as soon as they are well feathered. The breast of the females show the characteristic white tips to the breast feathers, while the males will show dark tips.

Changing Breeds

Several years ago it was common advice to avoid changing breeds of poultry. That was before the days of the large hatchery when poultrymen established a flock with a few settings of eggs, possibly bought at a high price, and then spent several years in developing their own flocks. A change meant starting all over. In many cases birds of both breeds would be retained and soon a pure-bred flock became a flock of crosses followed by a flock of mongrels.

Birds Not Wanted

Most poultry keepers realize that there are two courses open to them in regard to unwanted males. One plan is to destroy them as soon as they can be distinguished; and the other is to feed them well right from the first day and so bring them to a fleshy condition. The latter practice is sound so far as the early cockerels are concerned, but very few poultry keepers appreciate it for later broods. Some poultrymen do not hesitate to can all surplus fowls.

Horses and Mules in Better Demand

Much Practical Information for Breeders of Light and Work Stock.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An increased demand and good prices for well-bred horses and mules, especially during the next few years, are forecast by J. O. Williams and S. R. Speelman, horse specialists of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. A report on the horse-breeding situation, just made public by these government specialists, gives the basis for their opinions and contains much practical information for breeders of light horses and work stock.

Proportion of Pure Breds.

According to information received from 24 states having enrollment laws for stallions, jacks, or both, approximately 82 per cent of all stallions licensed in 1928 were pure bred, while 60.5 per cent of the jacks enrolled were in the same class. These figures show a gain over former years and are an encouraging feature of the report. There has been, however, a continued annual decrease in the total number of stallions and jacks licensed for public service in the 24 states. A reduction in the equine population of the country has also occurred; during the calendar year 1928, the decline amounted to about half a million horses and 85,000 mules. The authors of the report estimate that colt production is now only half as great as is needed to maintain our horse population at its present level. Among other salient comments on the situation, are the following:

Prices of horses have risen during the last two years, the rise being most pronounced in the Corn Belt and in states east of the Mississippi river.

Draft horses with size and quality are in strong demand at good prices, and the demand for saddle horses is nation-wide.

Saddle horses and polo mounts are probably bringing higher prices now than at any time in history.

Producers of work stock, doubtful of a recurrence in the demand for horses and mules, have been hesitant in resuming breeding operations. This has resulted in a present shortage of good work animals, and the scarcity probably will be more acute within the next few years.

Stallions and Jacks Needed.

High-class stallions and jacks are not only scarce but are also of high average age and will soon need to be replaced by younger animals.

Prices of suitable replacement stock probably will be higher in the near future than at present.

Mares as well as stallions and jacks should be selected with great care so as to assure offspring that will develop into sound animals of the desired type.

The foregoing appraisal of the situation is supported by comments from state officials closely in touch with horse and mule breeding in the principal producing areas. The report contains a summary of stallion and jack enrollments by breeds for the calendar years 1926, 1927, and 1928, data on horse importations, and a list of state and national stallion registration board officials. The full report is available as a 12-page mimeographed pamphlet, which may be obtained by addressing the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Conservation of Labor in Filling Silo Profitable

As silo-filling time draws near, many farmers in all parts of the country are preparing to follow a plan which differs greatly from silo filling in the days of the steam-powered rig and the large crew. It is the small crew plan now growing in popularity.

The small crew plan is essentially labor saving. Only two men are necessary to fill. When the binder is equipped with a bundle elevator, two loads may be cut and put on the racks without the hard labor of pitching the bundles by hand. The loads are then drawn to the silo and run through the cutter as it takes only a minute to start the tractor which furnishes the belt power, or to turn the switch which starts an electric motor.

Experiments at some of our state colleges and practical experience have proved that tramping is not necessary for keeping the silage and in many cases this job has been eliminated. Neither is it necessary to have a man at the feed table of the modern ensilage cutter.

Round Bin Capacity Is Figured Quite Easily

To find the number of bushels of grain in a round or cylindrical field grain bin is a matter of simple figuring, according to Prof. Cap E. Miller, head of the department of agricultural economics, North Dakota Agricultural college.

The first step is to get the circumference or distance around the bin in feet. Then, square this figure and multiply the result by .07958. This will give the area in square feet. Now, multiply this area by the depth of grain in the bin and the result will be the number of cubic feet of grain in the bin. Multiply the number of cubic feet by .8 or divide by 1¼ for the number of bushels of grain in the circular bin.

"Shipping Fever" of Cattle Is Prevented

Protective Agent Quite Efficacious Against Disease

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hemorrhagic-septicemia aggressin is a recently discovered protective agent against the disease known as hemorrhagic septicemia, which is so highly infectious among farm animals, particularly cattle and sheep. The bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture developed this aggressin. In a revised edition of Farmers' Bulletin 1018-F, Hemorrhagic Septicemia, "Shipping Fever" of Cattle, just published, Henry J. Washburn says, "Numerous experimental animals were vaccinated with this material and subsequently were given a severe artificial exposure together with some unvaccinated control animals. In these experiments all the vaccinated animals remained healthy, while the unvaccinated ones developed fatal hemorrhagic-septicemia infections. This aggressin is a germ-free, sterile product. It is now manufactured under commercial conditions and is proving to be quite as efficacious in practice as it has proved experimentally."

The disease is known popularly as "shipping fever" of cattle. The bulletin describes the bacterium causing the disease, the symptoms and anatomical changes produced, and gives suggestions for diagnosis and for distinguishing the disease from other malignant maladies. It also gives directions for prevention and for the care of animals and premises during and after outbreaks of the disease. No effective medicinal treatment for infected animals is known. If the presence of the disease is suspected, the owner should call a competent veterinarian, who will advise as to protective measures and preventive treatment.

The revised edition of Farmers' Bulletin 1018-F may be obtained free on application to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Storing Green Alfalfa to Secure Best Results

"Brown hay" from alfalfa results when the alfalfa is put into the mow so green and tough that it heats and drives off the surplus water. At the same time it is discolored. During the process of fermentation the moisture driven off will condense on the top layer of hay and will spoil it as the top layer of silage is spoiled.

The top of such a mow may steam for three weeks or more after the hay is put in. Below the spoiled top layer, if the hay has been properly stored, there will be no mold. This brown hay is very palatable to stock and while there is a certain amount of loss from the fermentation, it is not serious if the hay has not been badly discolored.

When first-cutting alfalfa is nearly cured, but tough, and is likely to be rained on if not taken in, it is far better to take it in and make brown hay of it, than to leave it in the field to be damaged by rain. If put in this way, the hay should be exceptionally well stacked back into the hay mow, to break up the green bunches sometimes found. It should be packed and not left loose, unless there is space enough to spread a thin layer of the tough hay all over the mow. After fermentation starts, do not put other hay on top of it, or disturb it in any way. The use of salt on tough hay is often recommended and should be of value in reducing fermentation and mold.—C. J. Willard, Ohio State university.

Farm Notes

Warm dry weather is important when a good paint job is wanted.

• • •

Soy beans and cowpeas are legumes and will benefit soil some by raising them.

• • •

Alfalfa is a high profit crop. It ranks at the top of the list for meat and milk production.

• • •

A good, clean quality of alfalfa hay can be used quite satisfactorily for feeding work horses.

• • •

Alfalfa used as the roughage for work horses sometimes has a tendency to make them over laxative and soft in their muscles.

• • •

The outstanding advantage of the combined harvester-thresher is that it saves time and labor and so considerably reduces the cost of harvesting the crop.

• • •

Wheat that is high in protein content is worth more than low protein wheat. Good farming is more certain to produce high protein wheat than poor farming.

• • •

Knowledge of the protein and the moisture content of wheat aids in determining the wheat to store. Wheat containing less than 13 per cent moisture can be stored safely.

• • •

The beneficial effects of early listing and plowing may be destroyed by permitting weeds and volunteer grain to grow on the land. The destruction of weeds and volunteer grain is frequently just as important as early plowing or listing.

"A Good Old Bread Recipe and Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour" WIN FIRST PRIZE for MRS. R. H. WILKINSON (Blue Ribbon Winner Home-Baked Bread, Edinburg, Ill., County Fair)

Mrs. R. H. Wilkinson, Edinburg, Ill.

"At our county fair in Edinburg, Ill., last August I won 1st Prize for home-baked bread in the class open to everybody. I didn't use a celebrated cooking school recipe, but one taught me by my mother. My daughter also won 1st Prize for home baked bread in her class at the same fair—using the same recipe and no other than my favorite Gold Medal Flour! Proof, I say, that to get prize winners every time, use Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour."

TODAY thousands of women have learned how to get perfect results with all their baking—"Blue Ribbon" cakes and pastries, bread and biscuits, every time!

New-type Flour Banishes "Luck" in Baking

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Special "Kitchen-tested" Recipes in Every Sack

(Changed every 3 months)

Please accept (free of charge) simplified recipes for the world's 12 most famous baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too. All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. Drop in Eggs

A crate of fresh eggs dropped by parachute from a plane over the Los Angeles airport landed in safety and without the cracking of a shell. It was a 2,000 foot tumble, but it was made with the gentle grace of a butterfly lighting on a rose or a bullfrog sliding into a sewer. Getting our breakfast out of the heavens is a reminder of the days when the Israelites snared their manna in the same miraculous fashion.

FAMILY DOCTOR MADE MILLIONS OF FRIENDS

Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription, which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, headachy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Idle Want to See Races

That they should be granted permission to attend all race meetings without charge was the demand made recently by the unemployed of Hamilton, Scotland. A delegation was sent by idle workers to the Hamilton city council, asking it to compel owners of the race tracks to give a "free gate" to all unable to buy admission tickets. They also complained of living conditions of the poor, saying some people lived in dugouts where daylight bugs dropped on breakfast tables and destroyed part of the food.

Lots of married men are glad that they at least have the privilege of thinking as they please.

Claims County Record

Los Angeles county, California, claims to lead all counties of the nation in agricultural production. Last year its field crops were valued at $9,242,500, truck crops at $11,481,804, fruit and nuts at $48,065,366, live stock and live stock products at $26,489,062, making a total value of $95,278,732.

The use of soft coal will make laundry work heavier this winter. Russ Bleaching Blue will help to remove that grimy look. At all grocers.—Adv.

Globe House Not Popular

Although it has commanded worldwide interest the globe-shaped house invented by a German has not been taken seriously in Germany. There has not been a single duplication of the one shown last year at the Dresden exhibition, Germans preferring the present style of houses with corners.

Three Generations Endorse It

"When I was a young single girl I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because my mother did and she gave it to me. After I married I took it before my children were born and afterwards, and I have eight living children. I am now a grandmother and still take it and still recommend it when any one is tired and run-down."—Mrs. Alfred Iverson, St. Edwards, Nebraska.

NATIONAL INTEREST CENTERS IN HOOSIER MEET

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 26.—Leading off for the rest of the states, Indiana is expected at the state crime conference called by Governor Harry G. Leslie, for October 11 and 12 to map out a program for dealing more effectively with the crime problem.

National interest centers in the Hoosier conference as it represents the outstanding state effort to deal along new lines with questions of law enforcement raised by President Hoover himself.

Impressed with this special importance of the coming gathering, those in charge plan to give the fullest opportunity for free discussion from the floor of all phases of the complex problem. Among the phases expected to come in for much discussion are courts and criminal procedure, prosecution, sheriffs' and police setups, probation and parole, the habitual criminal act, the identification of criminals, punishment of repeaters and the like.

The part of the press and the school in law observance and law enforcement will figure largely in the deliberations. Dr. W. A. Wirt, superintendent of schools at Gary and a member of the state board of education, will speak on "The Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency through Education."

S. J. Duncan-Clark, associate editor of the Chicago Evening Post, will talk on "Newspapers and Law Observance."

At a meeting of the Govenor's committee on arrangements held the latter part of last week various subcommittees were appointed to work out special phases of conference arrangements. Announcements were prepared by a subcommittee composed of Gaylord S. Morton, assistant secretary to the Governor; Dr. Charles Kettlebor-ough, director of the legislative reference bureau and Adjutant W. G. Everson.

Letters of announcement have been sent out under Mr. Morton's direction to judges, prosecuting attorneys, sheriffs, chiefs of police, county and city superintendents of schools, trustees and superintendents of penal institutions and probation and attendance officers.

Citizens of the state generally who are interested in the work of the conference are given a cordial invitation to be present and take part in the discussions.

From BARN to BATH TUB

A farmer friend who owns two General Motors cars went to the city the other day and stopped in to see some cousins. They showed him around their new roof garden apartment, eighteen floors above the street, and proudly pointed out their Frigidaire in the pantry.

"Well," chuckled our farmer friend, "Mother has a garden full of old-fashioned flowers that she'd never trade for theirs . . . and as for the refrigerator, we have a bigger Frigidaire than they have!"

He also mentioned his Delco-Light power system and his DL water pump, which give him every other city convenience. As he often says himself, his farm is "General Motorized from barn to bath tub!"

It is perfectly true that General Motors, through its various units, offers even more to the farm family than to the city family. By applying methods of automobile production to home electric lighting and power plants, water pumping systems, and automatic refrigerators, General Motors can make the reliable kind of product that a farmer wants, at a price he can afford.

EMERSON ALDRICH WINS HONORS

Emerson Aldrich has just brought honor to himself and his school, the St. Joe High School. He has been awarded one of the winning cash prizes in the recent nation-wide essay contest staged by the Burroughs Adding Machine Co., Detroit, through the American Boy magazine.

The great number of the essays submitted made the task of selecting the winners difficult. The youthful contestans, according to the judges, showed a surprisingly clear grasp of modern business ideas and needs. Because of the unusually high standard of the essays, the judges, in announcing the winners, declared that those boys who had failed to capture any of the awards should not be discouraged by their failure.

The contest was participated in by several thousand boys. Each was required to name correctly the key words appearing in five Burroughs advertisements over the period of as many months in the American Boy magazine, and to write an essay of not more than 250 words on "Why I should expect to find Burroughs equipment in any business I may enter."

At the present time Emerson lives at Butler, Indiana, where his parents moved last spring.

DRIVER'S SAFETY LESSON No. 2

PREPARED BY THE Hoosier State Automobile Association

ANOTHER VACANT CHAIR

(An Editorial by the Accident Prevention Department of the Hoosier State Automobile Association.)

Did you ever see a child die?

Oh, if you only could—if you could start five minutes before the call to the scene of the tragedy where a little child's life is passing out.

But, picture the scene—a scene enacted nearly 10,000 times each short year—think of it—10,000 boys and girls dying through someone's carelessness.

A busy street. A passing car! A careless driver! A boy—just like your lad, carefree and happy! A boyish idea—an action! A misjudgment! A cry — Oh, God, look!

You drop to his side. His curly head rests in your lap. His doby torn and bleeding; his eyes bright and questioning look into yours. He can't understand why he is hurt. He had never been told. In a faint voice he whispers, "Mother."

Your eyes are filled with tears and your heart o'erflows with pity. But it's too late—the deed's done. The boy is dead.

Parents, teach the children in their play to stay out of the streets. Teach them by your own acts and words to cross the street at the crossing only, looking first to left and then to right. Teach them to save themselves.

Mr. Driver, pledge yourself that throught no careless act of yours shall any child be made to suffer.

For what is Time to Safety?

THE OPEN SCHOOL HOUSE DOOR

When the school house doors opened in St. Joe and at Spencerville for the fall term, our people not merely gave every boy and girl a wonderful chance to make good, but they say once more that American democracy is a real thing.

Some people think that the United States bows down before wealth today, and has forgotten the generous democracy of the fathers. That open school house door answers that question. It says to the rich and to the poor: "Here at least you all stand alike, and all are entitled to an equal chance. Here we welcome the boy with the ragged coat just as warmly as the one with the stylish clothes."

It grades its pupils, not by the luxury of their homes, but by the willingness of the child to work and learn. The boy who earns his own clothes by selling newspapers or mowing lawns, may stand higher than the one who has more favorable home conditions.

While the opportunities offered are equal, not all can take equal advantage of them. It is a tragedy of school life, that the child whose parents talk only broken English, or who converse only about the things they eat and wear, will not usually learn so fast as the one from the home where politics and commnuity progress are discussed.

But the boy from that more favorable home does not necessarily get ahead. His athletics may distract his mind from his arithmetic and his English. The boy from the back street may be slow, but grim perseverance walks away with a lot of prizes. But anyway, America's generous heart demands that in this free school, there shall be no social classes, and democracy shall rule unchallenged.

EXPERT'S ADVICE TO MOTORISTS

Observance of the following suggestions, will save money for the motorist and should increase your mileage two to five miles to the gallon. They are:

1. When standing or waiting for the light to change don't race your motor.

2. When you are to make a stop of more than a minute, turn off your motor.

3. Don't drive at excessive speeds unless the occasion demands. High speed travelling burns more gas.

4. Remember that the faster you drive the more gas you consume. So when you find that you are about out of gas and are heading for a gas station take it slowly and your chance for negotiating the distance will be greater.

5. When starting watch the choke. Don't drive with the choke out a moment more than necessary.

6. Be sure that your brakes are not dragging. This cuts down your mileage. Get your brakes inspected frequently.

7. Have your valves ground when they need it.

8. See that the idling adjustment on your carburetor is set at the proper point so that the mixture is not too rich. If it is not at the proper point it gives you inefficient idling performance and wastes gas.

9. Don't fill your gas tank full to the cap, some will escape thru the vent in the cap.

10. Don't ride the clutch.

11. Watch gas line for leaks at joints. Check it periodically to see that fittings are tight.

12. Be sure that spark is in fully advanced position.

13. Avoid excessive use of brakes in traffic.

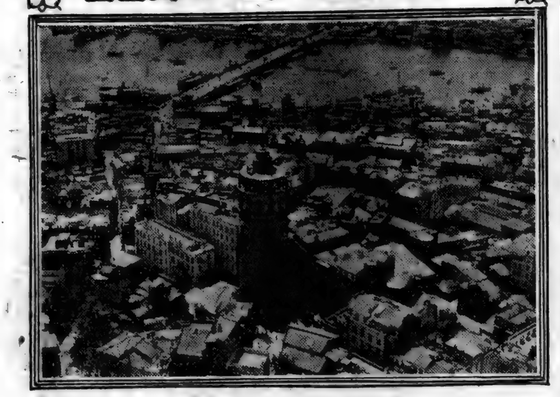
FLYING OVER HISTORY



Looking Down on Constantinople.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THERE are few opportunities anywhere in the world to see so many historic sites in half a dozen hours as during the brief airplane trip from Constantinople to Athens.

The route is paved with geography; with history, which is geography interacting with mankind; and with mythology, in which elemental geographic forces are given childishly human characteristics.

Poets and historians, ladies and their Leanders, Argonauts and Anzacs, have so mosaicked with meaning this age-old route that the air traveler, completing it between breakfast and luncheon, would need that last-minute-before-drowning clairvoyance to take in even the broad outlines of the picture on the rift between West and East, Europe and Asia, sailor and nomad, Greek and barbarian, between what was known and what was off the map.

The battleship Agamemnon, leading the allied fleet into the Dardanelles, A. D. 1915, churned the very waters that bore to the siege of Troy Agamemnon's thousand ships, launched by a woman's face, almost as many years before the Christian era. Xerxes, Alexander, and the Turks, their exploits separated by centuries, all crossed the Hellespont at the same point. The northeasters that cool or chill both Bosporus and Gallipoli, and the treacherous currents which inspire gruesome gossip are the same that Strabo and Herodotus described.

The plane is fitted with pontoons and rises from the Bosporus. Behind, the Genoese castle of Anatoli Kavak, only a moment ago outlined against the Black sea, has flattened out against a northern tip of Asia Minor. As a point is rounded, with the palaces and embassy gardens of Therapia below, the view extends to the Golden Horn.

By the time the strait between Rumeli and Anatoli Hissar is reached the plane is so high above Mohammed the Conqueror's "Cutthroat Castle" that the ground plan, said to be a chirograph of his Arabic name, is just a comfortable eyeful.

The ground plan of Robert College takes on rare symmetry. In its center a football game is being played by two tribes of vari-colored ants. Now the Constantinople Woman's college is reached, its buildings aligned into one imposing facade.

The coal-pockets that smudge the view below Arnaut Koi sweep south toward the glittering jewel-box mosque of Orta Koi and the roofless ruin of Cheragan—palace, prison, and parliament house.

Looking Down on Stamboul.

There is a slight haze above Stamboul, the Seraglio palaces are visibly isolated from the teeming city; and the cornucopia curve of the Golden Horn—despite its fame, a mere nick in the eastern edge of Europe, is clearly cut between close-rooted slopes, pock-marked by fire and mournful with cypresses rising above marble-skeletoned cemeteries. The fabled seven hills unite into one main, curving ridge.

Now the plane is almost over fat-domed Sancta Sophia; and the six minarets of the Sultan Ahmed mosque, as needlelike from the ground, seem squat towers. The obelisks in the Hippodrome, Byzantium's antique pleasure center, have no height, but their shadows stretch wide across a park the perfection of which was never before so evident. One wonders when architects will begin to design structures to be beautiful from the air, as landscape gardening already is.

Outside the left windows the Princes Islands bathe in sun-spread quicksilver and the Gulf of Ismid loses itself beyond.

Off the right wing the landward wall of Byzantium, starting impossingly with the Seven Towers, dwindles away until its battlements are lost behind a hill overlooking the Sweet Waters of Europe.

Now one looks straight down on the island of Marmora, unexpectedly large and full of valleys. Around a tiny bay in the north edge, marble cliffs or sing dumps, white as chalk, describe a horseshoe curve.

Now Europe edges in from the right, with the ridge of Tekir Dagh, emphasized by cumuli, stretching down to give backbone to Gallipoli. What a place to study geography! The two most famous straits of olden times, where Helle drowned and Io, Hera's rival, forded the Bosporus.

Now the upper entrance to the Hellespont has been reached, with Gallipoli on the opposite shore. Just under the hull is a level hill where there used to be a Turkish fort.

A little farther on Lapsaki comes into view. It used to be Lampsacus and was famous for its wine and Priapic worship. The town, being made of mud and stone, may have moved about a bit, but the name has hovered right there since the days when Themistocles was its monarchos and the idea of hereditary monarchy was new.

Lapsaki has its own little marina, but the main town stands back from the water, its reddish-brown roofs arranged in seemingly perfect squares. The junction of land and water here is of extreme beauty, the shoreline edged with a greenish blue breaking away to the royal purple of the deeper water.

The ship seemingly increases its speed over the narrows where Leander swam to see Hero and set an example for Lord Byron and others. On a bridge of boats Xerxes crossed here to invade Europe. A century and a half later Alexander returned the compliment.

Beyond the Gallipoli peninsula one can see Suvla Bay and below is the old tower of Chanak Kalessi, until recently ringed with modern forts. Across the narrow neck of water is the trefoil fort of Kilid Bahr, a stalkless ace of clubs spiked down with a tall central tower.

And here is Troy, immortalized by Homer and Vergil, described by Strabo, a rain soaked, soggy plain, cut by mere brooks and utterly without dramatic quality.

The whole outline of Tenedos may be seen as one flies along, its central portion cultivated, its shoreline notched by ways to which the Greeks withdrew, leaving the wooden horse outside the Trojan walls.

The Isles of Greece.

There are pitch-black clouds ahead, their lower sides festooned with waving wisps of rain like Spanish moss. The plane swoops down to 2,000 feet. The long line of Lemnos fills the horizon at the right, and through the opposite window Lesbos (Mytilene) detaches itself from the flank of Asia Minor. Only indistinct suggestions of land lie ahead.

Skyros shoulders her blood-red, craggy cliffs toward the ship's path. When the flight has lasted three hours an Acropolislike plateau on Euboea shows itself. For the first time the plane dives directly toward the land to find a low, narrow pass above cultivated fields, salmon pink amid gray rock and lush green and dotted with circular stone threshing floors near the Gulf of Petali.

Then comes the supreme thrill; for there, sweeping round in a perfect curve like a gold-edged scimitar laid against the blue, is the Plain of Marathon. Hoary-headed Parnes looms beyond, and Pentelicus, neighbor of Athens and mother of her marbles, suggests how short a flight remains; yet how long that run for Phidippides, bringing news that the Medes and Persians were in flight and that Miltiades had won!

A wheel of spokelike roads, cutting the fertile Mesogaias, centers in Markopoulon. At least a dozen pleasant villages are in sight at once, pearl gray, amid crop and plow-stippled fields pushed to the limit of man's endurance against the dull skeleton of Attica.

Now the Saronic Gulf is below, opalescent tints showing on an oyster-shell-shaped beach. What seems to be the mainland to the left is really the island of Salamis. From Marathan to Salamis, a ten-year struggle for the Persians, and the flyer can cover it in the sweep of an eye!

A brightly tinted new town, its landscape gardening reduced to the proportions of a painting, grows below as the plane descends. Little Lykabettos spears up to the right, and the Acropolis begins to assume a fraction of its wonted dignity, as the very heart and center of Greek life.

There is a bus terminus, and down the plane comes, flashing past new villas and deserted piers. One final glance for the flyers at that historic plain between Parnes and Hymettos, and down their ship splashes like a duck, in Phaleron Bay, to the east of Piraeus.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

"Bone-Heads" Really Exist

IN UPRIGHT gait, balanced skull, and arms free at the sides of the body, we differ most from the only animals that ape us. This upright gait is maintained by action of muscle on bone. We hang on a bony skeleton, largely levers. We move by setting those levers in motion. To put us across a hundred yards in ten seconds, the skeleton must be mature. If our bones were cartilage we would be wonderful contortionists, but our upright gait would collapse.

Our ancestors went on all fours. In acquiring the upright gait, the axis of the body changed from horizontal to perpendicular. This necessitated changes in every bone and muscle in the body and a complete overhauling of everything inside—lungs, circulation, abdominal viscera—everything.

Our pelvic girdle is a broad, shallow basin; it supports the viscera. The keystone of the girdle is the sacrum. It supports the backbone and locks the arch behind. The dog's sacrum is long and narrow; ours, broader than it is long. The sacrum at birth varies from four to seven vertebrae. These unite into one bone; but the first, and sometimes the second, never unites with the others.

Above the sacrum is the vertebral column proper; seven neck or cervical, twelve thoracic, and five lumbar vertebrae—twenty-four in all. But there may be six or eight cervical; eleven or thirteen thoracic; four to six lumbar. At birth, most of us have twelve pairs of ribs; some, only eleven; some, thirteen.

Seven pairs of ribs join our sternum, or breastbone; there may be only six, there may be eight. The first pair are sometimes mere rudiments. Our floating ribs are not so important as when we walked on all fours; they vary in number and size. The sternum is less important than formerly; it varies enormously. Two little bones sometimes found on its upper border are vestiges of the episternal bones of the lowest mammals.

No man-made column is so delicately adjusted, so slender, or so well balanced as our spine. Its sigmoid, or "S" curve, gives elasticity to our body, grace to our carriage, fine lines to our back, and saves our brain from jar and shock. The really human curves develop after birth, especially the lumbar curve in the "small" of our back. The infant cannot stand straight up because it has not yet acquired a stand-up-straight backbone.

Our backbone ends in small rounded bones about the size of peas. They are the coccyx, skeleton of our tail.

The upper-arm bone assumes its human form only after birth, when it also begins to twist, as does the femur, to conform to its new position at the side of the body.

Human history may not start with man's foot, but our foot is as human as our hands. Its bones show coming and going changes. The big toe is the strongest and is more powerful in man than in any ape; it is coming. But most of it comes after birth; baby's big toe is a poor affair. The little toe is going. In one individual out of every three it has lost a joint. But not on account of tight shoes—they can make corns, but cannot change heredity; the third bone of the little toe is as often absent in feet which were never shod.

Our skull is no more human than are the bones of our foot or of our pelvis. It is shorter in front, longer at the back, better balanced on the spine; adaptations to an upright gait.

Man has a flat face and a sizable chin when he has short jaws. But jaws vary, and long or prognathic jaws change the countenance.

In fetal life we have a pair of intermaxillaries between the upper jaw bones. At birth the suture, as skull joints are called, between them can barely be seen; by maturity, not at all. The suture often persists, obviously atavistic. The chin, or mental point of the lower jaw, has nothing to do with "mentality." It is a human trait, but not of all men equally. Some have "strong" chins, some next to no chin at all.

We have two nasal bones. But in some men and all monkeys they become one; no real bridge then to the nose. Sometimes the bones are small and flat; no bridge at all.

The brain can grow only as long as the three big sutures of the skull remain open. They begin to close at the age of forty; the one at the back first; the fore part of the brain can keep on growing. In animals the sutures close earlier than in man, the front ones first. They may close early in man; they may persist till old age.

When one or another skull suture closes prematurely, curiously shaped heads result. The "boat-shaped" head is due to premature closing of the parietal suture. When all the sutures close prematurely, the skull becomes solid as though a single bone. The brain can grow no more. Idiocy results—the "Aztec" people of the circus.

Chrysolite Highly Valued

The Egyptians, who found the chrysolite in their own domain, wore magnificent specimens as talismans for victory; the Romans believed it had the sun-given power to induce cheerfulness, while during the Middle ages when large quantities of the finest peridots were brought from the East by soldiers of the Crusades, it was called the "gem of divine inspiration."

FALL HATS FOR YOUNGSTERS; LONGER SKIRTS FOR EVENING

EVEN children are showing a disposition to become increasingly hat conscious. To be convinced of this, observe little Miss Six or Seven, or younger or older as she seats herself before one of the diminutive mirrored tables with which every modern-appointed juvenile millinery department is equipped. Note her grown-up air as she proceeds to "try on" this hat and that, making comments all the time. She likes this and she does not like that and they're not wearing so-and-so now, and the saleswoman is catering to her whims as seriously as if 'twere mother or big sister who was being hatted.

Group of Children's Hats.

Perhaps this poise and confidence is due to the hats themselves, for children's millinery is more and more taking on a sophisticated styling. It is characteristic of modern juvenile frocks and coats, also hats, that they reflect the fashion trends of their elders.

For example take the rolled-off-the-face "Pirate" brims which are the last word in Paris hats for this fall. See how jauntily the little girl pictured in the upper right corner of this group is wearing just such a felt model. What's more, the color of the felt is supposed to match this wee lady's coat just as accurately as all worked in the Italian way. That is, very bright colors are combined in most designful motifs.

The hat of tweed, here again mother and little daughter have a like millinery interest. The tweed hats for tots which are made to match their little tweed coats, show many style variations, one of which is the strap of cloth run through a double slot as pictured in the lower left corner of the picture.

The youngster concluding this group is wearing a hat-and-scarf set of felt

For evening the young matron, the college girl, the debutante have all agreed in regard to longer skirts and soft shimmering materials such as ever spell the enchantment of sweet simplicity and the utterly feminine.

This frock in the lower illustration puts the theory into practice, qualifying very definitely in matter of beguiling details such as quoted above, as a proper gown for the smart dinner party. It is fashioned of sage green rayon satin, with tightly bound hips, slightly raised waistline and skirt which nears the floor with its overdraping.

Exquisite slippers add to the witchery of this costume. Much emphasis is being laid this fall upon color and decorative quality in slippers.

One of the Latest Evening Gowns.

In a previous paragraph the raised waistline was mentioned in connection with the gown pictured. Fact is, we are at the threshold of an era of raised waistlines. Perhaps no subject is so widely discussed in couturier circles as this matter of raising the waistline, unless it be that of lengthening the skirt. With both of these drastic changes facing us there is no telling what the future will bring forth in the way of a revolutionized silhouette.

Whatever may be the fate of gowns, future and present, in regard to "lines," one thing is certain, colors and materials are growing increasingly lovely with the going and coming of the seasons. Just now it is rich dahlia shades which are creating comment, both for evening and for daytime wear. Blueberry is a new shade widely featured. Pink tints grow in favor for formal evening wear. These pinks and flesh shades and creamy tones with a blush of pink have a subtle beauty which captivates, and they are as alluring expressed in terms of moire as they are in soft crepe-like satin or in tulle or in velvet the sheerness of which is one of the marvels of the age.

Some real surprising things are happening this season in fashion's realm, among which are gloves and trailing skirts, coarse net in black or colors for evening wear, tinted tulle made up over flowered taffeta, bolero effects for the formal evening dine-and-dance gowns.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

(©, 1928, Western Newspaper Union.)

The fashion books "lay down the law" in regard to mother's fall and winter costume.

The felt cloche in the opposite corner of the picture is machine-stitched row and row, both brim and inset crown sections, quite in an adult way. Some of these cunning bonnets use two colors of felt, for two-tone effects are in smart vogue.

In the center model we approach the knitted phase of the millinery question, for knitted effects are the rage for both adult and youth and for tiny tots, too. Not only are children's tams knit in the old familiar way, but they are just as often made of knit scarfing and that which is equally smart, woven of narrow felt strips, often in multi-color effects.

Birds, Alligators, Her Pets

Miss Beatrice Harrison, whose cello playing induced nightingales to sing for the radio in England, is gathering a unique collection of pets at her beautiful home at Oxted. Gold Stream Reduced

It has been a long time since the "forty-niners" made their rush for the gold fields of California, but still the mines continue to pour out a stream of precious metal, though the stream is lessening somewhat, judging from the 1928 figures.

The production of gold, silver, copper and lead for the year reached a total value of $15,381,783, a decline of about 9 per cent from the preceding year. This does not take into consideration the stream of gold pouring into Hollywood.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

See End of Tsetse Fly

As the result of experiments being conducted in the tsetse belt of Natal, the South African government is hopeful that an effective means of combating the ravages of the deadly tsetse fly has been at last discovered. A special poison in powdered form has been sprayed over donkeys. The tsetse fly, when it alights on the animal, absorbs the poison through its feet and dies. Reports so far received show that the experiments have been successful, giving hope that one of the worst plagues with which the farmer of South Africa has to contend is doomed.

Limestone Pays on Sweet Clover

Liberal Applications Result in Larger Yields of Better Quality.

To change the yield of sweet clover hay by the use of ground limestone from nothing to an average of over 5,000 pounds per acre is the interesting result reported by John W. Artz, county agent of Polk county, North Carolina.

"Mr. Artz conducted six different domonstrations," says E. C. Blair, extension agronomist, at the North Carolina State college. "The results obtained show conclusively that it is not worth while to attempt the growing of sweet clover unless the land has been limed. Liberal applications of limestone result in larger yields of hay than do small applications. Each of the six demonstrations consisted of four one-acre plots."

Applied in Fall.

The first plot, in each test, was unlimed, Mr. Blair reports. The second plot received at the rate of 1,000 pounds of finely ground limestone per acre; the third, 2,000 pounds, and the fourth, 3,000 pounds. This limestone was applied in the fall of 1927 at the time the small grain was planted. Sweet clover seed was sown on the grain in March, 1928. The hay was cut and cured in June, 1929.

The average result of the six demonstrations shows that the hay on the unlimed plots was not worth cutting. Where 1,000 pounds of lime per acre was used, 2,783 pounds of hay was harvested; where 2,000 pounds of lime was used, 4,017 pounds of hay was secured, and where 3,000 pounds of limestone was used, the yield was 5,420 pounds of hay per acre. Mr. Blair says that this last yield was about double the amount secured where 1,000 pounds of lime was used.

Of Better Quality.

The sweet clover grew to about the same height with all rates of liming, but was much thicker and of better quality where the heavier applications were made. Mr. Artz reported that several hundred acres of sweet clover will be grown in his county next spring and all of it will be limed.

Tramping Down Silage Is Not Advantageous

Although farmers have been tramping down the silage to pack it evenly into their silos for fifty years, recent tests made at several experiment stations show that the practice doesn't help to preserve the feedstuff, reported the Farm Journal. At the United States dairy bureau farm in Maryland, and again at Pennsylvania State college, silos filled with evenly distributed silage, untramped, kept as well as the closely packed silage of previous years.

According to E. J. Delwiche, superintendent of two Wisconsin stations, the practice of tramping is even harmful. He says:

"Since tramping is generally uneven and results in many pockets, there is less mold in the untramped silage. The ideal arrangement when the silo is filled without tramping would be to have the distributor fixed so that a man could control it without walking on the corn. To seal the top of the silage the last few feet should always be carefully leveled and tramped, when tramping is not done."

Clover and Alfalfa Are Useful as Silage Crops

Clover and alfalfa are not usually considered silage crops. In some instances they have been used as silage satisfactorily. In a good many others they have not proved satisfactory.

Professor Eckles, formerly of the University of Missouri, was successful in making good silage from alfalfa and clover hay by allowing it to wilt in the windrow before putting it into the silo. If the hay becomes over-dry, it should have some water applied after it is in the silo.

Likely you would be better satisfied with your clover if you could put it up as hay and not take the risk of losing some or all of it in the silo.

Mowing Successful in Eradicating Many Weeds

Where more than one-fourth of the stand of vegetation in a pasture is comprised of weeds, it usually indicates that the land is either overgrazed, prematurely grazed, or a combination of the two. In planning to improve the pasture, consideration should be given to correcting the causes responsible for the weedy growth. On smooth pastures, most weeds may be successfully eradicated by mowing. If such a method is used, the weeds should be cut about the time they are in flower—before any seed is matured.

Dairy Products Demand

To increase the demand for dairy products seems to be one of the most feasible methods of advancing the dairy business. It is believed by doctors and nutrition specialists that, on the average, the American people do not consume more than about half the fluid whole milk necessary to the maintenance of the highest degree of health. If organized dairymen could educate the public to the values of the greater quantity of milk in the diet it would open up a large field for dairy expansion.

Field Needs Aid to Grow Silage Yearly

Ohio Experiment Station Shows Practice Possible.

Hauling green corn from the field to the silo is an expensive part of the storage of silage, and the distance which the corn must be transported has much to do with the cost of the silage, especially in hilly country.

Where only a single field is located near the silo, the question arises as to whether silage corn can be grown upon it each year.

On the Belmont county experiment farm a block of land near the silo has been growing silage corn continuously since 1917. Walter Mahan, superintendent of the farm, and J. S. Cutler, assistant in agronomy at the Ohio agricultural experiment station, have reported on results of the practice.

Their conclusion is that where silage corn is to be grown continuously on one field, the fertility program should be so planned as to meet the fertilizer needs of the crop and at the same time maintain the supply of organic matter in the soil. Such a program should include the liberal application of well-cared-for manure, together with both broadcast and hill or row fertilizer applications for corn and the growing of some sort of cover crop on the land over winter.

A fertilizer treatment of eight to ten tons of manure and a broadcast application of 200 to 250 pounds per acre of 20 per cent superphosphate and a row application of 100 or 200 pounds of complete fertilizer with a formula of 2-10-6, is suggested. Such cover crops as rye, and rye and vetch, have proved satisfactory.

Fruit Orchard Demands Ample Nitrogen Supply

Speaking recently before the Quebec Horticultural society in Montreal, Prof. J. H. Gourley, chief horticulturist of the Ohio experiment station, called attention to the striking demand that orchards make for nitrogen, particularly sod or mulched orchards.

In discussing practical fertilizer practices, based on Ohio conditions, Professor Gourley said: "Our practice is to apply approximately a quarter of a pound of nitrate of soda for each year of a tree's age, so that a four-year-old tree receives one pound and a twenty-year-old tree five pounds. This is broadcast or sown beneath the outer branches."

He called attention to orchard experiments in which complete fertilizers are used in comparison with nitrogen only. "The evidence in favor of the former," he said, "is so meager and unconvincing in most cases as to have led horticulturists generally to confine their recommendations to nitrogen beneath the trees and to phosphorus between the tree rows for the benefit of the grass or cover crop."

As regards quality, Professor Gourley mentioned experiments in progress which show that "fruit from trees highly fertilized with nitrate of soda has kept as well as that from trees receiving normal treatment."

Two Types of Insects Causing Garden Damage

Many a beautiful flower garden and a highly satisfactory stand of vegetables has been partially or totally destroyed by attacks of insect and fungus pests which might easily have been controlled. Roughly speaking, the insect enemies are divided into two groups, those that eat holes in the foliage and those that suck out the juices. For the first named, poison is usually applied, while the suckers are attacked with a burning spray which penetrates their hides. Often when both are present a combination of poison and something that burns such as lime, sulphur and arsenate gives the best results.

Agricultural Notes

To produce economically, a cow must make a large flow of milk.

* * *

Practically the same methods followed for Sudan grass will do for millet.

* * *

A shelterbelt saves fuel and prevents the overworking of a home heating plant.

* * *

Many farmers leave alfalfa too long in the windrow, and the leaves dry and drop off. Some leave it too long in cocks.

* * *

It is estimated that the effect of phosphate and potash fertilizers may be seen four or five years after the first application.

* * *

In average seasons alfalfa is better sown in the fall. Good stands obtained in early fall are usually safe from winter killing.

* * *

The newly-born calf should have the milk for the first few days. This is the colostrum milk, and aids in putting the digestive system of the calf in good working order.

* * *

Bag storage is a safe method only if the potatoes can be kept dry. One disadvantage of this type of storage is that in the event of any of the potatoes developing rot it will be necessary to resack the entire lot to ascertain the amount of damage present.

POULTRY

CHICKEN HOUSES NEED IMPROVING

Lack of Light or Ventilation Discourages Hens.

Many old poultry houses are lacking in light or ventilation or both. Where ample light is already provided through windows but ventilation is inadequate, it is often best to remove the upper sash of the windows. If there are not enough windows, additional openings should be cut in the upper part of the front wall.

"Under Kansas conditions it is desirable to make these openings equal to about one-tenth of the floor space. Hail screen over these openings will serve to keep the poultry in and rodents out," suggests Walter G. Ward, extension architect, Kansas State Agricultural college, in giving hints on improving the old poultry house. "Frames covered with a light weight of muslin may be provided in the front openings to protect the flock during very cold or stormy weather."

Many old chicken houses are unnecessarily high and are very cold during the winter months, continues the building specialist. He says a simple remedy is to construct a straw ceiling or loft. The straw is preferably carried on inch mesh poultry netting. For supports 2x4 inch cross ties placed every 4 feet will be practical. About 1 foot of loose straw is placed on the netting and small openings in each end above the straw serve to keep it dry. The straw is left in the poultry house throughout the year.

Find Sour Milk Good Ingredient of Protein

Sour skim milk in unlimited quantities gives a higher total and average egg production, higher profit over feed cost, and produced eggs at a lower feed cost than semi-solid buttermilk dried buttermilk, meat scrap or sour skim milk whey. The dried buttermilk and semi-solid buttermilk pens gave a smaller percentage of large eggs and a larger percentage of small eggs than did the sour skim milk pen. Some skim milk whey is inferior to the other feeds in every way. The dried buttermilk pen gives the highest hatchability.

A comparison of semi-solid and dried buttermilk shows the semi-solid pen gives higher per cent production and eggs per pullet. The dried pen, however, gives slightly higher yearly average profit over feed cost per pullet, cheaper feed cost per dozen eggs and higher hatchability.

The results of experiments indicate that a vegetable protein supplement to sour skimmed milk, such as peameal, alfalfa meal, and beanmeal, is productive and profitable. In production and profit over feed cost, the supplements ranked: Peameal, alfalfa meal, beanmeal, then no supplement.

Poultry Hints

Shut up or sell male birds.

* * *

Cleanliness is the best preventive of poultry diseases.

* * *

Brooder houses should be placed where the drainage is good.

* * *

Store the eggs in a cool cellar if possible. Market them twice a week

* * *

Feed poultry yellow corn, cod-liver oil, milk and leafy feeds for vitamines

* * *

Young chicks should be encouraged to roost at an early age. The chicks will become accustomed to roosting if a low roost which slopes from the floor back of the hover to the rear of the house is provided.

* * *

What kind of eggs are going to market this summer? Demand for them may be increased by proper care Be sure the hens have plenty of clean airy nests well filled with litter—one nest for every five or six hens.

* * *

Round out the corners of the brooder house to keep the chicks from crowding.

* * *

Artificial brooding of chicks involves the problems of providing a suitable shelter for them on ground which is free from worm parasite infestation.

* * *

Be sure the old hens and young stock have plenty of ventilation during the hot summer months. Open the rear ventilator in the house and take out the windows.

* * *

Small eggs produce small chicks. The size of next year's eggs depends first upon breeding, second upon feeding.

* * *

Encourage chickens to roost while they are still young to prevent crooked breast bones and crowding and to aid ventilation.

* * *

Barley is considered a very good feed for poultry. It is richer in protein and carbohydrates than oats, and has less crude fiber. In some sections it is made a substitute for corn

Much Wood Swallowed Up by Printing Press

Any large daily and Sunday newspaper with its many sections and supplements is one of the chief consumers of the forest resources of the nation, according to a survey of reforestation needs by Farm and Fireside.

One week's publication uses enough paper to represent the pulp from 400 acres of trees, or 20,000 acres of forest in a year. At least 10 square miles of forest go to the pulp mills every day in the year to keep the presses of the country running.

The United States uses more wood per capita than any nation in the world. More than two-thirds of the 822,000,000 acres contained in the country's original forests have been culled, cut over or destroyed by fire. About 26,000,000,000 cubic feet of material are taken out of the forests every year for all purposes, while only about 6,000,000,000 feet are growing anew in them. All kinds of trees are being consumed faster than they are being grown.

Since 1909 the United States has used more wood pulp than it has produced. Two-thirds of the present supply is being imported from Canada.

Great Geyser Exhibit

The most comprehensive geyser exhibit in the world has been placed in the new Yellowstone Park museum building at Old Faithful, under the supervision of Dorr G. Yeager, park naturalist. It consists of specimens of the various types of geyser and hot springs deposits and of diagrammatic paintings showing how a geyser works, and of the evolution of a geyser through the geological ages. The museum has been located at Old Faithful because that is the geyser capital of the earth. More active geysers of the first order are to be found within a ten mile radius of this spot than in all the rest of the world put together.

PRESERVING HINTS

(By Betty Barclay)

Mother followed the "pound-for-pound" idea when preserving most of her fruits and berries. This was inherited from grandmother and when carefully followed produced a very excellent and exceedingly rich delicacy. The modern tendency is to can rather than to preserve, but thousands of women still insist upon putting up a quantity of the old favorites. Three pounds of sugar to four pounds of fruit is probably the best proportion to use in most modern preserving. This furnishes what might be termed "winter ful" ofr the body. A piece of bread and butter, covered with preserve, is a happy in-between bite for the kiddies—the minerals and salts of the fruit and quick energy and heating qualities of the sugar combining to form an excellent ballence. Try these recipes and see how well they add to your preserve shelf:

Green Gage Preserve

After putting plums in a wire strainer, dip strainer in boiling water, allowing to remain until skins crack and loosen, so that plums may be removed and peeled. Place a layer of plums in large earthen jar, sprinkle with sugar, add another layer of fruit, sprinkle with sugar, continuing until supply of fruit is exhausted or jar filled—then set aside over night. Use about three pounds of sugar to each four pounds of plums.

In the morning draw off juice. Boil it for ten minutes, skimming as scum rises. Add the fruit and cook rapidly until the plums are clear and tender. Skim out the fruit, place on a large platter, and boil the syrup until it coats a spoon, draining into the kettle all that drains from the fruit on the platter. When thick enough, return the fruit to the syrup and bring to a boil. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal.

Peach Preserves

Cling stone peaches keep their shape better than free stone, although either variety may be preserved Wash, peel, and remove the stones if you wish—cutting peaches in fourths if stones are removed. Use three quarters pound of sugar and three quarters cup of water to each pound of prepared fruit. Boil sugar and water for ten minutes. Skim, add the fruit and cook rapidly until it is transparent. Seal in clean hot jars.

With the Churches

"NONE OF HIS"

No amount of noisy radicalism or loud profession of "red-hot" religion will ever take the place of the gracious spirit of the Master. The champions of old-fashioned radical holiness must be exponents of a spirituality that is genuine and deep. When men stoop to the use of bitter, stinging sarcasm and show a spirit of jealousy and hate, and are ready to split hairs and hang heretics it is evident that they are themselves void of the spirit of Christ. The church of Jesus Christ should be radical against sin in all of its forms, and should steadfastly resist the enchroachment of worldliness, but in doing so we must not fail to manifest the spirit of the Christ who has given us this religion. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of His."

MACHINES SPEED UP POTATO HARVEST

It is no secret, says the research department of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, that picking up potatoes by hand is by far the hardest and most expensive operation in growing the crop. As a result, several types of mechanical potato pickers and baggers have recently come into use.

These pickers and baggers are designed to work behind ordinary one-row potato diggers and to elevate the tubers into sacks and bags. Three to four men are generally required to operate them, one to drive the tractor or horses and from two to three to ride on the platform of the picker where they sort out stones from the spuds and set sacks off on the ground after they are filled.

Another type of potato harvesting machine is the bunching attachment for potato diggers which deposits the potatoes in small piles along the row. Two-row diggers have also come into use.

GOLDEN TEXT—Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 12:28-34; James 2:14-17

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping One Another.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Helping One Another.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Do We Owe to Others?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fulfilling Our Obligation to Others.

The sum total of human duty as set forth by Christ in Matthew 22:34-40 is love to God and one's neighbor. This comprehends every conceivable relationship and responsibility of life. The measure of love to God is the whole capacity of man to love. The measure of love to one's neighbor is one's love for himself.

I. Loving God (Mark 12:28-30).

Man's first duty is to God. The word which sums up his duty to God is love. By loving is meant a sincere desire for and a delight in the welfare of the one loved, and a willingness to do everything possible to further it. Love is not a sentimental emotion, but an ardent passion which absolutely sways the one who loves. When one is swayed by the passion to please, honor and glorify God, he is loving Him with his whole heart, strength and mind. To fail to render full obedience to this, the first and great commandment, is to be guilty of committing the greatest sin. By this test we can readily estimate our freedom from sin. Determined by this standard, all are guilty before God. We should put God first in all of life's relationships.

II. Loving Our Neighbor (Mk. 12:31-34).

This obligation is like unto the obligation to God in that it centers in love. The measure of love is not the same. The measure of love to God is the absolute limit of human capacity. That unto our neighbor is "as thyself." Our neighbor is a finite being, therefore the love is not absolute. Who is my neighbor? This is answered by the story of the good samaritan in Luke 10:30-37. Our neighbor is one who is in need of our help. It is not a question of where he lives, but of his need of help. Some of the ways we can love our neighbor, as suggested by the texts selected by the lesson committee, are:

1. By co-operation (Neh. 4:15-23).

The walls of Jerusalem needed to be rebuilt. The task was great and the enemies strong. Nehemiah could not have done it alone, though working all the days of his life, but "every one unto his work" made the walls a reality in a short time. Racial solidarity is a reality. "No man liveth unto himself," therefore human life is lived at its best in co-operation with one another.

2. By the strong bearing the infirmities of the weak (Rom. 15:1-7).

By this means we build up each other. We are given strength, not to use for ourselves, but that we may help sustain the weak. We are not to please ourselves. Our supreme example in this is Jesus Christ. If He had pleased Himself, He never would have come down to earth, taken our nature and suffered the shame of the cross. The rich are to help the poor. Indeed, some are made rich in order that they may intelligently render helpful service to the poor.

3. By rendering lowly service (Phil. 2:1-9).

The supreme business of life is to serve, not to be served. Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister (Mark 10:45). Christ, though equal with God, humbled Himself to become the servant of men. The human mind is naturally selfish, therefore the only way man can possibly render lowly service to others is to have the mind of Christ. The only way this mind can be in us is as Christ is in us, the Lord of our lives.

4. By rendering justice to everyone (Col. 3:12; 4:1).

All our fellows have rights which must be recognized to accomplish which the elect of God must put on a mind of mercy and kindness (Col. 3:12). This kind of treatment finds illustration in our home relationships—wives and husbands, parents and children, masters and servants. Failure to render justice is a source of discord and confusion.

5. By giving to others (Jas. 2:14-17).

Christianity shows itself in practical living and charitable giving. To profess to have faith and be destitute of practical deeds is to give the lie to our profession.

Brothers All

During the World war a desperately wounded German and an equally desperately wounded Englishman were lying on the field side by side. They heard each other murmur "Mutter" and "Mother," and through ignorant of each other's language they found in "mother" a word that made them brothers. They made each other feel that they must pray together, and together they prayed "Unser Vater der bist im Himmel!" and "Our Father which art in heaven."

VEAL LOAF IS TASTY AND ATTRACTIVE

Molded Meat Loaf Ready to Serve.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A well-seasoned veal or beef loaf is one of the tastiest and most attractive dishes made from the cheaper cuts. Lean meat may be selected and bought especially for making it, or parts may be trimmed from cuts that will be cooked in other ways, put through the grinder, and thus utilized separately. In either case there is little or no waste. The recipe below, from the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, is for a veal loaf seasoned with salt pork and savory vegetables.

Veal Loaf.

4 cups ground raw veal	¼ cup chopped parsley
1 cup finely diced salt pork	¼ cup chopped onion
1½ cups milk	1 cup fine dry bread crumbs
4 tbs. flour	2 tsp. salt
½ cup chopped celery	⅛ tsp. pepper
	⅛ tsp. celery seed

Fry the salt pork until light brown and crisp and remove the pieces from the pan. Make white sauce of the milk, flour, and three tablespoonfuls of the pork drippings. Cook the celery, parsley and onion for a few minutes in the rest of the pork drippings, and add to this the bread crumbs and seasonings. Combine all ingredients, using the hands to mix thoroughly. The mixture will have a sticky consistency. Lay a piece of parchment paper on a rack in an open roasting pan. Mold the meat loaf on the paper with the hands. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 1¼ hours. Do not cover the pan and do not add water to it. Remove the loaf from the paper and serve hot, or chill it for slicing cold.

Much better results are obtained when the loaf is molded and baked in the way described in a wide shallow pan than when it is packed into a smaller pan and baked like a loaf of bread. Cold veal loaf, sliced very thin and garnished with parsley or water cress, is most attractive for lunch. It is excellent, too, as a sandwich filling, either with or without a leaf of lettuce and a spoonful of mayonnaise.

CORRECT POSTURE AT WRITING DESK

Right and Wrong Position While Working.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Much has been said about maintaining good posture while at work doing the various household tasks that require muscular effort, but one must also think of the position assumed in other occupations that do not in themselves seem particularly tiring or likely to intensify bad habits.

Here is a demonstration of the right and wrong postures in writing a letter, or household accounts, or anything else that requires sitting at a desk. The pictures were taken by the United States Department of Agriculture in a Massachusetts farm home, and emphasize the points that have been repeatedly stressed by extension workers in this state, and, in fact in all states where attention has been given to good posture.

In the "wrong" picture, the woman is crouched over the desk with her shoulder hunched up, her head thrust forward and her feet twisted uncomfortably under her chair. A little exertion in this position will soon cause her back to ache and may help to make her permanently round-shouldered. In the other picture she is seen sitting with her feet squarely on the ground, her back straight, and her head following the line of her back naturally. This position is comfortable and not tiring.

APPLE PIES AGAIN APPEAR ON MENU

Fairly Tart, Juicy Varieties Are Most Favored.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Fairly tart, juicy, quick-cooking varieties of apples make the best pies. The first apples to ripen and fall are sometimes a little undersized, and often tarter than one likes to eat uncooked, so it is a good idea to make apple pies of them.

For the filling you will need 4 to 8 apples, depending on their size, three-fourths cupful sugar, two tablespoonfuls butter, one-fourth teaspoonful salt, and one-eighth teaspoonful cinnamon, if spices are liked. After paring, quartering and slicing the apples very thin, pack them carefully into the undercrust so the cover will fit evenly. Sprinkle the apples with the sugar, salt and spice, mixed together, and dot with butter. Place on the upper crust after moistening the lower rim, and press the edges together to hold in the juice. Cut a slit to allow the steam to escape. Bake about 30 minutes or until the crust is golden brown and the apples are tender.

Every housekeeper has her preferred pie crust recipe, and caters to the family whims in respect to "kivered" and "unkivered" pies, nutmeg or cinnamon or lemon for flavor, and whether or not to serve cheese with the pie, or whipped cream, or a ball of vanilla ice cream. The bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, gives these proportions for pie crust and directions for mixing and rolling it:

1½ cups sifted soft wheat flour	5½ to 7 tbs. fat (pastry)
	2½ tbs. water
	1 tsp. salt

Use lard or vegetable fat or any sweet-flavored fat you like better. Combine it with the flour by chopping with knives or a biscuit cutter or work it in with the tips of the fingers, as rapidly as possible. Add the water slowly and use no more than is absolutely necessary. Roll out the dough very lightly. The temperature of the oven should be high to start with and then be lowered rapidly after 8 or 10 minutes, so that the filling may cook clear through without overcooking the crust.

Points to Remember in Cooking Tender Beef

Different cuts of beef from the same animal vary greatly in tenderness. The home-maker not only has to know how to choose beef in the market but how to prepare whatever cut she buys to bring out its best qualities. Appetizing dishes can be made from all cuts of beef so that purchases may fit any budget.

Recipes for a number of different cuts of beef have been worked out by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture and published in a leaflet for free distribution. The principal points in cooking the more tender cuts are: Searing the surface of the meat first at a high temperature for a short time or until a well-flavored brown coating is formed, reducing the temperature so as to finish cooking at a moderate heat; in the case of roasts, using a roast-meat thermometer in the center of the roast to indicate when the meat is rare, medium, or well done. Beef is rare between the temperatures of 130 and 150 degrees Fahrenheit, medium between 150 and 170 degrees Fahrenheit, and well done at about 180 degrees Fahrenheit. As many people like mushroom sauce with their steak and Yorkshire pudding with rib roast of beef, these recipes are also given in the leaflet

He spoke a great many more equally eloquent words, for he had the gift of speech; had this drover from Aincourt. A rough fellow, it is true, but one with his heart in the right place, and born in the district, too; anyone could tell that by the contemptuous way with which he spoke of any stranger born outside this corner of Seine et Oise.

He was listened to with great attention, was the driver. And his words presently carried all the more weight because something very strange came to light. It appeared that the diligence from Moisson with prisoners and escort had made a halt of several hours in Mantes. The party only made a fresh start in the late afternoon. That was strange enough, in all conscience! What did it mean but that Lauzet was courting the darkness for his schemes? But there was something more mysterious still. While the diligence stood before the posting inn ready to start, horses pawing and champing, the driver on his box, whip in hand, the four troopers who were on guard to right and left of the vehicle would not allow anyone to come within measurable distance of it. Be it noted that all the blinds of the coach were drawn so that it was impossible to get a peep at the inside. But two young men, strangers to the neighborhood, who had since come forward, eager to tell their story, more venturesome than others, had crept under the horses' bellies and tried to peer into the interior of the coach. They were almost immediately driven away with blows and curses by the troopers, but not before they had vaguely perceived that there were more than just the prisoners inside the diligence.

The prisoners were all huddled up in the farthest corner of the vehicle, but there were others. The young men who had had a peep, despite the blows from the troopers, had seen three or four men at least. They might have been ordinary travelers who had picked up the diligence at Mantes. But in that case, why all this secrecy? Why the drawn blinds, the start in the late afternoon so that the shades of evening would actually the drawing in when the diligence and its escort plowed its way through the muddy road of the forest between Mezieres and Epone? Why a feeble escort of only four men when of late as many as eight or ten picked troopers of the national guard had ridden beside the diligence?

Indeed, the drover from Aincourt was right. Indubitably right. Citizen Lauzet and his friend from Paris had entered into a plot, a dastardly, cowardly plot, to cheat the citizens of Moisson of their just share in the capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel. There was no doubt that the Scarlet Pimpernel was already captured, and that Lauzet was having him conveyed in secret to Paris. The escort might appear feeble, but there were men inside the diligence who held the English spy, bound hand and foot, between them with a cocked pistol at his head. Why! The two young strangers who had succeeded in getting a peep at the inside of the diligence quite thought, from the description every one had of him, that one of the men whom they glimpsed was in very truth the Scarlet Pimpernel.

"He was so tall," they said, "so tall that he had to sit almost bent double, otherwise his head would have knocked against the roof of the coach!" They were almost prepared to swear also that this tall man's hands were tied together with ropes.

After that, as the driver from Aincourt very properly said, any man would be a fool who doubted Lauzet's treachery and cupidity. It was resolved to proceed immediately in his wake, to seize him wherever he might be, him and any man who had helped him in his treachery. Aye, if he had an army to protect him, he would find that the men of Moisson and Mantes were not to be flouted and cheated with impunity. The drover from Aincourt was bribed to take the party in his cart as far as Mezieres. He demurred a little at first; seemed to turn crusty and was impervious to threats. Eventually he was offered one hundred livres out of every man's share if the English spy was captured and one livre if he was not.

"Eh bien!" he said at last in token of consent, and they all scrambled back into the cart.

CHAPTER VI

Surprise

Captain Raffet had given the order to dismount, and the troopers sat by the roadside under the trees, making a pretense to rest. Each man, however, had his saber ready to his hand, and each had seen to the priming of his pistol, while the captain ostensibly busied himself with examining the fetlock of the mare who had gone lame. The wind had gone down and the torrential rain had ceased, but there was a thin mist-like drizzle that soaked through the men's clothing and chilled them to the bone. The tension had become acute. With nerves on edge the men, those who were in the open as well as those who were cooped up inside the diligence, could do nothing but wait while the time dragged on and the shades of evening drew in around them.

The silence in the woods was full of sounds: of the cracking of twigs, the fall of rain-laden leaves, the scrunching of earth under tiny, furtive feet scurrying away through the undergrowth. The great, awkward diligence loomed out of the mist like some gigantic, spectral erection, peopled by forms that breathed and lived and hardly emitted a sound. Only very occasionally from the interior there came the painful moan, quickly suppressed, from the poor invalid's parched throat.

And all at once something more tangible, a patter of feet, a call, a voice half drowned in the gathering mist. It came way down the road, from the direction of Mezieres. The men sat up, alert, quivering with excitement, their eyes straining to pierce the thicket, since the sharp bend in the road hid the oncomers from view. The order was to feign inattention, to wait for the attack, lest the wily enemy scenting a trap, scampered away to safety. And the men waited, very much like greyhounds held in leash, quivering with eagerness, their hot, moist hands grasping saber and pistol, the while Captain Raffet, as keenly alert as they, carried on a desultory conversation with the driver about the mare's injured fetlock. Vague forms began to detach themselves out of the mist, coming round the bend, soon they gained volume and substance. The voice still calling gained power and clarity. It was much as Captain Raffet could do, by muttered word and glance of eye, to keep those human greyhounds of his in check. With the Scarlet Pimpernel perhaps in sight they were straining on the leash to its breaking point.

It was at the very moment that, throwing all prudence to the wind, the men suddenly raised themselves upon their knees and were on the point of springing to their feet, unable to contain their excitement any longer, that Charles-Marie, the loony driver, who had once been a baker's assistant, exclaimed joyfully, "Pardi! if it isn't citizen Plante home from market already!" And the next instant the oncoming figure revealed itself as that of an old man, walking along with the aid of a tall stick, and calling at times to his dog or to the half dozen sheep he was driving before him.

Citizen Plante was not of a gregarious disposition, nor of an inquisitive one apparently, for he passed by without a word or glance of curiosity directed at the troopers or at the vehicle. All that he did was to nod to the driver as he went by, while the men gazed at him wide eyed open mouthed, as if he had been a specter. And like a specter he seemed to glide past them and out of sight. A minute or two later the twilight and the mist had swallowed him up with his sheep and his dog, and had smothered his monotonous calls in the veils of the night.

Heroics of Olden Days Are No Longer Possible

Days when a brave woman could earn the applause of the country by yanking off her red petticoat and flagging a train just as it neared a broken rail are over, mostly because broken rails are rarer and red petticoats extinct. The New Jersey farmer who saved a train by waving a flag and a burlap bag, the other day, recalled those heroines of the past generation to mind, and, being given to idle speculation, we tried to picture the situation if a modern woman should come across a broken rail. If she removed a garment (any garment) to use as a flag, with the probabilities against her finding one large enough to be seen, the chances favor a horrible wreck, because a really modest engineer could do no less than close his eye, and speed past. Engineers, no doubt, favor a return of the good old days, in the interest of safety. —Columbus Dispatch.

Fishermen's Mittens

A strange custom of New England coast winter fishermen is to soak their thick, woolen mittens in the sea and wring them out as dry as possible before putting them on. They say their hands keep much warmer than if they don the mittens when dry.

In a recent month the British Isles exported nearly 380,000 tons of iron and steel products.

THE WOOING OF KATE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

WHENEVER I consider what young Sterling Evermore went through in order to woo and win my niece Kate I realize that times have not changed very much since the ordeal by fire.

He invariably arrived at our summer cottage five miles from the village where the train stopped, driving the only vehicle for hire—a runabout which promised instant dissolution, and this last especial week-end visit he added a final swoop and clatter as the car hit the rural mailbox at our gate and then sagged into temporary harmlessness. Sterling leaped out and surveyed the collapse of our postal arrangements.

"Terribly sorry," he stammered as he strode toward the porch where Agatha and Henry and I sat, with Kate just emerging through the door.

"Doesn't matter at all," lied Henry, the perfect host, as he shook hands. Sterling blushed still harder when Kate looked up at him and completed his rout. Kate is slight and little with real gold hair and the corners of her red mouth curl upward. She turned her smile on her mother.

"I forgot to tell you Sterling was coming," she murmured. "But it's all right, isn't it, mother?"

"Most certainly," said Agatha, because she couldn't say anything else. There were not enough chops and the guestroom blankets were at the laundry and besides this Henry was terribly perturbed at the idea of Kate being grown up enough to have devoted young men.

"I won't have it!" he told Agatha in the living room and then slunk away before her sardonic eye, which asked how he was going to stop it.

"Oooh!" cried Kate from the porch, clapping a hand to one eye, Sterling had tossed her a felt hat as they started for a ride and the rim had flicked her face. "It's nothing!" she insisted when the family surrounded her. "No, it doesn't hurt—much!"

"Wouldn't you know it?" Henry growled when the two departed. Sterling solicitously guiding his temporarily one-eyed love toward the machine. "Comes all the way up here to blind her because he is so fond of her! One chance in a million of hitting the mark and he hits it! I tell you I won't have it!"

Some time later the runabout approached the cottage with a vague air of being an ambulance and when Kate and her cavalier entered she wore one eye bandaged and blackpatched and between them, they bore sundry bottles. Sterling was pale and anxious. "It got worse," he informed us. "We hunted up an eye doctor and he said the eyeball is scratched!"

"Of course it is!" Henry said tempestuously, with an awful glance at his child's suitor, drawing her to his side as though warding her to contamination.

"Father!" the sufferer spoke up sternly, one-eyed though she was. "As though Sterling meant to do it."

Very shortly after, Kate being in her room to rest, Sterling said he thought he'd take a little walk in the woods, where it was quiet. Avoiding the front porch, where Henry fumed, Sterling, with the lumbering stealth of a Newfoundland puppy, slipped out the rear way and, once on the kitchen porch, drew a breath of relief and stepped down. Farther than he had expected—for the workman, just finishing the job of the new back steps in cement, had at the moment gone around the house to pick up the lumber for a barricade against the mush-like stuff. He was through with a back-breaking task. He returned at the instant when Sterling's right foot was ankle deep in the top step and his left had scraped and slid down the others to the ground. The ruin was thorough.

"Sterling! Are you hurt?" cried Kate, managing in her rose lounging robe to look quite lovely in spite of her one eye.

"Look at those steps!" cried Henry, who was paying $12 a day for them.

"He's jarred off the cream pie I set on the lattice to cool!" accused the cook, standing over the jumbled meringue with a grim air of its being a climax in her life. "The dinner dessert!"

Assisted by Henry and the cement worker, Sterling got to his feet, brushing futilely at his besmeared clothing, his face crimson with helpless wrath.

"If you try to wash it off," the cement worker told him, with lively satisfaction, "it'll harden onto the goods, and if you let it alone it'll harden, anyway! Ain't it too bad!"

But Kate did remove considerable of it, for we found it later hardened onto the floor and the washbowl and all available surfaces. It was also entwined in the bristles of Henry's pet English nail brush and in the fabric of Agatha's best towels. Young love is ruthless.

Hostilities were abruptly closed when the explosion occurred in the kitchen. When we reached there so many things seemed on fire simultaneously that nobody said anything. We worked. Sterling's white flannels that he had on, his other trousers spread on the ironing board, the tea towels on their rack and a pile of newspapers all were blazing merrily. On the floor lay the remains of the big gasoline flatiron.

"I—I thought," Sterling explained jerkily as we grabbed and beat and stamped, "that I would not bother any one. I thought I could manage that fool iron if I could run a car."

"Well," Agatha gasped, crumpling the charred remains of six perfectly new tea towels, "I believe the—er—fundamental idea is slightly different. Now I'll try to find you something of Henry's to put on."

"Not my new suit!" Henry roared grimly. "I'm depending on the suit for the next six months."

In Henry's golf rig, Sterling being six inches taller than his host and broader, the boy looked nervously unhappy. Kate, still indignantly seething, suggested a ride.

"I suppose," she addressed her male parent loftily, "that Sterling may take your old green sweater? He forgot his."

"He would," admitted Henry with bitter promptness. "Oh, by all means, take it."

The runabout coughed and roared itself away and Henry sat with his dropped magazine, thinking. "I can't get used to it," he said. "With so many other girls in the world—why did he have to pick on her? Where are my reading glasses? Funny how things disappear when that boy is around! No, I've looked everywhere! I can't read a word without 'em!"

The two finally returned. Walking in very close together with clasped hands, the radiance in their faces completely obscured the black patch Kate still wore over one eye. In spite of Henry's golf suit, Sterling looked very handsome.

"Oh, mother," Kate faltered, "we—"

"Mr. Turbot," Sterling began in the tone a young man uses but on one occasion in his life, "I—we—"

I must say that Henry rises to a crisis. Walking over to the two, he clapped Sterling on the shoulder. "I knew it!" he admitted bravely. "Well, son, it's all right, if she cares for you! It's come kind of sudden—if only I could find my glasses."

"Oh!" breathed Kate with a remembering gasp, turning a gaze of complete adoration on Sterling, "the sweater."

From under his arm he produced it. He lost his conquering look.

"There seemed to be something in the pocket when I sat down on it in the car," he explained, hurriedly. "I—er—it was a pair of glasses. They—well, they're quite smashed!"

"Of course they are," said Henry resignedly. He had accepted fate.

Breakneck Rail Speed in the Belgian Congo

Late in June I boarded the train that leaves Cape Town twice a week on the longest railway journey in Africa.

For nearly 3,000 miles this train carries you northward. Through the vines and orchards of the Paarl. Across the brown wastes of the Karroo and Bechuanaland. Past gray clouds against a crawling line of fire—the "sounding smoke" of Victoria falls at dawn. Still northward through the bush of northern Rhodesia. Beyond the last British outpost at Ndola.

On the fifth evening you reach the Belgian Congo frontier station of Sakania, where you must leave the clean Rhodesian train and take your seat in the grimy Chemin de Fer du Katanga.

Compartments in the Belgian train were furnished richly with curtains and tapestried walls. The wash basins were so small that a ham-fisted man could not have washed both hands at once. Above my seat I found a notice in French and Flemish:

"In this country the mosquito is the chief enemy. Have you taken your quinine today? If not, do so now. Beware of the tsetse fly!"

Very soon I discovered a danger greater than mosquito or tsetse. All trains in the Congo are driven by fearless black maniacs. They rattle through the forest, taking steep descents and rickety bridges without slackening speed. Rocketbursts of sparks from the wood-burning locomotives send the monkeys gibbering back to their trees.

When the line was first opened, the engine drivers were white men. They drank so much that natives had to be found to take their places. I am not sure, however, that a whisky-inspired European would not be safer than the sober demons who now control the trains of the Katanga.

All night the nerve-shattering scream of the whistle was heard. The vanity of a black driver is such that he will not pass the smallest cluster of huts without this manifestation of the high estate to which he has risen. —Lawrence G. Green in the Empire Review.

Caustic Humor

In the early days, says an article in the New York Times, no one would presume to cry any sort of goods, unless he was licensed by the selectman. The old town crier lived by his wits. Old Wilson had an ingenious flow of language. Once he announced a Fourth of July dinner in Charlestown. Certain citizens pestered him with inquiries as to the bill of fare. His answer was: "The dinner will be ample, with a pig at every plate."

Risky

"Why didn't you put out your hand when you turned the corner?" demanded the motorist.

"Well, you see," replied the flapper motorist, "I've just been out with Jack, and he gave me the most thrilling diamond ring—isn't it a beauty?—and I knew only too well that if I put out my hand the headlights of the car behind would shine on the diamond and dazzle the driver, and then absolutely anything might have happened, mightn't it?"

Adrift With Humor

CHECKMATE

The stately old aristocrat was approached somewhat cockily by a rich and vulgar young man, who announced:

"I say, sir, I am thinking of marrying one of your girls. Have I your permission?"

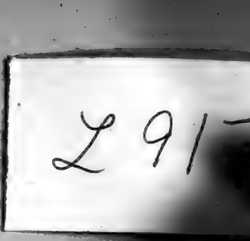
"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "Which one interests you? The maid or the cook?"—Boston Transcript.

Mean Brute

"It is terrible the number of murders there are," exclaimed Mrs. Grouch.

"Yeah!" growled her husband, "but with the number of backseat drivers there are it is nothing short of remarkable that there are not more."

THE REPTILE



Gladys—"The reptile! How dare he speak of me that way!" Maggie—"Why call him such a name?" Gladys—"He's a lounge lizard, that's why."

Then He Passed On

He passed the cop sans any fuss,
He passed a load of hay,
He tried to pass a swerving bus,
And then he passed away.

Cautious

"You'll notice that I've written the address on both sides of the label for this package."

"Yes; any special reason, madam?" asked the post office clerk.

"Well, I thought it would be safer in case the label comes off."

Anticipating the Hereafter

Mr. Knagg—But, my dear, you know I'd go through fire for you.

His Wife—I suppose you will go through fire when your time comes and you'll say it was for me because it would be like you to blame a poor widow for it.

STEPPED ON THE GAS

"Yes, he knocked his wife down and put his foot on her mouth and she had him arrested."

"Under what charge?"

"Stepping on the gas."

Playing Along

A man attempts audacious tricks,
Proceeding with a cunning smile.
He thinks he's playing politics—
And playing havoc all the while.

No Need for More

Shyman—Tell me, Willie, have you any other sisters?

Willie—Huh, you don't need any others. She's made up her mind to marry you.

Sauce for the Goose

Porter—Miss, yo' train is coming.

Pedantic Passenger—My good man, why do you say "your train" when you know that the train belongs to the company?

Porter—Dunno, miss. Why do yo' say "mah man" when yo' knows Ah belongs to mah wife?—Pathfinder.

Stage Business

"Then that is your farewell tour?"

"All depends. If it goes well I may sign up next season for a welcome back."

Don't Be Silly

"Did you know your husband well before you married him?" asked the caller.

"You don't suppose I would have been crazy enough to have married him if I had, do you?" snapped Mrs. Grouch.

Brisk Trade

Friend (to druggist)—Well, how's business today? Pushing, I suppose?

Druggist—Yes, I've sold 72 cents worth of postage stamps and three postals.

Fish and Game Club Information

Hunting Season Opens in October on Certain Kinds of Game

The open season for hunting rabbits, wild ducks, geese, brant, Wilson or jacksnipe, and coot, starts on October 1st. On the 15th it will be lawful to hunt prairie chicken and woodcock. The last day of open season on the above kinds of game will be as follows: For prairie chicken, October 31st; for woodcock, November 14th; for rabbits, January 10th; for ducks, geese, brant, Wilson or jacksnipe and coot, January 15th. The season closes on squirrels October 31st, and for rails and gallinules, November 30th. Plovers and yellow-legs cannot be killed at any time. The season opens on quail November 10th and closes December 20th.

Hunters Advised to Read Their Licenses

Hunters are advised to carefully read what is printed on their licenses and to inform themselves as to correct seasons and bag limits on all game. They should also not neglect to have their licenses on their persons when in the field. Also must not forget that it is necessary to have permission to hunt or trap on land which they do not own or lease. Ignorance of the game and fish laws is no excuse for violating them and to do so may prove costly.

Distribution of Fish in August

254,355 fingerling fish were delivered to applicants from State fish hatcheries in August. The following is the number and species: Black bass, 68,825; rock bass, 17,500; bluegills, 132,200; crappie, 17,830; red-eared sunfish, 4,000; yellow perch, 1,500 and 12,500 channel catfish. The fish were from 1¾ to 4 inches in length. The distribution made in the month of September will be the last made in this calendar year.

Gar and Dogfish Removed from the Lakes

The four two-men crews of men operating on the lakes of this State with gill nets and spears in taking out gar, dogfish and the larger carp have discontinued the work until next year. The men worked on 18 lakes from May 4th to September 28th. Approximately 9,000 gar and dogfish were removed and destroyed.

The Division's Exhibit at the State Fair

The exhibit of the Division at the Indiana State Fair, September 1st to 7th, was visited by many thousands of men, women and children. A count of the persons passing through the exhibit on the busy days of the Fair averaged about 2,500 per hour. A pair of wild turkeys from the Brown County State Game Reservation, and some 8 weeks old ringneck pheasants reared by the foreman at the riverside State fish hatchery, were displayed along with the usual exhibit of live fish. If provided with a larger building the Division could greatly enlarge its exhibit of game birds and animals.

Number of Arrests and Convictions

In August 220 persons were arrested for violating game and fish laws. 205 were convicted; 11 cases remained to be tried, only 4 were dismissed. The fines and costs in the cases of conviction amounted to $4,730.85. The leading offenses were hunting or fishing without license, 71; possessing or using illegal seines and nets, 47; taking undersize fish, 38; Sunday hunting and hunting on the public highway, 10 each; taking mussels and fishing with the hands, each and using trot line and taking fur out of season, 5 each.

DAINTY DISHES WITH LITTLE EXPENSE

(By Betty Barclay)

Have you gotten into a cooking rut? Many women have, and do not realize it. Early in their married life they learned to cook a certain number of dishes—and for a while they took delight in trying out new ones. The many cares of the houshold, however, put a stop to this and today the dishes are almost the same as those served five or ten or perhaps twenty years ago. When this occurs, woman is in a cooking rut.

Serve at least one new dish a week. Get the recipe from your favorite newspaper or magazine, borrow it from a neighbor, look it up in a cookbook, or compose somthing yourself—but see that at least one new recipe is tried out during the week. Do this and your table will soon become a smiling meeting place for the family—for nothing pleases quite so much as novelty.

It is not necessary to go to great expense in order to serve something new. Perhaps you would like a new salad. Experiment a bit with your common fruits and vegetables and before you know it you will have composed one fit for a king.

As for vegetables, well, try candied carrots. Cook carrots until partly tender in boiling water to which a tablespoonful of sugar has been added. If carrots are large, cut in three slices; small carrots, cut in half. Then place in a baking dish and sprinkle the carrots with salt, pepper and granulated sugar. Dot generously with butter. Bake until nicely browned.

Dessert? Well, of course dessert is a very important dish. So far as the children, and also the man of the home, are concerned, it is very, very important. The fact that so many desserts are expensive, however, often keeps the housewife from setting new ones on the table.

Why not serve ice cream occasionally? Make it at home, with your own ingredients and have it ready to dip from the freezer to the plate at dessert time. It isn't necessary to go to the expense of purchasing a large quantity of cream. Even eggs may be eliminated—and cooking as well—if you make use of a couple of junket tablets.

Enough vanilla ice-cream to fill a two quart freezer may be made from a quart of milk, half a pint of cream, a cup of sugar, one tablespoon vanilla, two junket tablets and a tablespoon of cold water, a combination that is surely sufficiently inexpensive to please the most economical.

Mix milk and cream together and warm to lukewarm, not hot, then add sugar and vanilla. Dissolve junket tablets in the cold water, add to the milk, stir well a moment, then pour immediately into the freezer can, and let stand in a warm room until firm—about twenty minutes. Place can in freezer, pack with ice and salt, and freeze slowly to a thick mush, then finish freezing rapidly.

This dessert is very easy to make, lends variety to the menu, requires no eggs and little cream and is thus inexpensive, does not need to be cooked, and is easily digested and yet healthful and nourishing.

It is well worth trying—whether you are in a cooking rut or not.

HIS FATAL MISTAKE

This is the story of a prudent man, as told by a Kansas newspaper:

"He brushed his teeth twice a day, wore rubbers in wet weather, did his daily dozen, slept with windows open, was careful with his diet, had a medical examination twice a year, never smoked, drank or indulged in any kind of excesses. He was all set to live to be 100 years old.

"The funeral was held last Wednesday. He is survived by 18 specialists, 4 health institutes, 6 gymnasiums and numerous manufacturers of health food and antiseptics.

"He had forgotten to look out for a train at a grade crossing."

Slow thinking is said to cause many automobile accidents, but it is the only thing that is slow about many automobile drivers.

Fire Damages St. Joe Home Considerable

Loss at F. R. Bowman's Residence Friday Night Estimated at $1300

Fire, smoke and water damaged the residence of F. R. Bowman, Friday night about 9 o'clock. Undoubtedly the fire started as result of a defective flue at the rear of the original Bowman home, or the east side of the present home.

This section of the home was occupied by Mr. Gillespie and family. The children had been put to bed and the parents were sitting by the kitchen fire.

Ray Bowman, who had just taken his bath and was about to retire, discovered the fire in the next room used for a storage of bedding, books and furniture.

At the ringing of the fire bell, the department and citizens responded and soon began to fight heroically. The blaze was leaping wildly about the room and for some time it was thought the home would be lost. Everyone began to carry water for the use of the department and for those on the house. After a heroic effort the fire began to subside and the home was saved.

During this time the furniture in the entire house had been removed to the yard and street, and all was removed with much damage.

Considerable water and chemicals were used by the local fire department to subdue the flames. A great amount of water was poured from the upper room where the fire was centered, to the kitchen below, and the plastering dropped off in great quantities.

Three appraisers placed the loss as approximately $1,300, which is completely covered by insurance.

The loss in bedding and valuable keepsakes both of Mr. and Mrs. Bowman and Mrs. D. J. Baker, will be considerable.

Practically every well and cistern in the vicinity of the fire were in full use.

The department labored under difficulty as the electric wires became exposed and the current would follow the stream of water to the hoze nozzle, causing the firemen to drop the hose. While the current was not sufficient to hurt them yet it frightened them.

CARD OF THANKS

CARRIER ON R. F. D. NO. 2 LET OUT SATURDAY

The report of Postoffice Inspector, W. B. Piatt, Fort Wayne, as the result of an investigation held at the local postoffice on September 17, regarding irregularities in the serving of patrons on route two of which Harry Shuff has been carrier for the past seven years, was received at the local office Saturday advising that the department ordered a discontinuance of the carrier's services.

Lester Coburn, substitute, is in full charge of the route.

There seems to be a fear that there may be a general changing of the route and that routes touching this territory from other towns will be extended and patrons changed about so that the standing of the local office will be affected financially and which, as we see it, would soon reduce its standing from a third class office to that of a fourth. At the present time patrons living within 2 miles of our office are receiving their mail from office 10 miles distant, making a real inconvenient service.

It would be advisable for the patrons to circulate a petition setting forth their desire to remain on the present route out of St. Joe. This might have some bearing on the committee under whose supervision the rural service comes.

During the past few years, the changes in route service has been interferred with and always at the expense of the local office, taking patons from our routes and placing them on foreign routes, coming from territories at greater distances. Whenever a move of this kind is done it cripples the local community just that much and diverts the money of the local community in other directions. If in years to come the rural population is to be served with the mail from larger centers, then there will be no communities from which the government derives much of its present revenue. Someone says that this is a move on the part of the government to save, but we who live and are served in the rural comunities believe that the matter is being curtailed from the wrong end. Small communities need the encouragement of the strong and thus build it up.

The desire of the people ought to be expressed.

GRIST MILL NOW OPERATING DAILY

Ray Knisely, of Harlan and Harold Farver, of Jackson Township, have taken over the grist mill at St. Joe, since the serious accident that befell Mr. George Wilson and are now operating the mill each day, assuring the patrons of a real service when they call.

They expect to stock up with feed necessary to supply the demands of their farmer trade, and we feel assured that the community will support the new managers in their undertaking.

Mr. Farver reports that a Hammer Mill is about to be installed and that wheat grinding will take place as soon as things are in condition.

Court Acts Quickly With Bandits

Less Than 48 Hours From Time of Robbery, Bandits Were on Way to Pen

Three bandits who staged a daylight holdup at the Farmers and Merchants bank of Spencerville at 2 o'clock last Wednesday afternoon were captured about two hours later in a field on the farm of Tom Blume about two and one-half miles south of Harlan. Taken to Auburn by Sheriff Armstrong, lodged in jail, trial held on Thursday and Friday two of the men were on their way to the penitentiary. The court giving the men 12–18–20 years.

Forced to desert their car when a tire blew out the bandits fled into a corn field where they were captured by police from Fort Wayne and Auburn and the men from Harlan, Woodburn, Spencerville and St. Joe.

The bandits gave their names as Walter Dill, Cascalia, O., John L. Belton, 610 Abbot St., Detroit, and James Fagen, 77 Canfield St., Detroit. Each was about 30 years old.

One of the bandits surrendered when overtaken and the other two were found by the posse hiding in shocks of corn. About $2,400 of the stolen money was recovered. Part was found hidden in the clothing of one of the bandits and more was found hidden in brush at the edge of a small woods. The bandits pointed out the place where some of the money was hidden. The exact amount of cash taken from the bank was $2,800 and final check up shows a shortage of $482.75. The loss is covered by insurance.

Forced Into Bank Vault

C. G. Rectenwall, cashier of the bank, said that two of the three bandits entered the bank and forced him and W. G. Erick, assistant cashier, to hold up their hands. He said that one of the bandits drew a gun. They ordered Rectenwall to show them where the money was kept.

After getting the money the bandits forced Rectenwall and Erick into the vault and closed the door. It is believed that the bandits thought they had locked Rectenwall and Erick into the vault. However, a patent lock on the door prevented the door from being locked when it was closed.

Rectenwall ran out of the building closely followed by Erick who had stopped to pick up a revolver. Erick opened fire, shooting three times from the street and then set out in pursuit with Walter Tyndall, who drove up in his automobile as he was shooting.

Rectenwall notified Fort Wayne and Auburn police.

OUR WEST VIRGINIA FRIEND WRITES

If there is any one person that ye editor enjoys to talk with it is our old friend, Wm. B. Lucas. There are but few men with the natural humor and wit, as he possesses. Mr. Lucas is now at Colliers, W. Virginia and his note of September 16th is as follows:

"My trip to West Virginia is over at last and I will give you a little history of the old state. It is a grand place to have a farm, you see they set the farms on end and farm both sides of it. Very poor place for mellons, the vines grow so fast they drag the melons all away. They have some sheep but they cause lots of trouble. They have to change the legs to two short and two long ones and when they turn around to come back they have to put the two long legs on the other side.

Well, I am having a fine time, but have a very bad cold. Had a time getting here as they put me off so many times at different stations, and run over so many people at Bethany as the road is above the town, and the train run off the bridge at one end and thru a corn field. They had rails laid for it and it just run right thru a hill and when they got it stopped the man with a leather cap on said, "Whirlwind", and I got off.

Found everybody well and happy. They had all got up the hill with their cars and had them tied to trees for the night.

Look out for I am coming back. My sister is pleased with your paper."

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear husband, John D. Fetters, who passed away a little over a year ago.

The blow was hard, the shock severe
We never thought his death so near
So sad and sudden was the call of
You, dear husband, beloved of all.
Time was too short to say farewell
Our aching hearts will always say
The best we had has passed away;
More and more each day we miss you.
In our home he is fondly remembered;
Sweet memories cling to his name
Those who loved him in life sincerely
Still love him in death just the same.
Tears in silence often flow
Since you left us oh, so sudden;
Day after day our hearts wander
To that little grave not far away,
Where we laid our darling husband
Just a lonesome year or more today.

—Mrs. J. D. Fetters.

Mystery of the Blue Goose Solved

Out of the frozen North comes word that J. Dewey Soper, special investigator of the northwest territories branch of the Department of the Interior, has found the nest of the enigma of ornithologists—the blue goose. For years the blue goose has baffled hunters. Nobody ever saw a blue goose's nest, or a blue goose egg, or a blue goose fledgling. The blue goose appeared every summer, but nobody knew whence it came, or where it went in the autumn. Soper found its habitat away off up in Baffin land, and brought back with him to Ottawa blue goose eggs, nest, goslings and mature birds. Soper is shown above, in the Far North.

Lesson for October 13

KEEPING FIT FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS

Temperance Lesson

LESSON TEXT—Dan. 1:8-20, I Cor. 9:19-27, I Tim. 4:7-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Taking Care of Our Bodies.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Keeping Fit.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Self-control for the Common Good.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Temperance Essential to the Highest Usefulness.

In the use of this as a temperance lesson it must be borne in mind that it is temperance in the sense of self-mastery rather than indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

I. The Self-mastery of Daniel and His Companions (Dan. 1:5-20).

These young men were wrenched from their homes and country in the tender years of youth and carried away as captives to a strange land.

1. Their trials (vv. 5-7).

(1) The test of conscience (v. 5). By the appointment of the king, a portion of the king's meat and wine was provided daily for the captives. This being contrary to the Jewish customs, the young men could not conscientiously partake of them. Conscience is the groundwork of human character.

(2) Changed name (vv. 6, 7).

Among the Hebrews, names were given to children which were most significant. Daniel means "God is my judge." The significance of this name was that all the problems of life were submitted to God for His decision. This was the secret of Daniel's successful life.

(3) Their religious life (v. 8).

This involved their refusal to eat meat and to drink wine. In the case of Daniel at least, it also involved his praying three times a day. Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with this food and drink.

2. Their courtesy (vv. 8-13).

Daniel seems to have been the spokesman for the company. Although his heart was fixed, he did not forget to be a gentleman. He requested that he be excused from this meat and drink in order not to be defiled.

3. Their triumph (vv. 14-21).

(1) Their physical health (vv. 14-16).

A test was made for ten days which showed that they were fairer in countenance and fatter in flesh than those who indulged in the king's meat.

(2) Their mental growth (vv. 17-20).

Daniel and his companions were found to be ten times better than their comrades in wisdom and understanding.

(3) Social and political preferment (v. 19). They stood before the king.

(4) Their temporal influence (v. 21). All were advanced to positions of influence, and Daniel became president of the college of wise men, and the prime minister of the nation.

II. Paul Advises the Corinthians as to Self-control (I Cor. 9:19-27).

The Corinthians were an intemperate and a dissolute people. No city in the world perhaps exceeded them in vices of all kinds. The surest and most effective way to combat vice is to inculcate virtue.

1. Paul's own life and example (vv. 19-23).

Though free from all men, he made himself servant unto all.

2. The Isthmian games (vv. 24-27).

Paul uses these popular games to illustrate the need of self-control.

(1) Life is a race (vv. 24, 25). In order to win a prize there must be self-denial and definite exertion. The Christian obtains life by contact with Jesus Christ through faith (John 3:16; 3:36; 5:24). While he gets salvation (life) at the beginning, God places before him definite rewards as incentives to exertion. The Christian believes for life, but works for rewards.

(2) It is a fight (vv. 26, 27).

The Christian's efforts are not mere beatings of the air. He has a deadly struggle with his carnal nature.

III. Paul's Advice to Timothy (I Tim. 4:7-12).

A minister needs to have control of himself. He is urged to exercise himself unto godliness. He needs to train himself for his work as a teacher and a minister.

Doing good is the only pleasure that never wears out.—Confucius.

PARTY FROCKS OF COLORFUL NET; NEW FUR-TRIMMED CLOTH COATS

TAKE the fourteenth letter of the alphabet, then the fifth, to which add the twentieth. Yes, it spells "Net." Just three little letters, but oh! what an important style message they convey in regard to what's what for evening wear. Net of every color and kind, some dotted, some plain, both fine and coarse, including fish-net mesh and other fancy varieties, such is the airy-fairy stuff of which many of the season's most charming dine and dance frocks are made.

Not only is the fact of the revival of net interesting, but most amazingly satisfied in this season's fur-trimmed cloth coats which are all that and then some.

Whether autumn and winter coat modes be considered from the standpoint of the marvelous cloakings from which they are made or the luxuriousness of the furs that trim them, or the striking originality expressed in their styling, they out-record all previous records in every count.

Cloth coats have departed utterly from the beaten path. All along the line accent is being placed on silhouettes which are "different," on ing are the quaint colors which the smart set are choosing to wear. Net frocks in bottle green (sounds almost like a style note borrowed from Godey's Ladies' Book); maroon, too, if you please; also in various browns and dark blues are quite the newest thing. Nor should the importance of the all-black net frock be forgotten. Indeed, Paris especially smiles upon these black net frocks.

The gown in the picture is a lovely net and satin confection. It's just this way, fashion favors the dainty, ruffly type of woman this season, which accounts for the many soft flounces which grace this model. Most every dress for evening has as its basic theme princess-fitted lines, just such as are here pictured. It is a rule, too, with the mode, when adding ruffles, peplums, draperies and tiers to do it so as not to destroy slenderness, rather should it be accented, to stress the tall willowy very feminine figures. Most forgot to call attention to the fact that the dress illustrated is in exquisite pale pink. All pinkish tints are thought well of for evening wear.

Just a word about the satin vogue, which is stressed both in evening and daytime costuming. Ever so many gowns adopt satin for their fitted bodices, as pictured, and for the foundation under the net.

Considerable emphasis is also placed on the evening gown all of glistening soft satin in delectable colors prominent among which is the beloved eggshell tint. Another favorite color for satin is sage green.

The woman who craves novelty and luxury combined will find her materials whose weaves and patternings bespeak novelty every step of the way and whose fur treatments intrigue with their unusualness.

The model pictured below is only one among a wilderness of answers to the query "what's new" in cloth coats. The patterning of the cloth is eminently modernistic, mingling beige, white and bright copper in its color scheme.

Considerable interest is attached to the decorative fur trimming which so distinguishes this model, the curly astrakhan being dyed to take on an autumn brown to harmonize with the highlights in the cloth design.

Coat lengths is a theme of absorbing interest this season. To-the-bottom-of-the-dress lengths are giving way to seven-eighth, three-quarters and even shorter coats. Indeed some of the new models almost suggest long jackets rather than short coats.

The most interesting of all is the subject of coat sleeves, although collars also reflect the trend to extreme novelty. Designers are centering their inventive genius on sleeves, making for the avenue of expression. One may expect anything in the way of eccentric sleeves in the new coats.

There is a marked tendency in the fashioning of the newer coats to adopt a half-in-half sleeve, the upper portion being of the cloth, all sorts of fur developments taking place at and below the elbow. The smoother thin furs assume balloon effects, or they widen at the wrist into flowing bell sleeves.

A groan of disappointment and impatience rose from the parched throats of the men. The passage of old Plante and his sheep had exasperated their nerves. A moment ago they had felt chilled and cramped; now their blood was up, their bodies were in a sweat with the violence of their disappointment. Already Plante and his sheep were far away. That silence, so full of sounds had once more descended upon the forest. Again the men waited with eyes and ears strained, their nerves atingle, their breathing hard and sterorous. And there fell upon their straining ears the sound of human life coming from the direction of Mezieres. This time it was the sound of cartwheels creaking through the mud, and of ill-adjusted harness jingling with the movement of wearily plodding horses. There was also from time to time the sound of distant voices, a harsh call or uproarious laugh suddenly stilled as if in response to a peremptory warning. Nothing in truth to suggest the furtive methods of the English adventurers; it seemed more like a party of farmers coming home from market.

The troopers were on the alert, of course, but not quite so keenly perhaps as they were before their disappointment over citizen Plante's passage across the scene. But a minute or two later a quick word from their captain brought them sharply up to attention. The cart had obviously come to a halt, but a lusty shout now rang through the stillness of the night, and there was a general sound of scampering and of running, mingled with calls of excitement and encouragement. A few minutes of tense expectation, then suddenly round the bend a band of ten or a dozen men came into view, armed with miscellaneous weapons. At sight of the diligence they gave a wild shout of triumph, brandished their weapons and rushed to the attack.

"Attention, citizen soldiers!" Raffet commanded hastily. "Do not shoot unless you are obliged. But if you must, shoot low. We must have some of those English spies alive if we can."

Hardly were the words out of his mouth than, with a renewed shout of triumph, the band of young ruffians threw themselves like a pack of enraged puppies on the soldiers, while others made straight for the diligence. But before they had got within twenty meters of it the captain gave the quick word of command that brought the men of the gendarmerie out of the coach, pistols in hand, ready for the fight.

The attacking party, however, held no laggards either. Egged on by the drover from Aincourt and still shouting wildly, they rushed on the men of the gendarmerie as they scrambled out of the coach. Numbers being about equal on either side, the men coming out one by one were at a great disadvantage. Almost as soon as they had set foot to the ground they were fallen on with fist or sabre, and soon the confusion was complete.

"What the devil's game is this?" Raffet shouted hoarsely, for in an instant he had found himself at grips, not with the mysterious Scarlet Pimpernel, but with Gaspard, the son of the butcher of Moisson, whom he had known ever since they had been ragamuffins together. And Gaspard was as strong as some of the bullocks his father was wont to kill. Before Raffet could recover from the surprise of this wholly unexpected turn of events Gaspard had brought his heavy fist crashing down on his whilom friend's skull.

"It means," Gaspard shouted, mad with fury, "that thou'rt a traitor and that I'll teach thee to help cheat thy friends!"

Nor could Raffet argue after that. He had need of all his faculties to defend himself against this young ox. He had drawn his pistol, true, but Gaspard's ironlike hand had closed around his wrist and the fight soon degenerated into fisticuffs. The troopers fared no better, either. Though they had been prepared for an attack, they were not prepared for this furious onslaught made upon them by their friends. Name of a dog! What did it all mean? For they were all friends, these madmen, every one of them; young men from Moisson and Lanoy and Mantes. There was Francois, the mercer of the Rue Grande, and Jacques, whose father kept the tavern at the sign of the Black Swan, and Paul, whose mother was the best washerwoman in Mantes. And words flew round to the accompaniment of thumping blows.

"Jacques, art thou mad or drunk?"

"Achille! Thy father will beat thee for this escapade!"

"Name of a name, but you'll all get something for this night's work."

And all the while blows were raining fast and furious. There was no lust to kill, only wild enthusiasm for a fight, a desire to be avenged on friends who had aided that rascal Lauzet to cheat the men of the district out of the golden prize.

"Give up the English spies or I'll squeeze the breath out of thy throat!" This from Gaspard's the butcher's son, who had felled his friend Raffet to the ground and rolled over and over in the mud with him, the two men snarling at one another and biting and scratching like a couple of angry dogs.

Had they all gone mad, these men of Moisson? The issue of the struggle might have remained longer in the balance had not Raffet just then freed his right hand from the iron grip of Gaspard and discharged his pistol into his whilom comrade's leg. Gaspard rolled over onto his back with a groan and a curse.

"Traitor! Thou has murdered me!" he cried, while the blood flowed freely out of his thigh.

But the one pistol shot had the effect of sobering the combatants. The aggressors had pistols, too, and sabers, but in their excitement had forgotten how to use them. The sudden report, however, brought the soldiers to a sense of discipline; wakened them, as it were, from their surprise, and in a moment gave them a decided advantage over the undisciplined attacking party. This wild fisticuffs could not go on. It was unworthy of the soldiers of the republic. They were being attacked by a band of irresponsible young jackanapes, whom the devil himself must for the nonce have deprived of reason, but it remained for the picked men of the rural gendarmerie to teach them that such madness could not remain unpunished, and, friend or foe, he who attacks a soldier of the republic must suffer for his wantonness. Far be it from the chronicler of these events to pretend that all these thoughts did surge clearly in the heads of the troopers. What is a fact is that from the moment their captain discharged a pistol into Gaspard's thigh they became masters of the situation. The fight between soldiers and civilians assumed its just proportions; there were a few pistol shots, some sabre thrusts, a good deal of groaning and cursing, while more than one stalwart besides Gaspard rolled over in the mud.

The fight had lasted less than ten minutes. When the first rush on the diligence was made the twilight was already fading into dusk. Now, when the last shot had been fired and the last of the hotheads had cried for mercy, dusk was slowly yielding to the darkness of the night. Raffet called the soldiers to attention. They were still panting with excitement, some of them were dizzy from blows dealt freely on their skulls; one or two showed a bunged eye or a bleeding lip, but none of them was seriously hurt. The hotheads from Moisson and Mantes had not fared quite so well. Some of them had received a charge of shot in leg, arm or shoulder and were lying groaning or half unconscious on the ground; those who had escaped with minor hurts were on their knees, held down by the heavy hand of a trooper. They did not in truth present an edifying spectacle, with their faces streaming with blood and perspiration, their clothes torn, their shirtsleeves hanging in rags, their hair wet and lank hanging before their eyes. Raffet ordered them to be mustered up, his sharp glance ran over them as they stood or crouched together in a line.

"I ought to have the lot of you summarily shot," Raffet said sternly to them after he had inspected his men and seen that victory had not cost them dear. "Yes, shot!" he reiterated, "for interfering with these soldiers of the republic in the exercise of their duty; and I will do it, too," he went on after a moment's pause, "unless you tell me now the meaning of this abominable escapade."

"You know it well, Citizen Raffet!" Paul, the washerwoman's son, said, still breathless with excitement and with a savage oath, "when you joined hands with that traitor Lauzet to cheat us all of what was our due."

"Joined hands with Lauzet? What the devil do you mean?" Raffet queried, frowning. "In what did I join hands with Lauzet?"

"In capturing the English spy and getting the reward for yourselves when it rightly belonged to us."

"The reward," Raffet retorted dryly, "will be for whosuever may be lucky to get the English spy. For the moment I imagine that if he meant to attack us tonight your folly has scared him. The noise you made would keep any brigand out of the way."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Two-Thirds Majority Doesn't Mean That

A "two-thirds majority" is merely a popular way of saying that a candidate received two-thirds of all the votes cast in an election. Suppose, for instance, 3,000 votes are cast, and one candidate receives 1,000 and the other 2,000. The latter receives a two-thirds majority; namely, two-thirds of all the votes cast. In this case the actual majority over the other candidate is only one-third of all the votes, and literally "two-thirds majority" should mean that the difference between the two figures is two-thirds of the total number of votes. For instance, if one candidate had received 500 and the other 2,500, the difference—2,000—would equal two-thirds of the total. But the term is generally used to express the idea of two-thirds of all the votes regardless of the number received by other candidates.—The Pathfinder.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

Smiling a Human Trait

MOST of us have about 310 muscles on each side of our body. They are subject to such variation that Testut, a noted French anatomist, required 900 pages to describe them.

One-fourth of all our muscles are in our neck and face. The human face can light up or cloud over because its muscles are attuned for complex action—keyed to the human pitch.

Facial muscles in mammals below man are more simple. We look for intelligence in the eyes of a horse, not in the expression of its face. When it needs to flick a fly from its face or shoulder, it moves a muscle buried in the skin. Such a muscle covers many animals like a blanket.

We all have bits of this skin muscle—some of us more, some less, even on the chest and back. Usually we cannot twitch it; we send a hand after the fly. We have traces of it in our scalp; a few have enough to move the whole scalp. Most of us can wrinkle our forehead—and do, when perplexed. Apes use this muscle both in pleasure and to frighten enemies. We all have vestiges of the muscles dogs use to pull, push, and lift their ears; some can even wriggle them.

So, while the skin muscle of our face and shoulders tends to disappear, the deeper facial muscles show progressive variation. They are among our most recent acquisitions. We retain the muscle by which the dog shows its canine tooth; we can all snarl. But the muscle by which we smile is not so regularly present; the man of gloom may have no risorius.

Variations in muscles about the nose and mouth, necessary for speech, are usually forward-looking; they give the "speaking likeness" to man. Often they reveal what the mind is trying to hide. Only as we grow in experience can we make our face a mask to belie our emotions. This is because the face is primarily under the control of the autonomic nerves; they act of their own sweet will and are by nature honest. But by and by our brain learns to get control of them; we force our face to wear a smile when our heart would bid our eyes to weep.

Our arms are free; they have not forgotten that they were once legs. Of 36 bodies examined, 292 variations were found in the arm muscles; 119 in the leg. Our immediate ancestors were four-handed, we are two-footed. But when baby gets on the floor, it pulls with its fore and pushes with its hind limbs; just as we once crawled up out of water on to dry land.

Palmists rarely read the pad at the outer edge of our palm—or know that we have one like it on the sole of our foot; both protect deep-lying muscles from injury in walking. The palm pad has its own palmar muscle in one man out of every ten. It helped to work the pads which protected the muscles and tendons beneath. Today, it is as atavistic as the pad itself; we gave up walking on our hands about 2,000,000 years ago. As for "lines" of fate and marriage, and the "girdle of Venus," they can all be "read" in the hands and feet of monkeys, and to a certain extent in a baby's foot, or in the fetal hands and feet. Palmistry is as dead as phrenology. Anyone who can read "character" or "mental capacity" from head bumps or palm lines is a wizard.

What does it all mean, this astounding range of variation, on which I have barely touched? There they are, by the thousands, by unnumbered thousands. Shall we say that they lie, that our levator coccygis never lifted a tail, that our curvator coccygis never curved one, and that our attollens auriculam never lifted an ear? Or shall we say that we are walking museums of comparative anatomy and try to find out whence we came and whither we are going? This is certain: there is no fixed, standardized, perfect, or biologically ideal human body—there are no two human bodies quite alike. Each one of us reeks with evidence that our ancestors were not the two-handed, two-footed creatures we are now; that they had no talking muscles; that they could not back up their talk with a speaking countenance; and that they could not balance their heads on their spines.

Some variations are atavistic or vestigial. Like the buttons on our coat cuffs, they no longer function; like parlor boarders, they often make trouble. They are hangovers from a remote past. They are prone to disease; we should be better off without them. Some are retrogressive, weak sisters of our body, functioning in a half-hearted way; we could do without them—many of us do. Some are progressive, a little bit more than human; they point to further change in man's physical structure.

Taken together, they bridge every gap and make a complete story. They prove that, while our eyes look forward, our body has not forgotten its humble origin—and carries some dead wood we were well rid of, such as appendix, tail, snarling muscle. Our proneness to hernia and prolapse of the uterus is only one of the many proofs that our body is not yet perfectly adapted to an upright gait.

Well Equipped

The small daughter of a motor car tire salesman was playing on the lawn of their home when her attention was attracted, for the first time, by triplets. She ran excitedly into the house crying, "Mother, mother, I've just seen twins and a spare."

CAP AND BELLS

WAKING UP

"So you were caught red-handed counterfeiting $10 bills?" said the police magistrate. "What have you to say for yourself?"

"I am not a malicious counterfeiter and I should never have been arrested," replied the suspect. "I am a chemist whose interest is entirely scientific. I have been trying to make gold from less precious elements and I have only got as far as $10 bills."

In a shoe store at Memphis the boss saw a clerk throw a pair of brand new shoes in the waste basket.

"What's the idea of throwing those shoes away?" he asked, indignantly.

"They hane no gude," replied the clerk. "I try them on six fellows and they don't fit anyone."

Ring Stolen by Magpie

A ring lost five years ago was recently found securely imbedded in a magpie's nest at Great Falls, Mont. Roy Jonnson lost the ring in 1921 while feeding cattle on a ranch twelve miles south of Belt. The ring was found by Norman Johnson, ten, when the boy tore down a magpie's nest, built in the willow roof of an old cow shed. Twigs and grass were so closely woven around and through the ring that the lad had difficulty extricating the shining piece of gold.

Vacuum Cleaner Did Work

Not long ago Glen Edgerly of Hallowell, Maine, built a small porch over his front door and immediately a family of hornets made their home under the roof between the shingles and the ceiling. He couldn't burn them, so he borrowed his wife's vacuum cleaner and sucked them out, every one.

Health worth more than fortune

THE baby to be envied is the one who is born with an inheritance of perfect health, to begin with. And who's lucky enough to have a mother who knows how to build up this fortune.

"Perhaps I'm old-fashioned," she'll say to the doctor who pronounces her child physically 100% at a baby show, "but this health certificate means more to me than all the stock certificates in the world. If my baby grows up strong and well, I'm willing to leave it to him to make a career and fortune for himself.

"Already I'm teaching him the value of regular habits. Regular sleep, regular meals, regular functions. He's never once been off schedule, not even when he was cutting teeth or traveling to the country. I make sure of that by giving him Nujol regularly."

Nujol works so easily and naturally that it won't upset a baby under any conditions. It keeps everything functioning properly. It not only prevents any excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming but aids in their removal. It is safe and sure. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York.

Heir to millions

Just try Nujol for your baby. Give it to him regularly for the next three months. See if it doesn't make things much easier for both of you. Certainly it could do no harm — for Nujol contains no drugs or medicine. Your druggist carries it. Be sure you get the genuine. Sold only in sealed packages.

COURT ACTS QUICKLY WITH BANDITS

The bandits fled south from Spencerville towards Harlan. They were sighted near Cuba, west of Harlan.

Erick and Walter Tyndall continued the pursuit and were closing in on the bandits when the right rear tire blew out on the bandits' car and they were forced to run for the field.

Shortly after the bandits fled from their car and took shelter in a nearby corn field, at the arrival of officials and vigilantes they surrounded the field and began to close in, when one of the bandit trio emerged from his hiding place and surrendered. The other two men were hiding in corn shocks and soon were routed out and captured.

The car abandoned by the bandits was taken back to a garage at Spencerville. The car carried Michigan license tags numbered 316-173.

Reward of $1,000 To Be Distributed

It was decided at the meeting that the designation of the reward be placed in the hands of the bankers association protective committee, composed of E. P. Lombard of Auburn, chairman, Monte L. Green of Garett and Mr. Fisher of Butler. The committee will make an investigation and decide who shall receive the reward.

BAILEY STORE CLOSED TUESDAY

The grocery store that has been operated in St. Joe for so many years by Mr. and Mrs. Champ Bailey, and since his death, by Mrs. Bailey, closed Tuesday morning, having disposed of the remaining stock.

Since the death of Mr. Bailey, the store suffered a fire loss amounting to considerable. The repair was soon made and Mrs. Bailey continued business until this week.

Her health is not the best, making it necessary for her to close out and quit business. She expects to be among her children.

Mrs. Bailey has been a very fine citizen and St. Joe will indeed miss her when she is away.

31 CENTS A MEAL SPENT BY STUDENTS AT PURDUE

Statistics prepared at Purdue by Miss Mary Kleckner, a member of the junior class of Purdue University and feature writer for the Purdue Exponent, indicate that money spent by students on food in West Lafayette varies from 20 to 37 cents, making an average of 31 cents per meal. These figures are based only on the food bought at meal times and not that bought "between classes."

Miss Kleckner states that students who are members of fraternities are taxed only an average of 29 cents for their meals, and that those who patronize commercial "eating houses" pay an average of 31 cents.

Although fraternity men eat at 29 cents, it costs coeds in sororities 33 cents.

MORE PAVED ROADS IN THIS SECTION

Contracts for paving 17 miles of state roads were granted late Monday by John J. Brown, director of the state highway commission, as follows: U. S. highway 27, from Fort Wayne to the DeKalb county line, 11.1 miles in Allen county to Roger Daoust of Defiance, O., at a contract price of $184,702.24. The engineer's estimate was $227,856-28. State road 16 from Decatur east to the Ohio state line, 5.9 miles in Adams county, to Roger Daoust of Defiance, O., at contract price of $108,315.18. The engineer's estimate was $136,785.51.

RETURNS TO THE SHRINE AUDITORIUM

"Rio Rita" is coming back to the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, for one performance on Wednesday night, October 9. As this attraction played at the Shrine last week, the following from Saturday's Fort Wayne News-Sentinel is of interest:

"Through the versatile dancing and comedy-making of Miss Ellen Eckler, George Wintz's "Rio Rita" was made an exceptional show Friday night, at the Shrine Auditorium. Fort Wayne theatregoers who missed the pleasure of viewing tthe musical comedy of the Rio Grande, Friday night, will be pleased to hear of its return engagement Wednesday night, October 9."

And to return to Miss Eckler, who steals the show from everybody else, you won't dare miss seeing her. Her equal in dancing and comedy can only be found in Broadway successes.

"Rio Rita" nearer an operetta than a musical comedy, is a good show.

One could have listened to an entire evening's entertainment by the Texas Rangers, a male chorus almost as good as that in "The Desert Song," altho' they were not on the stage long enough to prove such a statement.

The scenes were at most times romantically laid along the Rio Grande with the proper amount of Mexicans furnishing background. At times, the scenes and costumes approached the ultra spectacular. The lyrics need no introduction, for "Rio Rita," and "I Can't Speak Espagnol," have been popular for the past two or three years.

Miss Marybeth Connolly, as Rio Rita, played the part well with a figure more than passing fair, a Spanish type of beauty despite her real name and a fair singing voice. But little Miss Eckler stepped in and ran off with the show. She could sing she could dance soft toe and taps, come out in the following scene in a different costume, go thru with some of the most clever contortions that this reviewer has ever seen, return in the following scene in an entirely different role, and put out some real comedy. Mort than that, she did all with apparently no trace of weariness and plenty of the old time pep.

All in all, the show is indeed well worth seeing, and some who lean to the romantic string music will find Romero's Mexican Troubadours (Genuine Mexicans, too,) refreshing. See the show when it returns, October 9, and above all, see the little queen of versatility, Miss Eckler.

CORN AND WEINER ROAST ENJOYED

The Ladies Literary Club very pleasantly entertained their husbands and friends at a social meeting, held in Erick's Grove on last Wednesday evening.

The committee in charge of the arrangements were Golden High, Lora Leighty, Belle Woodcox, Cora Curie, Grace Dilley, Avis Staman, Winifred Shook and Helen Ditmars. Mrs. High acted as chairman.

At 7:00 o'clock all gathered around the camp fire and enjoyed buns and weiners, roasting ears, marshmallows, pickles and hot coffee, after which games were played and songs were sang.

SCHOOL CHUMS MEET FOR BIG DINNER

Mrs. Dora Sailer goes to Fort Wayne, Thursday, to be a guest in the home of Mrs. Hattie Blakely, a school chum of 35 years ago. The day will afford the pleasure of recalling incidents of their school days.

A card from Rev. J. F. McKnight and family states that they arrived at their destination safely and their address is Commodore, Pa.

Racing down the rails at 70 miles an hour, the cylinder head on the Advance Twentieth Century limited on the New York Central blew out a mile east of Kendallville at Sherman's crossing, seriously injuring three men on a passing motor section car, Monday. Pieces of brass and steel were hurled through the air like shrapnel when the cylinder head burst with a tremendous explosion, raining metal on the section hands.

Possibly the largest attendance in the history of the local P. T. A. was had last Tuesday evening, when parents from five townships were present, namely: Stafford, Newville, Wilmington, Spencer and Concord. The program as printed was carried out in good style and the primary children furnished entertainment that was pleasing to all. Short talks were made by Roy Maxwell, principal; O. K. Shull, trustee and Miss Gant, English teacher. County Superintendent Stallman made an address on "Our Problem." An effort will be made to get the membership by the next meeting.

The matter of a county agent for Allen County is still unsettled and A. Z. Arehart, former DeKalb County agent, is likely to get the job. Six applicants have been filed and withdrawn from the board, and now Purdue has been asked to recommend Mr. Arehart, and if so, next Saturday will decide who is who.

Fred Thornton was in Fostoria, Saturday.

Nelson Tustison, 80, and Chas. Tustison, 70, brothers, enjoyed a good social time and pot luck dinner, that had been planned for them, at the Frank Tustison home on last Sunday. Besides all the nieces and nephews being present, there were: Lee O. Tustison and family, of Defiance, George Wilson, wife and daughters of Moores, Earn Johnson, George Simanton and John Ulm and their wives, W. L. Hamilton and family and D. D. Burley.

The paving from the DeKalb County line to Fort Wayne on the Tonkel road has been opened to traffic. Work of constructing the berms was in progress Sunday and will be completed this week. A gravel surfacing of 700 feet has been placed over a sink hole on the road one and a half mile south from the county line. An attempt was made to fill it in but the dirt only raised up the muck at the sides of the highway. For this reason the pavement was not laid over the sink hole.

ADALINE

Owned by Henry Keeslor, Danville, Ill. Illinois State Fair Champion Club Heifer Will Show at the National

(By J. L. Kennard, Special Correspondent)

Left to right you see Earl Payton, Club Leader, Bismarck, Ill: J. C. Murphy, Club Leader, Georgetown, Ill.: Jerry Spencer, Sugar Creek Extension Sevice who selected the prize winning heifer for Henry.

I've sang "Sweet Adeline" a few times but this is the first time I ever appreciated meeting the real ADELINE, in person, and I'll say she is sweet and going to be hard to beat at the National.

Her proud owner, Henry, is not a bad looking sort of a fellow— and say, if that boy wins at the National he will be the proudest chap in forty-eight states and it won't be long until Henry will be wearing long pants and entering the big show along side of the big show men like H. C. Horneman, Harvey Firestone and J. C. Penny.

While Henry in this story is a real boy, yet he is just an example. The Club Leaders in the picture are just an example. Kentucky has her Club Leaders and her Henrys – Indiana and Missouri have them and the splendid club work conducted during the past few years has done much to bring more and better dairying to the farms of the middle-west and to bring contentment and happiness to the boys and girls on the farm.

A great reception awaits the Club members upon their arrival in St. Louis. Special tours of interest including a trip to the famous St. Louis Zoo by the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, also a big banquet given by the Purina Mills on Monday night, October 14th. BOYS and GIRLS—don't you just envy Henry Keeslor a little? Well as I see it now, let's begin to think of next year and take Henry's place.

FORT WAYNE TEAM WANTS GAMES IN THIS TERRITORY

The Journal-Gazette have organized an independent basket ball team for this coming season and would like to schedule games with fast, highly touted independent teams in this territory. All games to be played on opponents floor. Teams interested in booking the Journal-Gazette quintet are requested to write James J. Wagner, Journal-Gazette Co., Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

The Journal team is composed of all former high school and independent stars and can furnish any team strong opposition. Last season they chalked up 22 wins out of 26 games played, and they are out to better this record this year.

The people who get to work later in the morning, are apt to make up for it by quitting earlier in the afternoon.

ATTEND GOLDEN WEDDING OF FORMER PASTOR

Fred and Clyde Hart, accompanied by their wives, represented the Coburn's Corners Church at a Golden Wedding celebration at Saturn Church, located twelve miles west of Fort Wayne, in honor of Rev. A. M. Gillespie and wife, of last Sunday.

Some eighteen years ago, this same pastor had charge of Coburn's Corners congregation, serving for two years. The aged couple were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts and a very fitting program, both afternoon and evening, was held in their honor, at which time many high tributes were paid the reverend gentleman for his services rendered to the community in which he has lived for so many years. At the afternoon luncheon, 98 guests were present in addition to the home folks.

PALESTINE CUSTOMS

© The National Geographic Society

Courtyard of an Inn, Jerusalem.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

MORE is known in general of Palestine, perhaps, than of any other Eastern country, because of the wide reading of the Bible. Few, however, realize that the manners and customs which prevailed there in Biblical days are still in large part unchanged even after an interval of 3,000 years. In addition to the native and immigrant Jews and the relatively few Christians, the land today is inhabited by three distinct classes of Arabs, the Bedouins, or nomads, a wandering, war-loving race; the Fellaheen, who are the agriculturists, shepherds, and village dwellers; and the Medaniyeh, who live in the towns and cities and are artisans.

With the advent of civilization the townspeople are fast losing their ancient customs and quaint costumes, but the villagers adhere to both far more tenaciously.

The present-day villages are located, as a rule, either on the tops of hills, originally for protection, or near some spring or source of water. Many are built upon the foundations of dwellings whose origin dates back thousands of years. There does not exist a single example of a peasant village that has been founded in modern times. This does not apply, of course, to the small Jewish towns.

With almost every village or district there are, to a greater or lesser extent, variations in the dialect of the Arabs, their style of dress, and the homes they live in.

On the Plain of Sharon, where stone is rare or non-existent, the houses are made of sun-dried brick, the roofs thatched and covered with clay to shed the rain, while in the mountains they are built of stone, since of that material there is an inexhaustible supply.

Many have pictured in their minds Mary and Joseph, after arriving at the "inn" at Bethlehem and finding no room, being forced to turn into some barn built of timber, with lofty roof, hay mows, wooden mangers, and stalls for cattle and sheep. Such a stable has been the subject of many medieval and modern artists, but it does not present a really true picture. Let us consider the old-style village home that is most common in the districts around Jerusalem and Bethlehem, for that will give us a better idea of what happened on that first Christmas day.

In An Old Village.

The village streets are crooked, narrow, and unpaved. As in many of the countries of the Orient, farmers live close together for protection, and not on their lands; therefore in the villages there are no open fields or gardens, but house is next to house, except for the small walled-in inclosures or sheepfolds through which one generally passes when going into the dwelling.

The house itself consists of one large room, usually square. The walls, from three to four feet thick, are built of blocks of stone roughly dressed and laid in mortar, roofed over with a dome, also of stone. The outside of this roof is covered with a coating of mortar made of clay, which, on being pressed with a small stone roller or pounded with a board, becomes hard and compact enough to shed the rain.

A steep outside staircase, unprotected by any railing, is built up to the roof, for the surface must be repaired at times. The flat, open space of the roof also forms a handy place on which to dry figs and raisins, and during the hot weather the family may sleep there at night.

Entering the door we find that about two-thirds of the space is devoted to a raised masonry platform, some eight or ten feet above the ground, and supported by low-domed arches. This raised space, called el mastaby, is the part occupied by the family, while the lower part is used for the cattle and flocks. A few narrow stone steps lead up to the mastaby, and a couple of small windows pierce the wall, high up from the ground. On one side is an open fireplace, with a chimney running through the wall and terminating on the roof often in an old water jar whose bottom has been knocked out, and so becomes a sort of smokestack. The furniture is very simple.

Having inspected the dwelling portion, which at once is kitchen, storeroom, bedroom, and living room, let us descend the steps into what the natives call the stable.

What the Stable Is Like.

Below the mastaby, or raised platform, just described, among arches so low that a man can scarcely walk erect, are the winter quarters of the goats and sheep. To shut the flocks in, these arched entrances are obstructed with bundles of brush used as firewood for the winter. The rest of the floor space, which is open to the ceiling, is devoted to the few work cattle and perhaps a donkey or camel. Around the walls are primitive mangers for the cattle, built of rough slabs of stone placed on edge and plastered up with mortar.

Often the owner makes a small raised place on which he sleeps at night to enable him to keep better watch over the newly born lambs, lest in the crowded quarters some get crushed or trodden down by the older ones. Here he often sleeps by preference on a cold night, for he says the breath of the animals keeps him warm.

One cannot become even tolerably acquainted with Palestine without perceiving that it is the land that has preserved the ancient customs. Its present-day inhabitants, most of whom have nothing in common with the modern Jews who crowd Jerusalem, are still perpetuating the life of Abraham and the customs and ways of the people who lived here at the time of Christ.

To have learned the hospitality of its people, which is always offered, no matter how primitive or simple, makes it easy to picture Mary and Joseph returning from the inn, already filled with guests, and turning aside into a home such as we have described, the regular dwelling portion of which may have been none too large for the family which occupied it. It may have been crowded with other guests, but they find a welcome and a resting place for the babe in a manger.

Such a use of the rowyeh, or stable portion of the house, by human beings is not the exception, but an every-day occurrence. You can occasionally find men working their primitive looms there or the mother preparing the food or doing her little sewing near the door, where there is more light on a dark winter's day.

Costumes of the Women.

The costumes of the women differ sufficiently in each district to enable one to distinguish readily where the wearer comes from. From the variations of the headgear one can tell whether a woman be single or married; but, although differing from one another in the details, the costumes have much in common.

The dress, called a tobe, is like a long loose shirt, the sleeves narrow at the shoulders and widening out something like the Japanese pattern. The front and back are made each of one width of cloth, with a gore on each side to widen the skirt. A girdle either of white linen or bright striped silk is wound around the waist and the tobe is pulled up a little to produce a full bosom. This tobe, when for common use, is dark-blue cloth, the bosom is covered with cross-stitch embroidery and perhaps a little on the sleeves and skirt.

The shoes are crude affairs, the tops being of bright red or sometimes yellow sheepskin, with soles of raw cow, camel, or buffalo hide.

The headgear is of two parts: first, what we shall for convenience sake call a cap, and over it a veil. The Bethlehem women wear a high cap, in shape something like a man's fez, called shatweh, on the front of which are sewn rows of gold and silver coins.

The Bethlehem women have the reputation of being handsome. Their faces are a full oval, their complexion fairer than the ordinary fellaheen, often having very red cheeks, and attractive in the setting of their striking headgear. Their Nazareth sisters have gained a little less renown. Both are Christians and supposed to have a considerable strain of Crusader blood in their veins.

TWO-PIECE DRESS FOR SCHOOL WEAR

Practical Garment of Green and Tan Cotton Poplin.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

She's ready for the first days of kindergarten or school, in this practical little two-piece dress of green and tan cotton poplin. Whether she is four or fourteen, she can wear a school dress of this type, although her twin brother, who has a similar outfit, with straight trousers instead of the plaited skirt, will probably wear "store" made waists after he is six. The waist or top part of the dress is plain and tailored, easy to make, to launder, and put on. It is cut with the kimono sleeve without any seam on the shoulder. Therefore, before the under-arm seams are sewn up the top can be laid flat on a table and the trimming piece fitted to it, basted, and stitched in place.

The skirt of green poplin, matching the trimming, is on a thin white underwaist so that it hangs from the shoulders. Mother put an inch-wide tuck in this waist, so that the skirt can be let down as the little girl grows. The tuck is stitched twice, half an inch apart, with a long loose stitch. When the first row of stitching is taken out the skirt drops an inch, and it will be possible to lengthen it as much more at another time. An equal growth allowance should be made in the hem of the blouse, either by means of a broad hem, or a generous piece turned inside the hem.

Large round buttons, fastened by crocheted or cord loops form the front closing. They can be easily found and managed by the little girl herself. Provision for self-help is always an important feature of garments designed for children, as this one was, by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture. The bureau has no patterns to distribute, but any mother could easily adapt a kimono type pattern to fit her child. Any preferred combination of cotton materials might be used, for example, plain broadcloth for the skirt and trimmings, and printed zephyr for the blouse. Bloomers or panties matching the darker material should be made.

GREEN TOMATOES CAN BE UTILIZED

Many of Them Can Be Used to Make Sweet Pickles.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When the late tomatoes fail to ripen sufficiently, they may still be cooked or made into pickles. They are very good in pie, either cooked and thickened or made into mock mincemeat. Many of them can be used to make relish or put into brine for later use in sweet pickles. The two recipes below are from the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Green Tomato Pie.

4 or 5 medium-sized green tomatoes
½ lemon sliced very thin
¼ tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. salt
1½ tsp. cornstarch
⅔ cup sugar
1 tbs. butter

Slice the tomatoes. Heat slowly in a saucepan with the sugar, lemon, salt, and spice, until the tomatoes are tender. Add a little water if the tomatoes are not juicy. Melt the butter and combine with the cornstarch. Add this to the tomato mixture and cook until the cornstarch does not taste raw. Line a pie tin with pastry and bake this crust in a moderately hot oven until a delicate color appears. Put the tomato filling in this baked crust; moisten the edge and press the upper crust firmly over the edge of the baked lower crust. Bake about 12 minutes in a hot oven, or until the upper crust is brown.

Green Tomato Mincemeat.

4 quarts sliced green tomatoes
2 quarts pared and sliced tart apples
½ lb. seeded raisins
½ lb. currants
4 tbs. minced citron
4 tsp. cinnamon
¼ tsp. allspice
¼ tsp. cloves
5 cups brown sugar
2 cups vinegar
2 cups water or more water and less vinegar if latter is very acid

Chop the tomatoes and the apples fine. Add the other ingredients and boil the mixture slowly until the tomatoes are tender and the mincemeat is thick and not watery. Stir it occasionally to prevent burning. If desired this may be sealed in jars for later use.

Boston Cream Pie Quite Misleading in Its Name

Misleading in its name, for it's not a pie at all, but a cake, Boston cream pie is one of the family's favorite desserts. Any standard cake recipe may be used for the foundation. The filling below is spread between the two layers and powdered sugar is sprinkled over the top of the cake. The recipe is supplied by the bureau of home economics.

1 cup sugar
2 tbs. flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 pint milk
2 eggs
2 tbs. butter
3 tbs. lemon juice
Grated rind of 1 lemon

Mix the sugar and flour thoroughly. Heat the milk in a double boiler and add the salt. Pour the heated milk into the flour and sugar mixture and cook over the flame until thickened. Place in a double boiler, and cook for 15 minutes. Add the well-beaten eggs and the butter and cook for two or three minutes longer. When the filling is cold add the lemon juice and rind and spread the filling between layers of cake. Sprinkle powdered sugar over the top of the cake and serve.

USE THERMOMETER WHEN ROASTING LAMB

Eliminating Guesswork in Roasting a Leg of Lamb.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A roast meat thermometer removes the guesswork from roasting any thick piece of meat to the desired stage of doneness. It can be used with rib or sirloin roasts of beef, veal roast, with leg of lamb, or ham. These thermometers, which can be bought for a relatively small price, are marked to indicate when the meat will be rare, medium, or well done. A small cut is first made in the deshiest portion of the raw meat with a narrow knife or a skewer. The thermometer is then thrust into this cut far enough for the bulb to reach the center of the meat. It will show when the meat is cooked to the degree wanted. Whenever a similar cut of meat is cooked in the same way, the results will be the same, hence the housewife can be sure of uniformity whether she does the cooking herself or has some one else do it for her.

The time required to roast meat of any kind depends largely on the temperature of the oven. Very high temperatures shorten the time of cooking but increase shrinkage and may make the meat overbrown and too dry. In the case of roast leg of lamb, little juice is lost and the meat is uniformly cooked at the temperature given in the recipe below from the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture. It will have a fight golden brown crust. Whatever way lamb is cooked, if it is to be served hot it should be piping hot on hot plates, because the fat hardens as soon as it begins to cool.

For an average family select a leg of lamb weighing from four to five pounds, preferably cut so as to include some of the loin. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and rub well with flour. Lay the roast skin side down and cut-flesh side up, on a rack in an open pan without water. Insert a roast meat thermometer so that the bulb reaches the center of the thick round of the leg. If the fat covering is very thin, lay several strips of bacon on top. Sear for 30 minutes in a hot oven (about 490 degrees Fahrenheit)

FARM POULTRY

FEEDING PULLETS FOR WINTER EGGS

To Be Good Producers Fowls Should Be Well Developed.

The profit or loss in winter egg production of pullets depends upon the care and feeding they receive. For pullets to be good producers during the winter months they should be uniformly developed, have good frames, and be in good flesh before they begin to lay. It is therefore necessary that they receive a good ration which will fill them out and also store up an abundance of fat, according to H. M. Wells of the Colorado Agricultural college.

Feed a good growing mash or a laying mash that is supplemented with a grain mixture of two parts by weight of corn and one part of wheat, advises Wells. A laying pullet during the winter months will draw upon her reserve supply of fat and the feed she eats will go toward the development of eggs; otherwise if she does not have this fat reserve she will utilize the feed she consumes to supply her body wants and keep her warm, and only the surplus will go toward the production of eggs.

It would be profitable, if one has the room, to grade the pullets according to size. Make two or three grades of pullets, namely, those that are coming into bloom (comb becoming red) and are laying well developed, would be put in the laying house and fed a laying mash with the grain ration recommended above. The next smaller grade of pullets should be given all the growing mash they will consume, and this should be supplemented with a moist mash at noon. This moist mash consists of the growing mash moistened with milk to a crumbly consistency. By following this method, the more backward pullets will be brought into production before extreme cold weather sets in.

To secure the maximum results in production from pullets, it is advisable to keep them housed separately from the hens.

Air Outlets Prevent Colds and Diseases

All poultry houses should have an air outlet from the highest point in the house, for without this air-vent moisture collects. The fresh air that enters the house becomes warm and rises, and as warm air holds more moisture than cold air can hold, it will cause dampness in the poultry house unless it has a chance to go out. Otherwise it condenses under the roof and drops to make the litter moist and to cause a damp hen-house, which leads to colds and other troubles for the birds and a gradual loss of vigor on their part and loss of money on the part of their owners.

These facts, and many others, on ways to house poultry at low cost are given in a Cornell bulletin, written by H. E. Botsford and sent free to poultrymen of New York. It tells how to remodel old buildings—even large disused barns—and how to construct new houses.

Plan Poultry Houses With Eye to Future

Save dissatisfaction, regrets, many useless miles of walking and finally the sale of an unhandy place, by planning over and over the proposed placing of the buildings.

Try to plan out the ranch as it will be at the end of five to ten years' development, and put the first building where it should be at the end of that time.

Every building that must be moved is a dead load of effort, time and temper.

Figure to save steps by having tasks that can be done going and coming, driveways that save using carts, wheelbarrows and man power—and locate feed room centrally.

If water must be carried, try to cut down the distance and plan on running water as a part of the progression of plant.

Use Lice Powder

Body lice on hens are best treated by some good louse powder such as sodium fluoride, Persian insect powder, and a dozen more or less, good commercial powders. The main point is to get the powder clear to the skin.

To do this, hold the hen in the left hand, head downward. Force a small handful of powder, about the equivalent of a level teaspoonful in measure, through the long, soft feathers that cover the abdomen and clear down to the skin.

Needed Minerals

The Ohio experiment station has been doing some work of late years with minerals for poultry, with a very simple mineral mixture composed of raw bone meal finely ground, 60 parts, ground limestone 20 parts containing 95 per cent calcium carbonate, sodium chloride or salt, 20 parts.

The above named experiment station concludes that these are the mineral elements that are most needed for the most profitable production of eggs and health of the hen.

Fertilizers Aid Soil Improvement

Green Manure Crop Produces Material Needed to Plow Under.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Green manuring and cover cropping, both for fertility and to protect the soil erosion in winter, are highly desirable in the South; and the practice is becoming increasingly popular in the North. Agronomists in the United States Department of Agriculture urge the method for the maintenance of good soils and for improvement of poor soils. In particular, when the soil is infertile they suggest fertilizing the field before sowing the green-manuring crop, preferably a legume.

Object of Green Manure.

Dr. A. J. Pieters, of the bureau of plant industry, says: "The object in growing a green-manure crop is to produce as much material as possible to turn under. On very poor soils it frequently happens that even the strongest feeders can make but a poor growth. Even cowpeas may fail to make good growth unless the plants are stimulated by the artificial fertilizer.

"When a legume is grown the addition of nitrogen is not usually necessary, as the legume will gather its own nitrogen, but an application of phosphorus and potash often increases the crop greatly and this enables the plant to gather more nitrogen. The phosphorus and potash that may be applied for the benefit of the green manure crops is not wasted either, as it will be available for the next crop, when the green-manure crop decays.

What Fertilizer and Amount.

"What fertilizer and how much will depend on the soil and on the crop, but generally 300 to 400 pounds of 16 per cent superphosphate and 100 pounds of muriate of potash per acre will be found to stimulate the growth of the green manure, so as to produce a larger crop than could have been grown without the fertilizer. The larger crop, if a legume, will gather more nitrogen than a smaller one could and the soil will benefit accordingly."

Smaller Diameter Silos Gaining in Popularity

One mistake many farmers made years ago was to build their silos too large in diameter, and there is today a decided tendency toward 8, 10, 12 and 14-foot silos rather than 14, 16 18 and 20-foot ones then so common. A smaller diameter and higher silo is much more flexible than a larger one and can much more easily be adjusted to change in the size of the dairy herd.

With a 16-foot silo, a dairyman who for any reason must decrease the number of dairy cows will find his silo much too large to feed out without some spoiled silage, and while possible it is hardly practicable to divide it into two parts. With a 10-foot silo, however, such a change would make no trouble, as his silage would simply last that much longer. If he wishes to enlarge his herd, it is a simple matter to build another silo to take care of the increase.

Determining Right Time to Harvest Apple Crop

The determination of the proper time to pick fall and winter apples is more difficult than is the case with summer apples. The different varieties offer different problems. Some varieties, of which Jonathan is an example, become hard ripe relatively early; others ripen later. Some suffer in keeping quality if picked too late. Other varieties keep best if left on the tree until relatively late. Jonathans tend to soften on the tree and suffer from Jonathan spot and decay after picking if left too long. It is best to harvest them as soon as they have developed good size and color. During a hot dry fall they tend to drop badly, and may start to drop before they have colored up. When apples which are uninjured by insect or disease start to drop off on their own accord, the crop must be picked to save it, regardless of size and color.

Best Indications That Tree Fruits Are Ripe

One of the best indications that tree fruits are ripe enough to pick is the change of the ground color from green to yellow. Immature fruit is leaf green. Some varieties never have any red color, but most develop more or less on them as they ripen. The green is called the ground color. The red which appears later, is called the over color. When fruit is eating ripe, the green color has become yellow. This change begins, however, before the fruit is eating ripe, and about the time it is hard ripe. In general the fruit is ready to pick when the green ground color takes on a tinge of yellow.

Weed Out All Culls

While the fall is not an especially good market time for cull cattle it is a good time from the dairyman's standpoint to weed out those cows which were marginal producers the past year. Study the dairy herd improvement association records of your herd carefully with the tester. Eliminate the boarder cow. Start the herd into the fall and winter season with a clean slate.

Use of Fertilizers Returns Dividends

Limestone Can Be Used to Increase Farmer's Profit.

That farmers can afford to apply limestone to land that is slightly acid has been shown in tests made since 1925 at the southwestern Kansas experimental fields under the direction of I. K. Landon, agronomist, of the agricultural experiment station.

His records show limestone can be used to increase profit for the farmer and that as the acidity of the land increases the profit from use of limestone increases. The tests have been made at Fort Scott, Bourbon county; Rest, Wilson county; Moran, Allen county, and Columbus, Cherokee county.

Landon's work has demonstrated that not only will limestone increase yields, but in general farmers can profit by also applying each spring about 150 pounds of acid phosphate per acre to their alfalfa fields. If animal manure is plentiful on the farm, an application of it at the time of seeding in addition to lime and phosphate will prove still more profitable.

Landon does recommend the application of manure if its use on alfalfa will keep it from row crops. On the average farm all manure is needed for row crops and the limestone-phosphate treatment gives satisfactory results.

The experiments show that: limestone paid a net profit of $3.57 per acre per year; lime-phosphate paid $9.48 per acre per year; lime-manure gave a net return or $7.67 per acre per year, and the lime-manure-phosphate treatment gave a net return of $12 per acre per year.

Picking Fancy Apples for Market Trade Only

For a fancy market, apples should be picked in baskets, care being taken at all times not to bruise the fruit or puncture the skin. The commercial apple crop is usually picked in picking bags or aprons. The apples should not be allowed to fall a long distance into the container and the picker should not let his picking bag or apron bounce from round to round of the ladder when decending. Reasonable care should be exercised in dumping the fruit into the barrels boxes, or on the packing table. Fruit should always be removed from the tree by means of a sideways twist. The practice of pulling off fruit, spur and all, is to be avoided, as it may reduce the number of spurs sufficiently to affect later crops.

Growing Strawberries Is Quite Stimulating

If the highest yielding kinds of strawberries are to be grown in your garden or under field conditions, they must have plenty of room in which to develop into strong, thrifty plants—they must have a suitable, well prepared soil in which to grow, and they must not be neglected by the grower so they will have to "rough it" among weeds and grass while the grower is out looking for exercise or a little excitement in his new car. There is just as much excitement and exercise to be had in an "up-and-coming" strawberry bed at the end of a hoe handle as there is on a golf course at the end of a golf stick or chasing that elusive little ball over the green swarth, and the results are much more lasting and enjoyable.

Agricultural Notes

Seed roots should only be set out on land free from weeds.

Commercial fertilizer is always profitably applied before alfalfa.

Sudan grass makes a fine hay crop. The fact that it resembles Johnson grass should not condemn it.

• • •

It is useless to attempt alfalfa on poor land. Poor land poorly drained is not satisfactory for alfalfa.

• • •

Weeds, along with insects, probably cause most of the vegetable losses that are experienced annually.

• • •

The first paved road in the United States was between New York and Boston in 1650. It was made of cobblestones.

• • •

Soy beans should be cut after the dew is off the leaves. As soon as the plants are wilted they should be raked into windrows.

• • •

Well-drained marsh-border soils, mucks, and well-drained and fairly well-decomposed peats are adapted to a large variety of crops.

• • •

Sweet clover should be cut for seed at the time it will give the largest amount of ripe seed. This as a rule, is when the heads are about two-thirds brown.

• • •

A cheap way to provide for a silo on the farm is to construct the simple trench silo. There is practically no cost except the labor in the construction of the earth wall trench silo.

• • •

During the past few years it has been amply demonstrated that certified seed potatoes can be depended upon to give higher yields of better quality potatoes than potatoes which will not meet certification requirements

A FAMILY DOCTOR'S LAXATIVE IS BEST

Your health is too important! You cannot afford to experiment with your delicate bowels when coated tongue, bad breath, headache, gas, nausea, feverishness, lack of appetite, no energy, etc., warn of constipation. This applies not only to grown people, but more particularly to children. That's why a family doctor's laxative is always the safe choice.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is prepared today under strict laboratory supervision from fresh laxative herbs and other pure ingredients, and exactly according to Dr. Caldwell's original prescription.

Today, millions of families rely on Dr. Caldwell's judgment in the selection of their laxative. For Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in bottles ready for use, sold in all drugstores, is now the largest selling laxative in the world!

Rare Insect Find

A hole in the sand made by the high heel of a woman walking along the water's edge near Chesapeake beach, Maryland, was the trap in which Herbert Barber, of the Smithsonian institution of Washington, found a very rare tarantula known as the "lost Atypus." This species of spider, the scientific name for which is "Atypus bicolor," is a velvety, jet-black and the legs are bright orange. Only two specimens had ever been caught by scientists previously. One of these was found a few years ago at Plummers Island, Maryland.

How True!

The worst pun of the summer was perpetrated the other day when one of a party of motorists, seeing a farmer lad mounted on a wagon full of corn shucks, remarked, "That boy surely looks husky!"

Lived Up to Rules

Philip Szutkoski, railroad employee at Eland, Wis., acted "according to Hoyle" by eating 63 raw eggs in 20 minutes to save them from spoiling when they were found cracked and broken in shipment. Szutkoski explained his act by stating that the railroad book of rules calls upon every employee to exert every influence to protect shipments handled by the carrier.

South Regaining Confidence of People

New Currency Prevails In Tampa Commercial Building Thriving As Told by Ashur Culp.

Tampa, Fla.
Sept. 25, 1929

St. Joe News,
Mr. Fred Leighty, Editor.
Dear Friend:

I enclose herewith a check of $5.00 to apply against my account. I know my subscription has expired but do not know how much I owe you. So please send me a statement of same. I certainly enjoy reading "The News" very much and do not want to miss a copy.

I was in Spencerville June 1st and 2nd of this year and intended to go over and see you. However, I was so busy visiting with my Spencerville friends, that I did not get to St. Joe at all.

I will endeavor to write a little about conditions in Florida and Tampa. Florida has been cussed and discussed so much in recent years that it is almost impossible for people to decide whether it is a paradise or just the opposite. Florida certainly has a wonderful climate. Whereas it has some disadvantages. The weather in summer is much more agreeable to me in Florida than in the Northern states. The weather here never gets so hot and sultry in summer and of course, every one agrees that the winter weather is delightful.

We have had quite a number of serious disasters since 1925. The first one was the "breaking of the Boom" or the deflation of Real Estate values. Since that we have had two disastrous storms, the Mediterranean Fruit Fly and the bank failures. The bank failures probably caused more direct suffering in Tampa than any other disaster. You will probably remember that on July 17th this year, six Tampa banks failed to open their doors for business. The largest of these banks, which was the Citizens Bank & Trust Co., had deposits of over $15,000,000.00. Unfortunately this is the bank I did all my business with, personally as well as for the Lumber Company. About twenty million dollars of Tampa's cash was tied up that day, and none of it has yet been released. A lot of people that had been wealthy all their life, awoke that morning to find themselves "broke." People started to make a "run" on every other bank that remained open in Tampa. I never saw such a panic stricken lot of human beings before in my life. Policemen were stationed in front of banks that were closed and made everyone move on. Twenty-five policemen were needed at the First National Bank, to keep people in line and order. A million dollars in new currency was rushed from Atlanta to Tampa that morning in a special aeroplane, and four million dollars followed by express. The run on the banks lasted about two days and then people gradually regained their confidence. The postal savings deepartment at the postoffice was swamped with depositors. It was rather amusing to see people withdraw their deposits from the National Banks and deposit it in postal savings. The government in turn carried it right back to the same banks.

I believe that Tampa probably has more of the new small size currency in circulation than any other city. It is very seldom you see any large size currency at all. All new currency was sent here during the bank panic. The excess amount of currency is not needed not since poeple have regained their confidence in the banks and it has all been returned in old bills.

Very little building has been done in Tampa during the past several years with the exception of some commerical buildings such as ware houses and a few factories. A large number of nationally known companies have built or are building now business places in Tampa. This shows that some of the largest and best buisness men in this country, have faith in Florida, espcially so in Tampa. Following is a list of some of the companies that have built recently, or are building now: Western Union Telegraph Co., Postal Telegraph Co., United Cigar Co., Liggett Drug Co., Firestone Tire Co., Goodrich Tire Co., Goodyear Tire Co., Silvers 5 and 10 cent Store, Kresge 5 and 10 cent Store, Sears-Roebuck & Co., United Markets, Swift & Co., and quite a number of local companies. Montgomery-Ward & C., are looking for a location at the present time. The National Bellas Hess Co. Inc. has bought a large department store here.

The tourists are already beginning to arrive, which is about a month earlier than usual. Everyone seems to think we will have a very good winter. I would certainly enjoy to see some of my Indiana friends in Tampa again this winter. We have many interesting attractions here. The South Florida Fair is held here every year about the first of February. This is supposed to rank third in size of all fairs in the United States. We have very good fishing the year round. For hunting we have quail, rabbits, wild turkey, some deer and bear. We also have raccoon, opossum, skunk, wild cat and otter in fur bearing animals.

At the present time one of the largest moving picture companies in the world are located in Tampa. This is the first big picture that was ever taken in Florida, and they all say the natural scenery here cannot be beat for their purpose. The picture is entitled "Hell's Harbor." The story is about a pearl trader on a tropical island. It is supposed to cost a million dollars to produce the picture. They have built an entire fishing village just for the picture. If you happen to be a "movie fan" you undoubtedly know some of the characters in the play. Lupe Veley is the leading lady and John Holland the leading man. Other players quite well known are Al St. John, Jean Hersholt and Gilbert Gowland. They are also using quite a lot of local talent. If you ever happen to see this picture, remember that it was taken on the same spot that I have had quite a number of fishing parties and fish fries.

Will close hoping to see you in Florida some time soon.

Very truly yours,
Ashur Culp.

Men like these are testing your car

Types of the engineers at General Motors Proving Ground who are working for you. Drawn from a photograph. They are shown examining a specially devised instrument for measuring clutch pedal pressure.

It used to be the custom for a man who wanted to buy a car to take a mechanic with him.

Today, General Motors itself employs skilled automotive engineers to make it easy for you to select your new car. These men are working for you at its Proving Ground—the 1268-acre outdoor laboratory in Michigan where every kind of car is tested.

Before any General Motors car goes into production, a fleet of advance models is constructed and sent to the Proving Ground. There these advance cars must meet every test—tests far harder than you would make. Sometimes they are rebuilt, redesigned, retested many times until they are pronounced right, and ready to be put into production.

The tests involve speed, power, endurance, braking, riding comfort, handling ease; fuel and oil economy; body strength and safety—every phase of car construction and performance.

Buying a car is easy today—because these men at the Proving Ground are working for you to assure you of value when you select a General Motors car.

Another Veteran of Civil War Dies

James Draggoo Passes Away at Auburn Hospital at Age of 87 Years

James Draggoo, one of the early settlers of DeKalb County and a veteran of the Civil war, died Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Dr. Bonnell Souder hospital in Auburn from hardening of the arteries. Mr. Draggoo was taken to the hospital a week ago after his condition had become serious.

With the exception of three years when Mr. Draggoo lived on a small farm east of Angola near Metz he had been a resident of DeKalb county and Auburn. He was born two miles north and west of St. Joe eighty-seven years ago September 14th.

At the time he was brought to the hospital, Mr. Draggoo and his wife, who was Mary Hathaway, resided on a farm five miles north of Auburn on the Auburn-Ashley road. Mr. Draggoo resided in Auburn after the death of his first wife, who was Delilah Ervin. She died in 1918. Last spring Mr. and Mrs. Draggoo moved back to DeKalb county from their farm in Steuben county, going on a small farm west of Waterloo and they have been living in their present location since May.

Mr. Draggoo enlisted in the Union army in the Civil war on Feb. 27, 1864 and was honorably discharged Jan. 18, 1866, at Baton Rouge, La.

The deceased is survived besides the widow, by the following children, Frank and Orange Draggoo and Mrs. Artus Coyle, of Auburn, Mrs. Dema Hull of Spencerville, Delbert and Lloyd Draggoo and Mrs. Hariett Johnson of Concord, Mrs. Kent Provines and Mrs. J. W. Brown residing east of Auburn, Mrs. Grant Keller of near Butler, Mrs. George Bartlett of Ft. Wayne, John L. Draggoo of Reading, Mich., and W. E. Draggoo of Morristown, N. J. The late Mrs. Milton Carper, who lived east of Auburn, was also a daughter.

A sister, Mrs. Eliza Link of Beulah, Mich., and two half sisters, Mrs. John Baker of Auburn and Mrs. John Johnson of Fort Wayne, also survive.

Mr. Draggoo was a member of the Concord M. P. Church and of DeLong Post No. 67, G. A. R. of Auburn.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 from the church at Concord with burial in the St. Joe cemetery. E. R. Kinsey was in charge.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT OF INDIANA FOR 1928

Washington, D. C., October 4, 1929—The Department of Commerce announces a summary of the financial statistics of the State of Indiana for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1928. The per capita figures for 1928 are based on an estimated population of 3,170,000. These statistics were compiled by Mrs. L. C. Johnson, for Deputy Auditor.

Expenditures

The payments for operation and maintenance of the general departments of Indiana amounted to $27,772,816, of $8.76 per capita. This includes $5,325,081, apportionments for education to the minor civil divisions of the State. In 1927 the comparative per capita for operation and maintenance of general departments was $8.33, and in 1917, $4.28. The interest on debt in 1928 amounted to $92,096 and outlays for permanent improvements to $16,422,683. The total payments, therefore, for operation and maintenance of general departments, interest and outlays were $44,287,595. Of this amount $192,572 represents payments by a State department or enterprise to another on account of services. The total include all payments for the year, whether made from current revenues or from the proceeds of bond issues.

Of the governmental costs reported above, $19,306,765 was for highways, $7,486,397 being for maintenance and $11,870,368 for construction.

Revenues

The total revenue receipts were $44,745,297, or $14.12 per capita. This was $16,880,385 more than the total payments of the year, exclusive of the payments for permanent improvements, and $457,702 more than the total payments including those for permanent improvements. Of the total revenue receipts $192,572 represents receipts from a State department or enterprise on account of services. Property and special taxes represented 30.2 per cent of the total revenue for 1928, 34.7 per cent for 1927, and 61.1 per cent for 1917. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected was 68.6 per cent from 1917 to 1927, but there was a decrease of 9.8 per cent from 1927 to 1928. The per capita property and special taxes were $4.26 in 1928, $4.76 in 1927, and $3.10 in 1917.

Earnings of general departments, or compensation for services rendered by State officials, represented 10.4 per cent of the total revenue for 1928, 10 per cent for 1927, and 11.9 per cent for 1917.

Business and nonbusiness licenses constituted 42.2 per cent of the total revenue for 1928, 39.8 per cent for 1927, and 13.7 per cent for 1917.

Receipts from business licenses consist chiefly of taxes exacted from insurance and other incorporated companies and of sales tax on gasoline, while those from non business licenses comprise chiefly taxes on motor vehicles and amounts paid for hunting and fishing privileges. The sales tax on gasoline amounted to $10,949,805 in 1928 and $9,705,636 in 1927, an increase of 12.8 per cent.

Indebtedness

The total funded or fixed debt outstanding Sept. 30, 1928 was $2,062,500.

The net indebtedness (funded or fixed debt less sinking fund assets) was $2,062,500, or $0.65 per capita. In 1927 the per capita net debt was $0.52, and in 1917, $0.06.

Assessed Valuations and Tax Levies

The assessed valuation of property in Indiana subject to ad valorem taxation was $5,117,890,125; the amount of State taxes levied was $11,771,147; and the per capita levy, $3.71. In 1927 the per capita levy was $3.80, and in 1917, $2.63.

DADS DAY AT PURDUE

Saturday, October 12th being Dads Day at Purdue, the Dads of St. Joe were 100% in attendance.

We left dear old St. Joe at 4 A. M. Saturday, with stars shining brightly. Till we arrived at Huntington things had began to moisten up a bit. This rain continued until nearly noon and some of the Dads were fairly well soaked till this time, "I mean outwardly," but very dry within. But the powers which control the planets of the universe seemed to favor the Dads and Old Sol broke through the clouds for a touch down and continued to shine throughout the afternoon, making it ideal for the 2200 fans who witnessed the foot ball game between Purdue and Michigan. This game resulted in a great and unexpected victory for Purdue. Score, Purdue 30, Michigan 16.

The Dads were well entertained by students and faculty, all had a great time and hope to go back next year. President Elliot had promised us a surprise which was given us just before luncheon. Here it is, Earl Coburn, due to his wit and ability as a mechanical engineer was made a member of the Purdue Faculty. Also O. E. Ginther due to his great vocabulary and beautiful oratory, along with all the other Dads, were made members.

Did we have a good time? Ask any of the Dads.

—By Dad.

Steps Into Hay Chute And Falls

County Agent B. V. Widney Injured Saturday Morning While Doing Chores for Mother

B. V. Widney, county agent for Whitley County, was spending his vacation with his mother, Mrs. Hattie Widney, and while helping with the morning chores, Saturday, he stepped into a hay chute and fell about 15 feet, injuring his right heel. He was taken home at Columbia City at once and taken to the Linvill hospital where it was revealed by X-ray pictures that the heel bone was splintered and that ligaments were badly torn besides the blood vessel being ruptured.

The hospital attendants said he would be unable to walk on his foot for nine weeks.

Dale had gone to the hay mow to close the ventilating windows, and the mow was full of hay, having closed one, he was looking up at the other, and walked into the chute, the painful accident resulting.

The Leaders Class of the M. P. Sunday School were entertained in the W. E. Henly home at Hicksville, Tuesday for dinner. Fifteen ladies were present. Mrs. Dora Sailer is hostess next month.

ABOUT PREACHERS' DAUGHTERS

Much has been said and written about preachers' sons—their good points and faults—but no so much attention has been paid to the daughters in the ministerial flock. It is taken for granted that the girls are always good; and they mostly are, as depicted by that specialist in feminine character, Ethel Hueston, who writes novels and finds her heroines in parsonages. Everyone remembers her story, "Prudence of the Parsonage," and the instantaneous success it was among readers. She now tells a story of another parsonage. This girl, the youngest of four sisters, bears the nickname of "Ginger Ella." She is the heroine of a lively and intensely interesting tale. Read it in The News beginning Nov. 7th.

SERMON SERIES CLOSES SUNDAY

Sunday morning will close an important series of sermons at Coburn's Corners Church, when J. N. Scholes will preach on the subject, "Doctrines Consistent with the Character of God." This will also be Mr. Scholes' last sermon at the church for the present. He begins a meeting at Dowagiac, Michigan, October 27.

Beginning of "Derby"

When the "Derby" was organized 149 years ago, the most visionary had no idea of the extent to which the race meet would grow. A few hundred sporting men attended the first Derby, in 1780, and it was won by Sir Charles Bunbury's horse Diomed. Its present glittering life was painfully absent, and at that time London had no telephone, gas or railway. It was frequently 38 hours before even the larger towns knew the winner. The guard of the mail coach spread the news, and in some remote villages the winner was not known until a fortnight after the race.—London Mail.

USEFUL WORK A CHRISTIAN DUTY

LESSON TEXT—Gen. 2:15, Ex. 20:9, John 5:17, John 9:4, Acts 20:33-35, I Thess. 3:10.

GOLDEN TEXT—This we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Doing Our Work Well.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Doing Our Work Well.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Honest Work Essential to Success.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Gambling Spirit Hurtful to Business and Morals.

I. The First Man Set to Work (Gen. 2:15).

Work was God's primal thought for man. Even in the state of innocence man was to have useful employment. With the coming of sin, new burdens were added.

II. The Time to Work (Ex. 20:9).

"Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work." Six out of seven days should be devoted to work. Idleness on any of the six days is as great a sin before God as working on the seventh day. Let it never be forgotten that the fourth commandment is an ordinance of labor as well as rest; in fact, there can be no rest unless there has been work. The idler and the Sabbath breaker are equally guilty before God.

III. The Working of the Father and the Son (John 5:17).

The God of the Bible is a working God. It is true that God, when His creative work was done, rested; that is, desisted from creative work, but there is other work besides that of creation. There is no such thing as inactivity in the divine kingdom. God is in His ceaseless activity everywhere. To be godlike is to be active.

Jesus had healed an impotent man on the Sabbath day. The Jews sought to kill Him for this good deed, and when He linked Himself with God in this, they more earnestly sought to kill him, because He made Himself equal with God. The special points of equality with God were:

1. Giving life to the dead.

Only God had shown Himself able to raise one from the dead.

2. Judging mankind (John 5:22).

His claim to being the judge of all mankind was His supreme claim to Deity.

IV. Urgency of the Work (John 9:4).

"I must work the works of God while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work."

These words were uttered in connection with the appalling need of the man who was born blind. Delivering lost men and women from their sins is the work of God which must be done. The night is coming when no work can be done. The night therefore for the world is when Jesus is withdrawn from it.

V. Paul an Example of Working (Acts 20:33-35).

Paul did not work to hoard up money, but to support himself while preaching the gospel. A truly great preacher is the one who preaches not only in word but in deed.

VI. The Man Who Will Not Work Should Not Eat (II Thess. 3:10).

Growing out of Paul's teaching concerning the coming of the Lord, a tendency to idleness developed at Thessalonica. They reasoned that if the Lord's coming was so near, work was useless. The true teaching concerning the coming of the Lord is, "Occupy till I come." Earnest attention to present duty is the scriptural attitude toward the second coming of Christ. Those who will not work should not eat. This is the right principle upon which to base all works of charity. It is the efficient cure for pauperism. It exhibits the right economic order and should apply to all classes.

VII. The Object of Work (Eph. 4:28).

This text sets forth the only three ways by which to get money or possessions of any kind.

1. To steal.

Theft was common among the heathen. It is common today, even in civilized countries. Many ways of obtaining money can be designated by theft.

2. To receive as gifts.

3. To work for.

To have possessions which have been stolen is, of course, wrong. To have that which benefactors have given is right, even though it may not bring a blessing. To have that which we have earned is not only honorable, but gives personal satisfaction in that it has come through toil.

Master of the Situation

There is always the unknown quantity, always the equation we cannot solve. It would seem that it is not the will of God that we should in our toil for Him feel ourselves masters of the situation. It must be enough to know that He is Master of it.—P. O. Ainsworth.

God Always Answers

God always answers prayer, but sometimes in His infinite wisdom He says, "No."—Baptist Record.

THERMOMETER USEFUL IN MAKING BREAD

Bread Dough Should Be Kept at a Temperature of 82 Degrees Fahrenheit During the Rising Periods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the important uses of the general purpose cooking thermometer is in making yeast-raised bread. The temperature of the dough should be kept constantly at about 82 degrees F. throughout the mixing and rising periods. This can only be done exactly when a thermometer is used. An oven thermometer, too, will be wanted when the bread is baked. The following directions for making bread at home are given by the bureau of home economics. The materials indicated yield about three and a half pounds, that is, three large or four small loaves of bread. Hard-wheat or bread flour is called for. If a soft-wheat flour is used a larger quantity is needed; also more yeast and sugar. For the same amount of liquid about two and a half pounds or two and three-quarters quarts of sifted soft-wheat flour will be required, and about double the amount of yeast and sugar. The liquid in either case may be milk, water, potato water, or any combination of these.

About 2¼ lbs. or 2¼ qts. of sifted hard-wheat flour.	2 tbs. sugar 2 tbs. fat 1 ounce (2 cakes) yeast.
2¾ cups liquid
4 tsp. salt

With the temperature about 82 degrees F. bread can be made by the straight dough method with the above ingredients in about four hours from the time the dough is mixed until the loaves are put into the oven. A small quantity of the liquid, about one-half cupful, must be set aside for softening the yeast. If milk is used, it must be scalded first to check the growth of bacteria, and then cooled. The part reserved for soaking the yeast should be cooled quickly, and the rest may be poured while hot over the sugar, salt and fat. Other liquids than milk do not require heating, but often this is done for convenience in dissolving and melting the sugar, salt and fat. In any case the liquid mixture should be brought to a temperature below 100 degrees F. before mixing with the yeast. The temperature should be adjusted so as to bring the temperature of the dough to about 82 degrees F.

The flour, except about one cupful, should be added to the liquid and mixed thoroughly with a spoon, the hands, or a mechanical bread mixer. All the flour may be added at once if experience has shown the amount necessary. It is impossible, however, to tell beforehand how much flour will be required unless flour from this lot has been used. The dough should be as soft as it can be conveniently handled, but it should not be sticky. More flour is required with water than with milk.

When the flour and liquid are thoroughly mixed and the dough no longer sticks to the sides of the bowl, it is ready to be kneaded. If a bread mixer is used, it kneads as well as mixes. To knead by hand, turn the dough out on a clean floured board and work quickly with the palms of the hands until it is smooth and elastic.

Allow the bread to rise to about double its bulk in a place where the temperature is from 80 degrees to 85 degrees F. The bowl may be placed in a pan of warm water to raise the temperature of the dough if it has cooled off, and keep it at the right point. Punch down, turn the ball of dough over, and allow it to rise a second time. Divide then into loaves, mold, grease the top surface lightly, and place in pans to rise again, regulating the temperature carefully as before. Start to bake in a fairly hot oven, 400 degrees to 415 degrees F., depending on the size of the loaf. A pound loaf should be baked at a higher temperature and more quickly than a pound and a half loaf. Turn the loaves around after 20 minutes and lower the temperature of the oven. Bake from 45 minutes to one hour. Cool the loaves on a rack as soon as they leave the oven. Do not cover while warm.

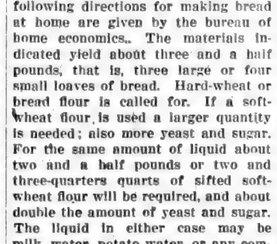
BETTER CARE AND REPAIR OF SHOES

Ripped Seams and Soles Often Can Be Repaired.

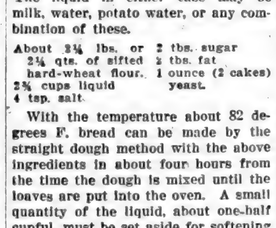
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is not necessary to discard shoes as soon as they begin to show signs of wear. Shoes with ripped seams or with outsoles worn through can often be repaired and worn for a long time.

Perspiration is hard on shoe leather. It is, therefore, an economical plan to have two pairs of shoes for alternate daily wear. This permits each pair to dry out between times.



These Shoes Seemed Beyond Repair, but—



They Were Made to Look Like This.

Shoes not in use are kept best on shoe trees, which can be bought at reasonable prices.

Mud, water, or excessive dryness ruins leather. Oil and grease preserve it. Boots and shoes kept clean, pliable and water resistant will last longer. Those for farm or other heavy outdoor use need greasing. Those for street wear need polishing only, although the soles may be oiled or greased.

Children's shoes will wear much longer if the youngsters are taught to polish them regularly, to oil them once or twice a month with a little castor oil, and to avoid getting them soaking wet.

The minute a seam begins to rip, the upper cracks through, a heel twists out of shape or runs down, or a hole wears through the outsole, the shoe needs mending. If the necessary repairs are put off the shoe will not be worth mending. This is particularly true if the welt is worn away or the insole is worn through.

The illustration shows a pair of shoes with extremely worn soles, which did not look worth repairing. The uppers were good, however, and by having complete new soles put on for $2, the shoes were made to give three months' more service.

Run-down heels are bad for body posture as well as uncomfortable and unsightly to wear. Worn heel "lifts" of leather or rubber can be replaced easily. Ripped seams in the uppers can sometimes be hand-stitched at home.

With a modest repair kit many minor shoe troubles can be cured by anyone handy with tools.

Oatmeal and Date Bars Good for Child's Lunch

Good for the children's lunch boxes, or for social occasions, these bars are easily made and sure to be liked. The bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, supplies the recipe.

Oatmeal and Date Bars.

½ lb. dates (1½ cups pitted dates)	¼ tsp. salt
1 cup nut meats, chopped	1 tsp. baking powder
¾ cup oatmeal	2 eggs
¼ cup flour	1 cup brown sugar

Cut the pitted dates into small pieces. Mix the oatmeal, flour, salt and baking powder and add the nuts and dates. Beat the eggs, add the sugar, and stir into this the other ingredients. Place the mixture in greased shallow pans and bake in a slow oven (300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 30 minutes. When cool cut into bars or squares, and roll in granulated or powdered sugar.

"No use lying to us, Raffet," one of the others retorted, somewhat incoherently. It was Francois who spoke this time, the mercer from the Rue Grande, and he had always been always noted for his eloquence. "You raised your hands against us citizens of the republic, who came here to avenge an unpardonable wrong. And let me tell you that 'tis you who will suffer for this night's work—"

"Ah, ca!" Raffet broke in savagely, for his temper was still up. "How long are you going to talk in riddles? In truth, it's the devil that has deprived you of your senses. What's all this talk about the English spy? Who told you we were after him? And why should you hinder us from doing our duty?"

"We know," Francois retorted, striving to appear calm and full of dignity, "that not only were you after the English spy, but we know you captured him in our district and you have got him in the diligence yonder and are conveying him to Paris, where you and your friends will share ten thousand livres, which by rights should have belonged to us men of the district where the spies were captured."

"What gibberish is this? I tell you not only have we not got the English spy, but owing to your senseless folly we are not likely to get him now."

"I say that the English spy is in your diligence!" Francois exclaimed and pointed dramatically at the old vehicle, which stood like a huge, solid mass, heavier and darker than the surrounding gloom. "Some of us have seen him, I tell you!" And his companions, even those who were in the sorriest plight, nodded in assent.

But Raffet swallowed his temper now. What was the use of arguing with these fools? He would have thought it beneath his dignity to give them ocular demonstration that the diligence now only held the three miserable aristos. But the trouble was what to do with this crowd. Raffet counted them over. There were eight of them, and four of these were helpless with wounds in the legs. Somehow, at the first rush, Raffet thought there had been more like a dozen young ruffians and he had a distinct recollection of a big, clumsy fellow who seemed the prime mover in this senseless escapade. But no doubt he, as well as one or two others, had had the good sense to take to their heels and Raffet had certainly no intention of scouring the woods for them. On the other hand, he had every intention of seeing those that remained well punished for their folly. He did not wish to drag them along with him to Epone. It was another four kilometers and more and the first part of the journey would still be through the forest; with the gathering darkness the coach horses would have to be led by men carrying lighted lanterns.

Pondering a moment over the future of his prisoners, Raffet had a sudden inspiration.

"Who drove the cart that brought you all hither?" he demanded.

"A man from Lannoy" Paul, the washerwoman's son, replied.

"Then he shall take you back to Mantes the way you came."

"You would not dare!" One of the others protested.

Raffet, however, had already turned to his corporal of gendarmerie.

"Citizen Corporal," he said, "take these rascals as far as the cart which brought them hither. It must have come to a halt somewhere near the bottom of the hill. Let two of your men go with them to Mantes and there hand them over to the deputy commissary. Order the owner of the cart to drive them on pain of severe punishment if he refuses. Take one of the lanthorns with you. It will be needed, as the road will be pitch dark before they are well on their way. And stay! You have some stout cord inside the diligence. We were going to use it on the English spy. Now it will serve to bind these rogues together two by two, lest they try some more of their tricks on you. Those who are hurt can lie in the bottom of the cart."

"Citizen Raffet!" Francois the mercer raised his voice in final impotent protest. "You will answer to the state for this outrage on her citizens."

But Raffet was no longer in a mind to listen. The corporal had sent one of the men to find the length of rope which was inside the diligence and was to have served for binding up the English spies and now it would be used on a lot of jackanapes on their homeward journey to Mantes. Protests and curses were indeed in vain, and the soldiers whose tempers had not yet cooled down were none too gentle with the rope.

CHAPTER VII

The Catchers Caught

Raffet, in the meanwhile, had called one of the men of the gendarmerie to him. "Ride, citizen soldier!" he commanded, "as fast as you can to Epone. You will find the citizen commissary and his friend from Paris at the posting inn. Tell them just what has occurred and that I am sending the pack of miscreants back to Mantes for punishment. Tell them also that this senseless piece of folly has not left us unprepared for attack by the English spies, though we have not much more hope in that direction now. We shall be on the road again in a quarter of an hour, but will have to walk the horses practically all the way, so do not expect to be in Epone for another two hours at the least."

Comparative silence fell upon the scene, where a brief while ago deafening shouts and tumultuous melee had roused the woodland echoes. Only the prisoners now were heard groaning and cursing. The courier had ridden away bearing the unwelcome news to Lauzet and his friend from Paris; the men who were not busy with the prisoners were looking to their horses or their accoutrements, while Raffet stood by, observant and grim. And suddenly, right out of the darkness, there came the sound of agonizing calls for help.

"What was that?" Raffet queried, straining his ears to listen.

"Help! Help!" came from the distance. And then again, "Help! Hi!" and "Curse you, why don't you come?" And with it all the now familiar sound of men fighting and shouting. Not so very far away, either. A couple of hundred meters perhaps, just the other side of the bend. Were it not for the thicket and the darkness, a man could cut his way through to where those shouts came from in a couple of minutes.

"Help! Help!"

One of the prisoners broke into a harsh laugh. "It's Citizen Lauzet, I'll wager," he said, "and his friend from Paris."

"Citizen Lauzet?" Raffet exclaimed. 'What in h—l do you mean?"

"Well!" Paul, the washerwoman's son, replied, still laughing and forgetting his sorry plight in the excellence of the joke. "We found those two rumbling on the bridle path, on their way to Epone, ready, no doubt, to seize the largest share of reward for the capture of the Scarlet Pimpernel."

"Great God!"

"And so we seized them both." Francois the mercer rejoined, "and did to them what you are doing now to us; gave them a good hiding, then bound them together with ropes and threw them in the bottom of the cart."

"Name of a dog!"

"And no doubt," came a high-pitched voice from among the group of prisoners, "the English spies have found them and—

Sheep Helpless When Turned on Its Back

There are so many ways in which sheep can and do die that it is a wonder any of them are left alive. The most peculiar method of all is that called "dying on their backs," writes A. B Gilfillan in Atlantic Monthly. When horses or dogs roll they either roll all the way over or roll back to the position from which they started; they are unable to balance themselves on their spine, as it were. But when a sheep rolls and reaches a position with its legs pointing upward it is often unable to complete the turn, especially if it has a heavy coat of wool, as is the case in spring.

The reason for this is that a sheep's legs, being very thin, are not able to exert any pull to one side or the other and thus aid the sheep in righting itself. Its only chance is to twist itself violently, in the hope that some movement may turn it on its side. If unsuccessful in this the unnatural position for some reason causes gas to collect in its body and it begins to bloat. Finally the pressure of this gas on its heart and lungs becomes so terrific that these organs cease to function. If the ewe is found at any time before life is extinct and is turned over on her stomach she will get up, stagger off and deflate, looking meanwhile like a misshapen balloon.

The Solar Year

The exact length of the solar year, or the time taken by the earth to complete one revolution around the sun, is 365.24224 days. This is slightly less than 365¼ days or the average length a year would be if every fourth year were a leap year. To approximate to this exact length, therefore, only 97 leap years are provided for in each 400 years; this is accomplished by having only 365 days in such years as 1900, 2100 and 2200 and 366 days in 2,000, which is exactly divisible by 400.

NEW WOOLENS LURE MILLINERS; VELVET EVENING WRAPS IN STYLE

LIKE everybody else who has anything to do with fashions, milliners have not been able to resist the lure of the new woolens, such as are bringing lasting glory and renown to the textile arts.

There's no smarter way to "start" the season than to hat and scarf oneself in some one or other of the tweed, broadcloth, or jersey "sets" which are the new note in early autumn collections.

In their zeal to make the most of a good thing, Paris modistes are utilizing every inch of the new woolen materials even to their selvedges. That a selvedge can be very decorative is clearly illustrated in many of the new toques which are made up after the manner of the one shown to the right in this picture. This model is fashioned of a handsomely colorful loose woven tweed, the selvedge of which is so manipulated as to form the trimming. A pocketbook, made of the same tweed, completes this most intriguing millinery ensemble.

A sports fabric in gray and navy blue was the inspiration for the fetching hat-and-scarf set shown to the left. The hat combines the nonchalant lines of the tam, and the popular beret. It is part of the feature of these nifty sets that the hat fit very snug and that the scarf be worn tight up about the throat, just as you see in the picture.

Another medium for the hat much employed for the new models is suede, also finished kidskin, which comes in all fashionable colorings. One sees, for instance, a molded-to-the-head shape of gray glove-kid, which is deftly interworked with velvet or some other material such as yardage felt or angora knit scarfing. The hat below in the circle is of gray kidskin with darker gray velvet shown in the facing that turns back at the front.

A novel turban is shown to the left, in which wisps of tan fur is caught through the black velvet of the hat to give a striped effect.

No more brilliantly colorful scene can be conceived of than that of a galaxy of lovely women mantled in gorgeous evening wraps whose moods and modes were never so enchantingly whimsical and versatile as the new collections reveal them.

Regarding favored materials for the evening cape or coat, it is a significant fact that with all the allurement of other weaves, the compass of fashion keeps pointing steadily to velvet. No doubt the delectable colorings for the new velvets have much to do with their prestige. No matter what tone or tint of the evening gown there is a complementary color awaiting it in the velvet realm. Which is exactly what fashionists require to aid them to play up color values in the ensemble effects which are considered as important in the realm of evening costume as it is in that of apparel for the daytime wear.

Headwear of Gay Woolen.

Then, too, velvet yields with consummate grace to manipulation of all sorts, particularly shirring such as is so lavishly employed this season. Particular stress is given to furless wraps, which make intriguing working of the material itself their outstanding attraction. Collars especially are fantastically designed, some trending to Medici types, others puffed and shirred in becoming huge rolled effects.

The charming cape-coat in the picture below is typical of the youthful silhouette given to many of the new evening wraps. Note the clever deep yoke from which falls a graceful cape. The flower on the shoulder is of self velvet. A chic detail of this wrap is the lining of sheerest white velvet, even to the flower showing a reverse of white, thus exploiting the black-and-white theme which is so prominent in the evening mode.

Fashionable Paris is interpreting black-and-white in fetching ways such as a bewitching frock which combines black with white tulle stressing flounces which alternate these. White jewelry is worn with this costume. The black-and-white ensemble is completed with a white ermine wrap.

WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph. D., LL. D.

What Makes Giants and Dwarfs.

ON THE day we are born we have used up only 2 per cent of our allotted growth power. We can grow 98 per cent more if we are spared.

We double our weight the first six months; a calf does it in fifty days; a dog, in eight. We increase our weight 200 per cent in the first year, less than 30 in the second, only 5 in the fifth. Increase in weight then picks up again and continues until the tenth year, to drop back from the eleventh to the thirteenth. From the fourteenth to the seventeenth, puberty years, it increases again, to 12 per cent. That is our last spurt. It drops to 4 per cent during the eighteenth year; to 1 per cent during the twenty-second.

Stature also increases by spurts. By the time the infant can walk, it has grown from twenty to thirty-four inches; thereafter, until puberty, it grows between two and three inches a year. The thirteenth is the rapid growing year for girls, the sixteenth for boys. Between fourteen and sixteen the boy increases his stature eight inches. Girls usually attain their full stature by twenty, sometimes by eighteen; boys by twenty-five. But both may continue growth three or four years longer.

The new-born's brain is already one-fifth the destined weight, about ten ounces; by the second year two-fifths, or as large as an adult anthropoid ape's. Full brain weight comes before twenty-five; after that it loses weight, rapidly in old age.

The two elements in growth are weight and height. Weight often continues beyond maturity, long after the body has taken on its last cubit. The giant can grow no taller; the fat lady knows no limit.

Stature is determined almost entirely by the skeleton. Only skin and a thin layer of fat cover skull and the bones of the feet; thin cartilage covers the ends of the leg bones; between the vertebrae are thin pads of cartilage. Stature growth, then, is largely a matter of growth of skull, bodies of vertebrae, and especially of the leg bones.

Bones grow from centers of ossification. Centers for the principal bones of the body appear by the end of the second month of fetal life; centers for the ends, or epiphyses, appear later—many not until puberty, when the skeleton begins to assume its permanent form.

The number of ossification centers varies in different bones. The long bones of the arms and legs have at least three: one in the shaft itself and one at each epiphysis. The humerus at fifteen years is still in three parts: shaft, two heads; but the heads are more closely connected with shaft than at birth. By maturity, the heads are so united with the shaft that it is not possible to see where they grew on.

In general, facial and skull-dome bones are formed from membrane—"skin" bones; the other bones begin in cartilage. Bone-forming cells multiply by division, absorb lime salts from the blood, ossify, and so continue until the cartilage is replaced by bone. Increase in length ends when the cartilage disappears. In the mature skeleton there can be no further growth in stature or in length of arms. If final conversion of cartilage to bone is delayed, gigantic stature results; if the process is reversed, dwarfs. Only the articulating or joint surfaces of mature bones are covered by cartilage.

Bones increase in girth by additions of bone cells from the surrounding membrane. Long bones are hollow. To preserve their relative proportion of bone wall to cavity, bone cells on the inside are destroyed as fast as cells are added to the outside. Thus the cavity grows with the bone, the form and strength of the bones are preserved. This process keeps up until late in life. With old age the bones become thin and delicate.

Complicated changes take place in acquiring the upright gait. A chick can run from its shell; a baby cannot even straighten its legs. They bend in at the knees and are drawn up at the hips, and are only 60 per cent of head-trunk length. By maturity they will be over 100 per cent. As the walking days approach, the legs grow fast. Knee and hip joints change; the legs can now be straightened out. The soles of the feet no longer turn in. The baby at birth can clap its feet almost as easily as its hands.

The spine also changes. It is not solid, but consists of twenty-four vertebrae with pads of cartilage between. At birth a large percentage of the column is cartilage. Powerful muscles develop to hold the spine erect; others, acting on the ribs as levers, to balance the trunk and spine.

Standing is a complex act involving nearly all our big muscles. When we stand "at attention," powerful ligaments in the hip joint hold the body. This relieves the muscles from strain, but locks the knee joint. We stand easier if the knees are slightly bent and the knee-caps loose.

The feet muscles must bind the many small bones together to give support and from the instep or arch. A man can stand up asleep, but not if muscles of feet or of legs are "asleep."

ONLY THREE LOWER LEVIES FOR 1929

Total Auburn Tax Rate to be Six Cents Higher on $100 Valuation

Of twenty-three cities, towns and townships in DeKalb County, only three have the distinction of lower tax levies for the year 1930 than for 1929.

These three units are Ashley and Waterloo towns and Grant township. The other twenty units must meet varying increases, ranging from 6 to 40 cents on the $100 valuation.

The rate for Ashley is 44 cents lower; that for Waterloo 8 cents less and for Grant township 11 cents less. The increases follow: Garrett 20 cents, St. Joe 19 cents, Corunna 16 cents, Altona 15 cents, Butler city 12 cents, Auburn 6 cents, Stafford township 40 cents, Smithfield 39 cents, Spencer 31 cents, Jackson 22 cents, Newville and Richland 14 cents each, Keyser and Wilmington 13 cents each, Franklin 12 cents, Concord 11 cents, Troy 10 cents, Butler township 8 cents, Union 6 cents and Fairfield 5 cents.

The distinction for the lowest rate among the towns and cities goes to Altona, with $2.28, and among the townships to Wilmington, with $1.60. Of the towns and cities, Waterloo, with $3.72, has the highest rate, Smithfield has the highest township rate, with $2.73.

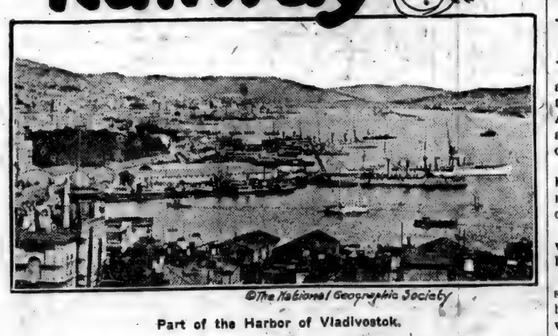
Trans-Siberian Railway



©The National Geographic Society

Part of the Harbor of Vladivostok.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

RUSSIA'S Far Eastern problem lies at the end of the world's longest railway, the Trans-Siberian. It was a tremendous task to build this railway, and it has been equally a great task at times to keep it in efficient operation.

The distance from the Pacific terminus at Vladivostok to Moscow is 5,391 miles, and to Petrograd 5,481. Much of the road is still single track, and the tremendously heavy traffic of the war years levied a heavy toll on both equipment and roadbed. While in the main grades are fair, yet it is not to be expected that on a road of such length these could be compared to the grades obtaining on our own principal lines. The result is comparatively short trains, many engines, and slow progress. Fast trains now require about ten days for the trip from Moscow to the Pacific, when they traverse the Chinese Eastern tracks through Manchuria.

On leaving Moscow, the Trans-Siberian road runs through about 300 miles of the great western plain of European Russia to the city of Ufa at the foot of the Ural mountains. Some 520 miles east of Moscow is a pyramid on the one side of which is inscribed the word "Europe," and on the opposite side the word "Asia." This pyramid stands on the very apex of the Urals. The railroad at this point is 1,850 feet above sea level. Between Ufa and Tchelybinsk the road rises from 310 feet elevation to 1,850 feet and drops back again to 760 feet. At the latter place are huge wooden barracks where immigrants entering Siberia were quartered in prewar times, waiting for railroad transportation.

Across the vast stretches of western Siberia the Trans-Siberian railroad passes grassy steppes inhabited by horse-breeding Kirghives, through long reaches of virgin forest, and through many important agricultural regions. Crossing out of the Tomsk government into that of Yeniseisk, the road shortly reaches Atchinsk, the northernmost town on the railroad. Its latitude is the same as that of the middle coast of Labrador. Indeed, at no time after it leaves Moscow until it enters Manchuria does the Trans-Siberian ever touch further south than the northern coast of Newfoundland.

Many Tunnels and Bridges.

By the time it reaches Lake Baikal, it has climbed again to 1,500 feet, and in skirting that body of water has to pass through forty tunnels, through numerous giant cuts and over many bridges. It continues to climb until it reaches Sokhondo, 3,100 feet, where it penetrates a tunnel bearing on its western entrance the inscription "To the Great Ocean," and on its eastern entrance the inscription "To the Atlantic Ocean." After passing the junction of the road to Mukden, the Trans-Siberian drops down to 700 feet, then climbs again to 2,100, and thence back to sea level at Vladivostok.

From this it will be seen that whether viewed from the standpoint of distance, which is one and one-half times that across the American continent by some of the longer routes from seaboard to seaboard; whether from that of latitude and climate, which places it at times 700 miles north of the main coast of Newfoundland and gives it at some points an average temperature in January of five degrees below zero; whether from that of elevation which gives it three mountain ranges to cross; or whether from that of trackage facilities and rolling stock supply, no other nation has ever had such a railroad problem to deal with in times of great crises as Russia has in connection with the operation of the Trans-Siberian line.

To guard against difficulties with China, such as those of recent months, Russia prepared two railway strings to her transportation bow: the shorter Chinese Eastern line, built by Chinese consent on Chinese soil; and the longer Amur river branch, entirely on Russian territory. This branch forms a bow north of Manchuria and meets the Chinese Eastern line again before reaching Vladivostok.

Across the Amur to the south lies China, or rather Manchuria, which, before the World war, was being rapidly Russianized. Still, the river there is truly an international line, and this was proved, if by nothing else, by the extensive smuggling that went on across it. The Amur province is in the same latitude as Newfoundland and has a climate that in some ways is comparable to the climate of that far northern American land.

When the Siberian railway was pushed through at the end of the Nineteenth century and the gigantic "cut-off" was made through Manchuria, it set things back on the Amur for a while. But after the Russo-Japanese war, Russia's hold on Manchuria was weakened and the empire began building the western half of the great railroad just north of the Amur where it would be entirely on Muscovite territory. Tremendous hardships were encountered in traversing bogs and forests and crossing great rivers; but the job was about completed when the World war broke out. This long stretch of railway paralleling the Amur from 50 to 75 miles north of it, is a valuable asset to the Amur region.

Blagoveshchensk, on the middle Amur, and connected with the Amur railway by a branch line, is the metropolis of the province, a town of about 45,000 inhabitants. Spread out along the river bank, with its spires and domes showing against the skyline, it makes an imposing appearance to the traveler on the river especially since it contrasts so noticeably with the little river towns. Across the river is a Chinese town known locally as Sakalin, but appearing under numerous aliases on the maps. Many of Sakalin's inhabitants, too, have their aliases, for it is a haven for smugglers.

At the eastern end of the Trans-Siberian railway, by whichever route one goes, lies Vladivostok, "Mistress of the East." In some ways it can be compared to San Francisco, at the end of our "Trans-American" lines, more particularly in the latter's earlier Barbary coast days.

Vladivostok is younger than the city by the Golden Gate. It was founded in 1860. Had its normal development not been interrupted by the World war and the unsettled conditions that have followed, Vladivostok might soon have rivaled our own coast city in population and beauty.

Life in Vladivostok.

A tongue of hilly land thrust out into a land-locked bay constitutes the site of the city. The architecture maintains the European note struck by the station; which makes the presence of Oriental people, conveyances and customs all the more exotic. You no sooner accustomed yourself to the dreary routine of bazaar buying, flourishing lotteries and babel of tongues than you encountered the more familiar telegraph office, motion picture theater, museum, club and university. You might dodge a European racing car, under an American electric light, and run plump into a coolie burden bearer despite the warning cries of a Russian policeman. The "Golden Horn" restaurant was the rendezvous of bon vivants of the world. The life of Vladivostok has changed greatly since those days, and none of the old prosperity is apparent.

Small wonder living was extremely dear in the old days and is dearer now, since the city subsisted formerly on supplies from China and Japan, Europe, and even America. Its growth seems due to some inexplicable exception that proves the rule that a city, to succeed, should be self-sustaining, interchange products with the country around it, be thrifty, cultivate civic consciousness, be well governed, and possess some racial, cultural, or patriotic unity. It owed its commerce to the fact that it was the most nearly ice-free port of Siberia, by which virtue it became the terminus of the Trans-Siberian railway, and to the military and naval establishments maintained by the government of the Tsar.

In the way of exports, in its palmiest days, it had nothing more important to give the world than sea-cabbage, trepang and a fungus gathered from decayed wood, for all of which China was its principal customer. Trepang is the dried body of the holothurian, more commonly known as the sea slug, more appealing to the curiosity than to the palate of the Occidental. For this snail-like creature can throw off, when frightened, its vital organs—digestive, respiratory and reproductive—and replace them all within a few weeks. Nature here seems to hold that two can live more easily, if not more cheaply, than one. When the sea slug becomes too hungry for comfort it divides in two parts and each, developing rapidly into complete units, goes on a search for food.

Worth Remembering

It costs more to neglect our duties than to accomplish them.—Anna Dickinson.

BRINGING DOWN THE HAWK

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

LINDY RAND heard a chicken squawk. Almost instantly a hawk whistled triumphantly. She leaped to the door. The children, Jack and Elsie, ran to her, screaming at the top of their voices: "He got it!" Against the blue afternoon sky sailed a great bird with a half-grown yellow chicken clutched in his talons.

"We were keeping watch, mother, honest!" Six-year-old Jack said earnestly. "But he just swooped right down!"

"It was the chicken with the droopy wing, mother!" said five-year-old Elsie, half crying.

"He'll be back after more," Lindy sighed. She was almost overwhelmed by this new difficulty. A woman alone with two small children, she had to fight more than hawks.

The hawk had perched on the branch of a tree within plain sight of the house and was coolly making a meal. When he had finished he came back for more. Round and round above the chicken yard he circled.

Lindy watched him anxiously. She was desperate. Every chicken meant money. She needed money as never before.

Suddenly she turned and went into the house. Her husband's shotgun rested upon wooden pegs against the kitchen wall. It had never been touched since the last time he put it there. It was loaded. Lindy knew how to shoot, although she had a horror of firearms. She took the gun down and went out of doors again.

"Mother; mother! The hawk! Look, the hawk!" shrieked Jack and Elsie.

Lindy had a glimpse of gleaming wings, low to the ground. As the bird lifted into the air with another chicken in his talons she raised the gun to her shoulder and fired. The weapon kicked so violently that she was almost thrown over backward.

"Mother! You got him!" shouted Jack.

Breathless, shocked, Lindy saw the bird floundering before her. The shot had broken his wing. She laid down the gun, grabbed an empty chicken coop and put it over the bird.

Down the dusty road from town came a powerful car driven by the one person in the world whom Lindy feared and distrusted. This was Abe Akroyd, the man who had sold the place to her husband. Payment and interest were due that day, and she knew that Abe had come to see about it.

The car stopped under the great spruce tree that shaded the shabby house and Abe stepped out. He was a heavily built man with a gray-bristled jaw and small hard eyes. He had a gold tooth that gleamed hugely when he spoke. Somehow in that moment he made Lindy think of the hawk, potent, relentless, predatory. But she had worsted the hawk. That knowledge gave her courage to face the man.

"Well, Lindy, how are you coming?" he began. "You know what day this is, I suppose?" He took a small black book from his pocket and consulted it. "Payment and interest—$580."

"I can pay only the interest." Lindy looked pleadingly into the coarse face. "My chickens came on slow. In the fall—"

"Now, now! I expected better than that of you, Lindy. You've had a whole year in which to get righted since John died."

"A whole year!" Lindy's lips quivered.

Abe consulted the book again and shook his head.

"Business is business. You know that, Lindy. I'd like to accommodate everybody. But if I begin with you the rest of 'em will be on my back. I've got a good bit of property trusted out around the country. And I live by what folks owe me. I got to treat all alike; it don't pay to get too soft-hearted."

"I don't expect anything but fair treatment, Mr. Akroyd. I am doing the best I can. A year isn't very long for a woman that's working alone with two small children to earn $500 or $600 outside her living expenses. All I ask is an extension of time, Mr. Akroyd."

Abe squinted upward at the roof of the small house. A corner of the loosely shingled roof had blown off in a recent high wind. When Abe sold a piece of property he always demanded that the buildings be kept in good condition.

"That looks bad," he commented.

Lindy knew it. She bit her lips.

"Lindy," said Abe, putting the black book back into his pocket, "I'll tell you what you better do. You better give up this place and move into town. You'll find work there. You're never going to get this place paid for, that's fair and square, Lindy."

Lindy went white. She clutched at her throbbing throat. The place was home to her and the children; it had been John's home while he lived. He had brought her there a bride. They had planned to pay for it and improve it and continue there in their old age. She couldn't give it up.

From her pocket she took a purse, opened it and with trembling fingers counted out $80 in worn bills. The interest. She held out the money to Abe, but he refused it with a gesture.

"All or nothing, Lindy. I hate to do it, but I got to be firm. I'll pay you back cash for every cent due you. The money will give you a start somewhere else. I'm offered more for the place this minute than I asked when I sold it to John Rand. Ed Holmes wants it, Lindy, I can't turn down a good cash offer for it, you know."

"Ed Holmes!" Lindy's face was scarlet now. "I've seen him snooping 'round on my hill yonder. I don't know what he's looking for. But he's going to keep off the premises as long as I occupy them or—or I'll drive him off with a shotgun!"

"What's this?" Abe looked in astonishment at the palpitating little figure of the young woman.

Lindy pointed toward the chicken coop within which the hawk was glowering.

"I just shot him," she said.

"Yes, mother did, too!" cried loyal Jack.

Abe looked at the hawk, which he hadn't noticed before.

'Guess I'll have to warn Ed to stay away," he said. Then as Lindy again held out the money to him pleadingly he turned from her and went to his car. Stepping in, he drove swiftly away.

Weak and faint Lindy sat down on the doorstep. Abe had refused the interest. That meant he was determined to get rid of her. He wanted to let Ed Holmes have the place. What did Ed want to for? What was he doing up there in that stone patch?

"Jack and Elsie," she called. "You stay here and watch the chickens. I'm going up on the hill for a little while."

She hadn't been on the hill since John died. It was nothing but an old rock pile anyway; no good land. John had paid much more than the place was worth and now Abe Akroyd was squeezing her for the payments.

She climbed up to where she had seen Ed Holmes a few days before. Just inside the woods she stopped aghast. Before her some freshly dug earth and chippings of rock. Ed Holmes had been digging into her land. What for? What did he hope to find in a barren place like this?

Lindy ran all the way back to the house.

Ten minutes later she was racing toward town, the two children bobbing on the back seat of the old flivver.

Down Main street she drove, past all the lawyers' offices until she came to a shabby house, where on the porch, sat an old man reading a big book.

"Mr. White!" Lindy said, going up to him. "You've read just about everything. John always said you were the best informed man in these parts. I've got a mystery to solve. You know what my land is. You know what that hill back of the house is. What would a man like Ed Holmes find there to interest him?"

"Been snooping round there, has he?" inquired the old man.

"Digging dirt, chipping off pieces of rock."

"Ed Holmes, you know, Lindy, has made a great study of the rocks hereabouts. He prides himself on being a genuine geologist. Yes, yes. Guess I'll go home with you, Lindy, and see what I make out."

Back toward home raced Lindy with the one person she felt she could absolutely trust. She helped the old man up the hill; she boosted him up. He knelt down. He picked up a bit of rock. He held the specimen close to his eyes. The light and life of youth streamed into his old face.

"Blue granite!" he said. "Yes, yes. Lindy, don't you breathe a word of this to anyone. There's a plot on foot to rob you. But you'll fool 'em, Lindy, if you just keep your mouth shut."

For the second time that day Lindy raced to town. It was near sunset when she located Abe Akroyd. Mr. White had lent her the money to make the last payment, and Abe reluctantly received it.

Ed Holmes had not let Abe know why he wanted the Rand place. When he found out that he couldn't have it he was furious, but not half so furious as Abe himself.

As for Lindy, who had outwitted them both and who found herself about to become a rich woman, she went home and commiserated with the captive hawk.

"Keep up your courage, old boy," she said. "Your wing is going to mend nicely. And then you'll be able to fly again. I owe you something and I always pay my debts."

Cruel Treatment of Insane

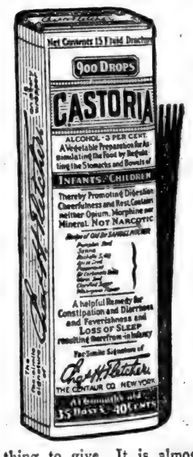
Among many primitive races the insane or feeble minded were looked upon as being specially loved of the gods and treated with gentleness. But the Nineteenth century occasionally chained them in dungeons, in the care of former convicts armed with whips and clubs; the Seventeenth burned them as witches.

When George III of England went insane after the death of a favorite daughter in 1811 he was kept in a straitjacket most of the time and his feet were blistered to induce docility. A physician asking after the king's health when he was troublesome was told by the keeper, "Sir, we knock his majesty down as flat as a flounder."—Detroit News.

Legends About Snakes

According to Rev. H Seddall's book "Malta, Past and Present," there are two or three species of snake on the island, but none of these is venomous as one undoubtedly was in the days of St. Paul. It is probably mere legend that venomous snakes taken to Malta lose their venom, just as it is legend that St. Patrick drove out all the snakes from Ireland. In connection with the latter, scientists affirm that there is no evidence to show that snakes have ever existed in Ireland.

When Babies CRY



Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

The Lamp and the Book

The Viscountess Astor, about to sail for her English home, talked to a reporter about a book that had failed. 'It was such a good book, too," she said. "Its failure makes you almost think that the American reading public is like Mrs. Smith.

"'I'm going to buy a book,' Mrs. Smith said.

"'A book!' said the astonished Mrs. Jones.

"'Yes,' Mrs. Smith explained. 'John has given me a jim dandy reading-lamp, and now I simply must have a book.'"

Of the persons reported as centenarians in the 1920 United States census, 1,561 were men and 2,706 were women.

WITH all the talk there is nowadays about the independence of the sub-deb generation, your reporter got a great kick out of hearing a grandmother describe how her granddaughter was following a good old tried and true method of improving her general health.

"My granddaughter, Margaret," says Mrs. Zell of 6231 Catherine Street, Philadelphia, "read about Nujol, was interested in it, so sent for a sample." ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Is rattlesnake meat good to eat? Of course the uninitiated will at once answer in the negative, says the Pathfinder Magazine. But not so with the fair students of the nature study camp of the Pennsylvania State college summer session.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. National Butterfat Champion

Queen Bessie Pietertje Ormsby.

By producing enough milk and butterfat to make 5,366 pounds of butter, Queen Bessie Pietertje Ormsby, a mature Holstein-Friesian cow, becomes the national butterfat champion for four lactations and for the third time produces more than 1,000 pounds of butterfat in a year. In the past four lactations, she has produced 4,292.1 pounds of butterfat, equivalent to 5,365.8 pounds of 80 per cent butter, in 108,475.5 pounds (12,658 gallons) of milk. Her average for four lactations is 27,118.8 pounds of milk containing 1,073 pounds fat (1,341 butter).

Queen Bessie is also the champion fat producer for three lactations with a total of 3,396.5 pounds and is third on the list for two lactations with a total of 2,301.2 pounds. In making these records, she displaces Adirondac Wietske Dairymaid with a record of 4,192.6 pounds of fat (5,240.7 butter) in four lactations, and Daisy Anggie Ormsby III with a record of 3,320.4 pounds of fat (4,150.5 butter) in three lactations.

This wonderful cow, Queen Bessie, is moderately large and weighs only 1,700 pounds yet, in her four lactations, she has produced enough butterfat to more than treble her weight in butter. Her sire is King Pietertje Mercedes Ormsby with 17 A. R. daughters. Her dam is Rocknasene Queen Bess with a long-time record of 883.1 pounds of butterfat (1,103.8 butter) in 22,914.6 pounds of milk. Queen Bessie was bred by C. L. Spaulding of Warren, Minn., and is now owned by R. V. Rasmussen of Elmwood Farms, Deerfield, Ill.

Implement House Needed on Farms

Store in Some Other Place Than Along Ditch or Under Trees

If farm machinery is to last, is expected to give good service and is to pay a return for its cost, it must be stored in some place other than along the ditch bank or under trees.

"There is no known type of farming profitable enough to pay dividends when machinery is allowed to become rusty and worn, is repaired with hay wire or permitted to stand in the weather during winter," says A. T. Holman, agricultural engineer at the North Carolina State college. "Some good farmers use one set of machines for a lifetime, often exceeding 25 to 30 years of service, while other men add to the junk pile each year. The difference is due to management and care. Some men never permit their expensive implements to remain in the open when not in use; others seldom house their equipment. The essential care is to keep the machinery clean, house it properly and make repairs when needed."

Implement House Needed.

Mr. Holman says that every farm needs an implement house. Such a house must have a good roof and a dry floor. It is best to build it so that all surface water, including water from the roof will drain away from the building. It is also advisable, he says, to locate the house so that the heavier equipment may be pulled in or out with a team.

Clean Before Storing.

Before storing any machine, however, it should be given a thorough cleaning and oiling. The mud and dirt should be removed to prevent deterioration, says Mr. Holman. If this is not done the agencies of rust and decay will continue even though the machines are stored. Those parts of the tools which work in the ground especially need oiling as do the bearings and exposed threads.

During idle time in winter repairs might be made so that the machines are ready when the rush of spring work comes.

Spraying With Arsenic Is Dangerous to Stock

On farms where trees are sprayed with arsenicals, the grass under the trees may become saturated with the drip and live stock losses may result from grazing on this dangerous herbage. A more common source of arsenic poisoning, however, is due to carelessness in disposing of the arsenic containers. Cattle seem to enjoy the taste of arsenic and the animals will lick the old cans or drink with relish the water accumulated in them —and usually with fatal results. Even washing the containers does not always remove the danger. It is best to destroy them.

Keep Gas Engine Busy on Various Farm Jobs

You'll have to travel quite a ways these days to find a farm that doesn't have at least one gas engine on it. The trouble is that farmers do not use their gas engines nearly as much as they should. The main use they have for them seems to be pumping, and an occastonal hook-up with a feed grinder, fanning mill or something of the kind.

If one has a gas engine, it certainly will pay to keep it busy. It isn't necessary to operate the pump all the time on a farm; there are many machines for which power can be used.

Weevils in Bin Can Be Killed With Gas

Pests Damage Stored Grain Unless Eradicated.

Weevils in stored grain will do much damage if not killed as soon as discovered. Fumigation with carbon bisulfide will dispose of them without damaging the food or germinating qualities of the grain, according to T. H. Parks, extension entomologist of the Ohio State university. Carbon bisulfide is a liquid which can be purchased in tightly sealed cans at any drug store. When released in the air it evaporates rapidly into a gas which is heavier than air. This gas, mixed with air, is inflammable, and all lights should be kept away from a grain bin which is being fumigated with it. And the person doing the fumigating should breathe as little as possible of the gas.

An important part of the fumigating process is keeping the bin sealed as tightly as possible. The work should be done on a calm day when the temperature is above 67 degrees. Eight to 15 pounds of the liquid are necessary for fumigating 1,000 cubic feet of bin space. When figuring the space it is necessary to take into account the entire bin, not just the volume of the grain. The liquid may be placed in large pans on top of the grain, or burlap bags or cotton waste, saturated with it, may be buried in the grain. The bin should remain tightly closed for at least 36 hours after the fumigant has been applied.

Proper Storage of Feed Quite Often Overlooked

Much trouble with moldy and spoiled feed could be avoided if a little care were given to the way in which it is stored. One thing that will help in this regard is the storing of feed on boards instead of directly on cement floors.

If two by fours are laid on the floor and the bags of feed piled on these in rows, there will be less danger of spoiling, there will be a better circulation of air throughout the feed, and it will be an easier matter to fight rats, for rat bait can be more easily distributed among the feed bags and cats will have better access to all parts of the feed pile in fighting rats.

Agricultural Notes

Never wash eggs, unless you are selling them to a consumer for immediate consumption.

Keep pure-bred flocks of one variety. Breed for a profitable production of high quality eggs.

• • •

If the sheep are dipped before shearing time, there is too much wool and it costs too much.

• • •

Wherever hogs are grown, the virus of hog cholera can be found. Under certain conditions, not well understood, the disease becomes virulent.

• • •

Cold, drafty floors are especially bad for hogs. Tight, unventilated houses, as well as open, drafty buildings, are also bad for pigs coming in out of the cold air to lie down and rest.

• • •

The only known means of insurance against hog cholera is the practice as a routine procedure of the vaccinating of all animals about weaning time or sooner if the disease is imminent.

POULTRY

CARE OF PULLETS INFLUENCES EGGS

Fowls Should Be Developed Gradually to Save Vigor.

Their care and management largely determines the egg production to be expected from pullets through the winter months.

To force the growth of pullets by the continuous use of a heavy protein diet is poor practice, says O. C. Ufford, extension poultry specialist of the Colorado Agricultural college. They should develop gradually so as to have body vigor for the long and continuous period of heavy egg production.

The normal growing period for breeds of the Leghorn type is from five to six months when properly managed and fed, Ufford points out. Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds require from one to two months longer for their normal growth.

A good plan of management is to hatch early and start feeding a growing mash when the chicks are three or four weeks old, and continue it until they are three or four months old. When the pullet's comb begins to turn a bright red is good indication to cut down on animal food. After this, a slower growth of the egg organs is desired. It can be secured by elimination of the milk and the meat meal in the mash.

For one to two months prior to the time it is desired to bring the pullets into production, Ufford recommends a ration as follows: Corn meal, 35 pounds; ground wheat, 50 pounds; ground barley or oats, 10 pounds, and bone meal, 5 pounds. With such a ration they will put on body weight and fat. They will go into winter egg production with greater vigor and vitality as a result.

Laying Hen Has Full, Warm and Glossy Comb

The comb of a laying hen will be large, full, glossy, and warm. It may be red in color, or it may be somewhat pale. On the other hand, the comb of a non-laying hen will be small, cold, pale and more or less scaly with a white dandruffy scurf.

In handling birds during the summer months, great care should be taken, too, not to frighten them or cause them to be overheated during the culling process. Very often poultrymen mishandle their birds during the culling operation and injure egg production more than they save by the culling. A good time to do this present production culling is after dark.

Review Poultry Flock to Discover Defects

This is a good time to resolve to strengthen the weak places, in the past season's work. Make a careful analysis of this year's poultry work and find out which phases have been profitable, and which phases have not. Were the chickens hatched too late? Did they become infected with internal parasites? Were they overcrowded in the house? Did you discontinue feeding mash during the summer and bring on an early molt and did the hens net you $1 each above all costs? Information is available on all of the above points.

Poultry Notes

Proper ventilation will help keep poultry houses cool.

• • •

Making the day longer by artificial light, so the layers can eat more, helps fill the winter egg basket.

• • •

Pullets lay best when they are confined in the house during the winter months and fed a laying mash.

• • •

Poultry houses which are too high are usually cold and drafty in winter. This may be remedied, easily and cheaply, by putting in a straw loft.

• • •

If your chickens are subject to winter sickness it may be because they aren't getting enough fresh air.

• • •

Corn should not be fed on the ear, but should be shelled. It should be fed in the litter, and may be cracked when convenient.

• • •

As green feed disappears and the garden stuff is cleaned up, the laying hens will need some other sort of green feed. Many practical poultry keepers depend upon green, leafy alfalfa during the winter months.

• • •

Remember that stock allowed to range over clean ground, away from contamination, makes the healthiest and best winter layers.

• • •

Extra space for the pullet flocks is far more important to the poultrykeeper than the reservation of the cockerels for table purposes.

• • •

Keep eggs in a cool and rather moist place. If artificial refrigeration is available, a temperature of about forty degrees Fahrenheit is preferable.

America Has Practical Broom-Corn Monopoly

Broom corn is one of those natural products, like cork, that are so perfectly adapted to the uses to which they are put that no substitute has been found or is likely to be found. It is almost exclusively an American crop. The first broom-corn market in this country was developed by the Shaker community at Watervliet, N.Y., in 1798.

In the early part of the Eighteenth century broom-corn raising and broom making were largely in the hands of the Shakers and others in New England, especially in the Connecticut valley. Later the center of the industry shifted to the Mohawk valley. Until well past the middle of the century New York and Virginia continued to be the broom country; then production started moving westward.

Obituary

LOREN MEANS

A shadow crept over the community and around Spencerville Monday morning when it was learned that one of their widely known and highly respected citizens had passed out of this life.

Loren Means, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Means, was born August 28, 1869 and departed this life October 7, 1929. He was reared to manhood on a farm in DeKalb County in which county he has lived the greater part of his life.

Loren was known for his jovial disposition and kind heart, and stood ready to render service to any and all who might seek it. It was during one of these neighborly kindnesses that he met with the accident that in the end claimed his life and robbed the home of a devoted husband and father.

At the age of twenty-two he wed Miss Flora Belle Haifley and established a home into which came three sons, Ray, Walter and Stanley.

Mr. and Mrs. Means have journeyed down the road of life together for thirty-eight years, sharing each others joys and sorrows.

In early life Loren identified himself with the church and has been a faithful member having held a responsible office in the church for many years. Not only in the church will he be missed and in the fraternal orders of which he was an active member, but in the community at large.

Surviving besides the widow and sons are three grandsons, two sisters and a host of relatives and friends.

The funeral was conducted from the Spencerville Lutheran Church Thursday afternoon, with burial in White City cemetery. Rev. G. D. Stoll, pastor, officiating. Roscoe Walter, funeral director.

FREDERICK C. KAELLNER

Frederick C. Kaellner, son of Charles and Margaret Kaellner was born in Wilmington Township near Butler, Indiana on August 22, 1872. He departed this life October 5, 1929 at the age of 57 years, 1 month and 13 days, in the city of Los Angeles, California.

At the age of 21 years he left home to work for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad out of Garrett where he spent most of his life up to eight years ago when he went to California.

Surviving are his aged mother; two sisters, Mrs. Emma Hull of near St. Joe and Mrs. Anna Briggs, of Detroit; and one brother, Herman Kaellner, of near Newville. Fifteen nieces and nephews also survive.

On May 27, 1873 he was baptized at the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Edgerton, Ohio.

He was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.

The funeral was held from the St. Mark's Lutheran Church, Sunday afternoon, with burial in Riverside cemetery. Rev. Mumma of Harlan, officiating, with local pastor, Rev. G. D. Stoll, assisting. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

GOOD NEWS

"Good News," tuneful, full of comedy and human interest, and electric with the animation and exuberance of youth, comes to the Shrine Auditorium, Fort Wayne, for three days, starting Friday night, October 18, with a matinee on Saturday. "Good News" is tuneful, with the melody of familiar air, airs with which we have become acquainted thru hearing them played and broadcast over the radio, but the catchy music takes on a new significance when it is heard in its elemental setting, backed up by the vivacity of a stageful of romping, stamping youngsters. To see and hear "Good News" is to be rejuvenated, for it is filled with the spirit and freshness of juvenile ecstacy.

A logical background has been provided for "Good News." It is all about Tait College and its football aspirations.

Besides football "Good News" also has romance, together with plenty of comedy. And besides the music there is dancing—real dancing.

Among the dozen or more song hits of the play there are five that have swept the entire world, "The Varsity Drag," "Lucky in Love," "Just Imagine," "Good News" and "The Best Things in Life are Free.

Approximately 70 people are used in the presentation. The principals include Jack McDonell, Edyth Sheldon, Kathleen Kidd, Jimmy Donnelly, Audrey Cristie, Philip Convers, Geo. Bogues, Edward J. Guhl, Irving S. Carpenter, Joan Paget, Pearl Harris, Edwin Michaels and several others. There is also a dancing chorus of forty flapper freshies. George Olsen's "Good News" band with Tick Wardell directing, is an important feature of the attraction.

CATTLE AT NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW WOULD MAKE A PARADE 4 MILES LONG.

The fiftteen hundred pure-bred dairy cattle assembled at the National Dairy show if put on parade would make a line four miles in length which would require two hours to pass a given point.

It requires 15 tons of hay a day to feed the dairy cattle assembled, over 11,000 gallons of water a day is consumed for their drinking purposes only.

The show equipment of halters and blankets for the cattle represents an investment of $16,000.

Many people who think they would enjoy running a newspaper, would have to do a lot of running when the irate readers got after them.

How the Chevrolet Car is Proved at Factory:

Chevrolet test cars at General Motors Proving Grounds have been driven upwards of five million miles, according to James M. Crawford, chief engineer of the company, who declared last week that the use of this outdoor laboratory has been one of the principal reasons for Chevrolet's consistent success. "An average of 12 cars are in constant operation, purring up steep inclines, plowing thru sand, mud and snow, driving into the teeth or heavy winds, testing speed and endurance on the track and subjecting themselves to every known performance trial," he said. These cars are not retired until they have been driven 30,000 and 50,000 miles. "After an experimental model attains this mileage it goes to the experimental laboratory to be dismanteled. Every part is inspected, all evidences of wear noted. If a detail is not as it should be, work starts immediately developing a new part or process to replace the old.
